The second criticism often urged is that tax exemption is really beneficial, because the benefit is passed on from the creditor to the debtor or borrower. In other words, it is claimed that the taxpayers in State and local governments benefit because the State and local governments pay so much less interest on their bonds. Whatever advantage is seemingly derived by the wealthy investor really, so it is alleged, accrues to the ordinary taxpayer.

A FALLACIOUS ARGUMENT.

This widespread argument is fallacious for the same reason as that just advanced above. While the State and local governments were able at one time to sell their bonds at a higher price because of exemption from State and local taxes, that advantage was gradually dissipated as the other State and local governments did the same. Every bond broker will tell us that this special advantage to the State and local bonds gradually disappeared. The same is true at present. The State and local issues always enjoy certain advantages due to the security of the principal and to other reasons. This advantage, measured in terms of interest rates, has ranged in the past from one-half per cent to 1 per cent.

The situation is just about the same to-day. Barring the spurt in 1919, when the States and locals first enjoyed the exemption from suddenly increased surtaxes of the Federal Government, the situation has gradually returned to normal.

CANADA TAXES BONDS.

To-day, in fact, if we compare the premiums on the State and local bonds in the United States with premiums on the similar classes of bonds in Canada we find the range about the same, despite the fact that the Canadian bonds enjoy no similar privilege of tax exemption. It is clear, therefore, that there is a fallacy of the current contention that tax exemption affords a great advantage to the public. The advantages are exaggerated; the objections can not be exaggerated.

V.

WHAT IS THE SOLUTION?

We ask, in conclusion, why should the present system be perpetuated? Some of our States and cities still cling to the fallacious opinions set forth above. But even if the contentions were true in fact, they would be indefensible in principle. If the State and local bonds were subject to tax in the same way as other property, including Federal bonds, they would suffer no disadvantage. The States, indeed, have the right to demand that the Federal Government impose no exclusive or differential burden on them. That was the foundation of the decision of the Supreme Court, which said that the imposition of an unequal tax on the States might subject them to a disadvantage, and, by impairing State credit, attack their sovereignty. To permit the Nation to impose a special tax on the agencies of State government is one thing; to ask the Nation to confer a special privilege and advantage on the States is quite another matter.

If the Federal Government should decide after 1926 to tax its own bonds, is there any reason for according a special privilege to the State and local government bonds? Is there anything sacrosanct about State and local credit as compared to Federal credit? The States may have the right to demand of the Federal Government that they be not subjected to disadvantage—they have no right to ask for a special privilege. Tax exemption in theory, at least, affords them a special privilege. As a matter of fact, as we have seen, the advantage is much slighter than they think.

STATES WOULD GAIN.

Moreover, it must not be forgotten that with the change now taking place in the State and local fiscal systems even this slight advantage will be far more than outweighed. Twelve States now have an income tax, and many others are discussing it. Where the State income taxes are unable to reach the holders of Federal and other State bonds the States will stand to lose far more in the deficit of revenue than the little they gain by partial capitalization of the tax and by the slightly increased price at which they are able to market the securities.

STATES ARE LOSERS.

With every year the situation in the States will become more and more analogous to the situation in the Federal Government. Not only will they lose absolutely in dollars and cents, but the growing inequality between social classes, as between the rich and the moderately wealthy in town and county, will be continually accentuated.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT NEEDED.

What we need is a constitutional amendment providing reciprocity as between States and Nation. The Nation should have the right to subject State and local bonds to the same tax as it assesses on its own bonds; the State and local governments should have the right to subject Federal bonds to the same burdens as they impose on their own bonds. This is no attack on the sovereignty of the States. It simply removes an unjust and originally unintended privilege. And when the people of the States come to understand the problem they will learn that the privilege really amounts to very little, and that is, moreover, purchased at the cost of a grievous inequality among social classes. In the long run their selfishness will not avail them; they will lose, rather than gain, by the continued tax exemption.

FISCAL EQUALITY REQUIRED.

Equality between State and Nation; equality between local and Federal bonds; equality between economic classes; equality between earned and unearned income; equality between rich and poor—that is the equality which we desire to achieve. The problem of tax exemption is the problem of fiscal equality; it is the problem of social justice.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this bill of a controversial nature and I therefore see no necessity for indulging in any argument concerning it, especially in general debate. If occasion should arise I may have something to say with reference to some of its provisions when it is read for amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I was detained in a committee meeting and did not hear the general debate so far. Do I understand that this bill carries ample funds to enable the Treasury to pay to citizens of the country who have been overtaxed, refunds due for many months, which the Treasury has been telling them they can not pay because Congress fails to provide funds with which to pay?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. WINGO. I have several constituents who have been put off, in one instance for several months, blaming Congress, because it would not appropriate the money, at the same time that the administration was making its plea of economy and keeping down expenditures in appropriations. Of course, the election is over, and I presume that will be done now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The bill carries $42,430,000 for that purpose, and it is stated that that sum, with what is appropriated for the next fiscal year in the regular supply bill, is amply sufficient to meet the claims that have been adjudicated and will be adjudicated between now and the end of the year.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, the point I want to make is this: I want to condemn the practice which was indulged in prior to the last campaign of holding down the appropriations so as to make a good showing when at the same time the Treasury was telling the taxpayer, whose money is in the Treasury, that they could not pay them because Congress had not appropriated the money.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is justified in that criticism. This bill carries an appropriation of $28,253,950.19 by way of deficiency for 1923, and undoubtedly succeeding appropriation bills will carry much larger sums, and I may say there appears in this hearing a statement from one of those who appeared before the committee——

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will indulge me until I answer this inquiry. There appears in the hearings a statement from the representative of the Department of Justice, in explanation of a statement that in another deficiency bill, which must be passed later in this session, the sum of $250,000 to $350,000 would be required for a particular purpose, that at the time the former appropriation was asked it was stated and agreed to by the chairman of the subcommittee that the appropriation which was made would not be sufficient for the fiscal year.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman speaks of the fiscal year 1923. The point I am interested in is in regard to payments made by citizens on taxes erroneously collected from them for past years and were found to be due to such citizens in the fiscal year that ended last June 30. Will this take care of those?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; that will be taken care of, so the representative of the Treasury Department stated; the committee did not reduce the estimate submitted in any way.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. According to a press dispatch recently the Surgeon General of the Public Health Office, Doctor Cumming, had made a statement that there was some shortage of 150 beds in the National Leprosarium at Carrville, La.; in other words, 150 lepers can not be accommodated. I would like to know if the Committee on Appropriations received such a report and if there is any effort being made to take care of all the lepers?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That matter was not brought to the attention of the committee in the consideration of this appropriation bill. There was no estimate submitted. It may be brought to the attention of the committee later on when the general deficiency bill is taken up; but so far as the committee is concerned, as a committee it has no official knowledge of the fact stated by the gentleman. I am sure that the entire committee has shown from the appropriations heretofore made that it has been anxious to appropriate every dollar that is necessary in order to take care of the lepers at this leprosarium.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement in his own time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. I feel that the committee appreciates the duty and the necessity of taking care of these lepers not only because they are afflicted with a terrible disease that possibly might be cured if they are taken care of in time but on account of the public, who may contract the disease from them if they are permitted to go at large and are not taken care of in some institution. I hope when this matter is brought to the attention of the committee they will consider it and make the necessary appropriations to take care of them all the time in the future.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Speaking for myself, personally, I will say to the gentleman, I am heartily in favor of adequate appropriations for that purpose, and I feel sure that when the matter is brought to the attention of the committee in the way of a request for an appropriation, if one be necessary, that the committee will give it favorable consideration.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Some years ago these refunds for excess payment of taxes were made out of permanent indefinite appropriations. Under that condition the department seldom had occasion to say to a taxpayer that he must wait until Congress made an appropriation to make the repayment. About five or six years ago the present method was introduced of making annual appropriations to pay these refunds. From year to year and from time to time we have this statement from the department—that no funds are available for the payment of the amount allowed. In addition to that error or that objectionable feature, has occurred this fact. Under this plan duplicate payments have been made in large amounts——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Under which plan?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Under the plan now in force. Men have received warrants in payment of funds that they had already been given allowances in their subsequent payments and returned the warrants to the department, saying that they were not entitled to double payment. On one day over $100,000 of such duplicate warrants were on the desks in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I do not see how that could happen under this method to any greater extent than under the old method.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. There was a method by which it happened. Now right there, that happened through the inefficiency and negligence of the very men who are operating the scheme now.

A large number of these law clerks and a large number of the boards to which reference was made a few minutes ago secured their appointments to those positions from men who are now on the outside and practicing before the department and prosecuting these claims for refunds. In the course of the debate I shall be very much gratified if the gentleman or someone else on his behalf or on behalf of the committee will bring out an explanation to show how we are to correct these mistakes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the statement made by the gentleman is the very best argument in favor of the present plan of procedure.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Then the gentleman is in favor of a plan that will compel the department to say to the taxpayer that Congress is in fault in his failure to get the money back for the excess payment of taxes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Exactly so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am in favor of Congress keeping its hand on all appropriations.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Oh, it had its hand on them before, and no duplicate payments amounting to any such sum as $100,000 in one bunch ever appeared.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am unwilling to see the Government return to the old system under which there was left at the disposal of the executive departments immense sums of money to be expended without the opportunity on the part of Congress to know just how much was being expended and in what way.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I know, because reports were made, and I have signed them again and again.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that in the matter of permanent indefinite appropriations, which have amounted to many hundreds of millions of dollars, there is no supervision ever exercised by Congress except the receipt of reports that are submitted from time to time by the departments.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How do you pay the interest on the public debt now?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a fixed, definite sum.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. And the other was fixed by clerks in the department as it would be fixed in court.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; it is fixed, as the gentleman says, by some law clerk in the department; and it seems to me that Congress, which is the governmental body responsible to the people for the appropriations and expenditures, should retain to itself the right to say what money shall be appropriated and expended.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. You could not tell any more about it under the present plan than under the other plan.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There can not be any such objection made if Congress will make these appropriations from time to time as they are called for. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] a moment ago stated that there was some criticism and that the Treasury Department was telling taxpayers who were entitled to refund of taxes that they could not be paid promptly because Congress had not made the appropriation. I submit that the Treasury Department, whenever it becomes apparent that money is due, should submit an estimate so that it can be carried in a deficiency appropriation bill, and Congress has never failed to appropriate the money when these estimates are made.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Congress meets only at certain times in the year, and the taxpayers must wait for their money.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Congress has been practically in session nearly all the year round of late years. The gentleman speaks in favor of an indefinite appropriation.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I am not speaking so much in favor of an indefinite appropriation as I am of the evils of the present method.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The amount of refunds for the past five years are as follows: In 1917 they were $887,000, in round numbers; in 1918 they were more than $2,000,000; in 1919 they were $8,000,000; in 1920 they were more than $14,000,000; in 1921 they were more than $28,000,000; and in 1922 they are more than $48,000,000.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I submit that with respect to the immense sums of money necessary to make these refunds, passed upon, as the gentleman says, by officials in the Treasury Department, involving thousands and thousands of claims, Congress ought to have some supervision over the amount of money appropriated. Every Member of Congress, I know, is anxious to see these refunds promptly made, because when a taxpayer makes an overpayment and it is duly and properly ascertained he is entitled to a return of his money just as quickly as it can be received; but I am not in favor of the old, antiquated, unbusinesslike system of placing large and indefinite appropriations at the disposal of the executive departments without any supervision on the part of Congress.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How much supervision is there now? At this point I wish to say that the larger amounts of refunds in one year as compared with another year will grow out of new legislation very largely. Why? Because that legislation must be construed by the department and by the courts, and many times large sums of money will be paid back under a departmental construction that will be taken out by a decision of the court. Take as an illustration the war revenue act of 1898, passed during the war with Spain. About $23,000,000 were paid in as legacy taxes alone. Nearly $20,000,000 of that was refunded under the decisions of the courts.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true in this case.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Whenever you have this new legislation you have new requirements to meet.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is entering a new field when he speaks of new legislation.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. We had new legislation in 1921, and we had new legislation in 1913. Thus it comes and thus it goes, and whenever Congress passes a new law levying taxes in a new form you are bound to have larger refunds in customs and internal revenue than you will after the department and the courts shall have applied those laws in accordance with permanent rules and practice.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And that is another justification, it seems to me, for the present method of making direct appropriations from time to time to cover these refunds, because, I submit to the gentleman, that neither Congress nor the public will ever know exactly what is being spent in the way of refunds unless Congress makes direct appropriations.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Congress could have known before just as well as now. The point of objection is that this method delays; that it multiplies details. This method has brought on duplication of over $100,000 in one day, as I have cited already.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course, Mr. Chairman, it is always possible to go to the department or to the reports to ascertain what amount has been expended for this purpose or any other purpose, but I think it is clear to every Member of Congress that as to many details of the Government's money transactions, many details as to expenditures made by the Government, the public is not informed and Congress is not informed as to the amount of money being paid for any particular purpose, and will not be unless specific appropriations are made. It is for that reason that I have always consistently opposed the old plan of having immense, indefinite appropriations for various purposes placed at the disposal of executives and their subordinates, rather than making specific appropriations from year to year.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I am going to ask, in view of the fact that the Treasury reports are practically the only records that are considered confidential or secret, does not the gentleman believe that if these records were made public there would be a better administration of the Treasury Department in the Internal Revenue Bureau?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is possibly true, although——

Mr. FREAR. Would it not avoid some of these questionable refunds that have been referred to here to-day?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is possibly true, but I can understand that there might be some objection to making public some of the records of the intimate business affairs of income-tax payers, in so far as they relate to incomes for the various years.

Mr. FREAR. Does not the gentleman believe this is the only place where these records are held secret? States to-day are making their records public. All the local tax officers have public records. Why should the Government hold these records secret at the application of corporations that do not care to have their own matters disclosed? Is not the public service of more importance?

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman know whether State income-tax returns in States like New York and other States where they have these returns are public records open to the public generally or not?

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will permit me to answer that, I know there is a movement in one State with which I am quite familiar where they expect the present legislature to make them public records.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman does not know of any State which has done so up to this time?

Mr. FREAR. I have not made any inquiry as to the other States.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, when I arose I did not expect to consume any time. As stated, this bill carries more than $74,000,000. Of that amount $28,253,950.19 is by way of deficiency appropriations for the present fiscal year 1923. If the total authorization for good roads for this year, amounting to $50,000,000, had been appropriated, this bill would carry $25,000,000 more for the present year; but the committee has inserted a provision in this bill, which has my hearty approval, making available unexpended sums in the Treasury now to the credit of the various States, without in any way interfering with or militating against any State in the matter of its proper apportionment of road funds.

This bill also carries $81,000 for the payment of salaries of district judges. Six thousand dollars of that amount is for the payment of an additional judge appointed in Hawaii and $75,000 for the payment of the salaries of the 24 judges who were authorized by the act passed September 14, 1922. I have a very clear recollection that when that bill was before Congress those who advocated it insisted upon the importance of its immediate passage. I think all the Members of the Congress were satisfied that additional judges were needed in some sections, although there was a sharp controversy as to whether or not there was necessity for the full number of 24 finally provided in the law. It was then insisted that the dockets of the various courts of the country were badly congested. The hearings disclose that at the close of the last fiscal year, on June 30, 1922, there were 172,000 cases upon the dockets of the courts of the country, as compared with something like 142,000 one year before and 118,000 the year before that. In other words, as was stated, there is an increase, due to the national prohibition act and other causes, of something like 20 or 25 per cent in the litigation in the Federal courts of the country. Only three or four judges—possibly four—have been appointed under this act, although four or five months have elapsed. I simply want to express the hope that the political exigencies will permit the President to make these appointments very soon, so that these cases may be disposed of and litigants secure their rights in the courts. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time, 15 minutes, to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, a bill introduced by me to-day provides for soldiers' compensation along the lines of the bill passed by Congress, but vetoed by the President, last session. This bill undertakes to meet the objections raised by the President and provides a means for financing the measure that ought to receive the support of every Member who favors a compensation bill. It should be pressed for passage early next session.

The only material difference in the bill now offered and that vetoed by the President relates to the loaning privilege under Title V, which is increased from 50 per cent of the loan basis in the old bill to 70 per cent. The Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized to call in, pay, and cancel any loan or certificate in his discretion. Also, it eliminates the irrigation scheme, which was not intended to benefit veterans, who can find over a million acres of fertile abandoned farm lands now available. A financing provision is also attached that ought to be acceptable.

I will not offer any argument in favor of a compensation bill beyond saying that in 1917, for the first time in all history, Congress drafted into military service every able-bodied man of military age and sent them into camps or abroad in order to fight our battles. The great majority of these drafted men were submitted to hardships, privations, and often bodily danger for a compensation around $30 per month. Those who stayed home as a rule sacrificed little proportionately, and thousands profited inordinately by the war.

WHY QUIBBLE AND HAGGLE AND PROTEST?

Ours, the richest Government and one of the few that imposed the draft, is practically the only government that has quibbled, haggled, and protested against giving extra compensation to its veterans. Congress has done its full part toward extending some small pay, not as compensation but to evidence the Nation's appreciation of sacrifice by the few who went to war for the many who stayed. When a soldier's compensation bill was in committee last year notice was served on the committee in the name of Secretary Mellon and the President that the administration did not favor the bill and that any measure not accompanied by a financing provision would be vetoed. The railway compensation bill, the canceled war contract bill, all past pension bills, and, in fact, every bill since the organization of this Government down to the recent ship subsidy bill failed to provide any financing plan so far as I can remember; but both House and Senate committees in an effort to comply with administration views waived their constitutional rights and finally agreed on a tentative financing plan that included nominal stamp taxes on stock transfers, a small tax on oil, a small tax on undistributed corporation taxes, and other items. Its submission to the Executive brought response by letter that the plan was rejected, and a sales tax was the only plan that would meet Executive approval.

Pursuant to its constitutional right and duty, Congress passed the soldiers' compensation bill, according to usual precedents, without a definite financing plan other than making it a charge on obligations of foreign governments. Acting on his constitutional rights, the President vetoed the bill, which lacked only four votes in the Senate from becoming law.

DID LAFAYETTE "COMMERCIALIZE PATRIOTISM?" WHO SAYS SO?

Secretary Mellon, while acting within his rights, has been the most effective opponent of any soldiers' compensation law to date. A comparison, however, is interesting. In the north front of the Treasury, I understand, is a framed draft for $200,000 paid to Lafayette by the Treasurer of the United States for services and sacrifices in the War of the Revolution. Proposed payment of $1 per day to World War veterans now evokes from influential Wall Street concerns a storm against "commercializing patriotism" from concerns that during the war capitalized patriotism by commercializing war for their own profit. Lafayette's $200,000 draft from the young American Government was a princely gift then, because it represented one thousand times what it does to-day, while the reported wealth of the present custodian of the canceled draft, Mr. Mellon, reaches over one thousand times Lafayette's bonus. History also records another change in wealth's standards when Bache, the New York broker, asserts his Wall Street colleagues now spend 11 months of the year studying how to avoid their taxes. Such facts furnish food for thought when discussing the merits of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. Not until I finish my statement, and then I will be glad to yield.

Without conceding Congress is required to present any accompanying financing plan, I have endeavored to meet the Executive proposal to the extent of presenting a definite, logical, and just method of financing the soldiers' bill. Last session, yielding to propaganda, Congress repealed the excess-profits tax due to representations that such tax was a hindrance to business and that business, big and little, was skirmishing along on thin ice. Practically every tax expert not employed by business interests to be affected conceded the tax was just in principle, although frequently evaded.

Development of enormous surpluses accumulated throughout the past 10 years, since the beginning of the European war, have disclosed that a handful in number of great companies after paying excess profits and all other taxes, and in many cases generous annual cash dividends, also have accumulated $2,000,000,000 in excess profits that, due to a teeter-totter 5 to 4 decision of the Supreme Court, will escape all personal taxes and also avoid any excess-profits tax for 1922. A law was passed in 1921 which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to impose tax penalties of 25 per cent on accumulated surpluses, which he was strongly urged to do in correspondence found in the RECORD of November 28 last. Although surpluses disclosed were divided up into stock dividends, reaching in a single case as high as 16,000 per cent based on capitalization as shown in the RECORD of December 20 last, the penalty clause has been practically ignored by the department, while the American consumers of oil, for illustration, have contributed these profits, due to extortionate prices sought to be justified by "business needs" for exploiting foreign countries in certain cases.

WHY NOT MAKE PROFITS PAY THE BONUS?

The enormous profits with reasonable exemptions, in all fairness, should be made to contribute liberally to the veterans' compensation bill, because the great interests involved which control many banks, newspapers, and other propaganda agencies were loudest in their insistence on the war and on conscription of men to protect the country and incidentally to save their own businesses from German indemnities.

It seems just and right that the excess-profits tax law repealed in 1921 should be reenacted to cover 1921 and ensuing years, and that the enormous profits which have been set aside as "surplus" should pay some individual tax as would be done if distributed in cash dividends. My plan to finance the bill seeks to meet that situation.

For the first time in history a disclosure has occurred of the unprecedented profits gathered in by melon-cutting corporations. During 1922 I learn the Federal Trade Commission reports that 328 corporations have released surpluses by the stock-dividend plan reaching $2,149,151,425. These profits collected from the public were over all payments after running expenses, for taxes, and for profits distributed as cash dividends. They were excess profits made by the corporation covering different periods, and, according to repeated press reports, were made to avoid payment of taxes. I submit they should pay taxes on such profits to finance the bonus bill.

No man can explain these off-year results, due to a single issue, for many causes contributed in scrapping the phenomenal House Republican majority of 169 in 1920 to a bare majority of 16 in 1922; but every man of discernment knows that while the soldiers' bonus bill was opposed by big business in Wall Street in 1921, it was popular in Sullivan Street and on the Bowery, and, in fact, all over New York State and throughout the country. It is also reasonably certain that while great business interests, familiarly classed as "Wall Street," were a unit in securing the repeal of the excess-profits tax in 1921, a great majority of the people were opposed to its repeal and are in favor of its reenactment into law without delay because of unconscionable net profits of many corporations, reaching 775 per cent in 10 years by one company and others of equal amount recently disclosed by the press.

A large majority of the House and Senate, as evidenced by the vote in each body, rejects the sales tax as a vicious proposition that taxes farmers, laborers, and millionaires alike on necessities, and it was overwhelmingly defeated in a Republican Congress while the soldiers' bonus bill was as overwhelmingly carried in both branches of Congress.

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO.

The last soldiers' bill passed the House over the President's veto by a vote of 258 to 54 and in the Senate by a vote of 44 to 28, lacking only 4 votes of passing over the presidential veto. As interpreted by the elections, the country wants the soldiers' bonus bill passed, and there is also a general belief to-day that we have been too tender with excess profits and profiteers under the plea of helping business. Those who have harkened to the voice of the Wall Street Journal and the New York Comic Commercial, with Secretary Mellon's Pittsburgh paper and others scattered throughout the country controlled by large business interests to be affected, are now aware that the sentiment of these papers is not that of the country.

On more than one occasion I have sought to help prevent what was believed to be a grave mistake in certain legislation presented to the House, including drastic reduction in the surtaxes, the retroactive repeal of the excess-profits tax, and the passage of a general-sales tax.

A proposed tax on undistributed profits will place funds in the Treasury with which to finance the soldiers' bill, leaving an ample surplus over and above immediate demands that may be used to mature the claims of the veterans under the bill. These taxes are not, properly speaking, double taxes, because the excess-profits tax is taken from the corporation after certain exemptions, including 8 per cent net profits, are deducted. If the corporation instead of distributing its surplus profits thereafter decides to lay it by in order to avoid personal taxes or uses it for additional development, thereby avoiding personal-income taxes, then such action is covered by the undistributed profits tax proposal offered with the bill.

Corporations that have exhausted ready cash may have to borrow to pay taxes but hundreds of thousands of farmers and home owners who are doing the same can show this is a common experience with those who do not clip coupons or cut juicy stock dividends.

THE COUNTRY NEEDS THE MONEY AND CAN USE THE SURPLUS TAX.

The country is facing a debt to-day amounting approximately to $23,000,000,000, and great pressure is being brought to compel cancellation of some of the foreign debts so that if successful no offset will help liquidate the enormous tax burden that will be placed upon the people of the country. It is doubtful if any man can point out any immediate material reduction in our debt at a time when the Treasury Department is engaged in liberal tax refunds estimated to reach $500,000,000 or possibly more in the near future. Unless we wake up from our easy-going policy, a day of retribution swift and certain will follow.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. As soon as I finish my statement I will be glad to yield. Mr. Chairman, I am offering a plain proposition that I believe the country will approve just as certain as it disapproved the passage of any consumption tax and the veto of the soldiers' bonus bill. Any man must be blind who fails to know that during the war and ever since the war a few favored corporations have exacted unconscionable profits from the people. Their profits were not known until the recent exposure of stock-dividend distributions made in order to avoid personal-income taxes.

The only excuse for protecting such extortionate profits is that these great trust companies assert they will refuse to do business unless permitted to charge profits without limit, while stockholders are protected by the Supreme Court stock-dividend decision and by tax-free securities which offer avenues for tax evasions. No sensible man believes business will close up shop unless permitted to profiteer untrammeled. If any company decides to do so, that act will bring its own reward or penalty.

Every income-tax payer who pays his full tax to-day without evasion resents the stock-dividend decision and other methods of tax escape not afforded with equal justice to him. Every man who has paid two prices for gasoline during the last 10 years resents the extortionate profits taken from him by the hand of might.

The cry of "soaking the rich" can no longer confuse the issue so as to drown out cries of fair play, stop price extortion, and stop tax dodging. The world asks that we get a little nearer the golden rule rather than selfishly and graspingly to seize all within reach because the power exists to grab and to hold.

Something like $200,000,000 annually is needed, according to Treasury experts, to cover the charge of the soldiers' bonus bill during the 20 years required to mature certificates. Reenactment of the excess profits tax which I have proposed as a part of the bill ought to average far more than that amount, depending upon the price extortion still practiced. In addition, large receipts should be had from the retroactive graded tax on undistributed profits beginning with the year 1917, which is made a part of the bill.

If the President will call a special session, like the ship subsidy session, to put through the soldiers' bonus bill with the accompanying tax measures to finance same, I believe it will meet with the approval of four-fifths of the people of the country, with the active opposition of less than 5 per cent. Let us act not as a matter of political expediency but in justice to those who have been shabbily treated by the wealthiest country in the world.

EVEN POLITICAL PLATFORMS ARE AGREED.

Last month a conference met in Cleveland to advance progressive political action. Five hundred delegates from practically every State in the Union claiming to represent millions of voters in farm and labor organizations there issued a call to Congress based on overwhelming political changes they contributed to bring about at the recent election. One of the six planks adopted by that conference favors—

(5) The payment of a soldiers' bonus by restoring the tax on excess profits. The measure here submitted includes that plank, and as restoration of the excess-profits tax only reaches the year 1922, an additional tax on undistributed profits is proposed with which to reach enormous profits not covered by the excess-profits tax, thereby equalizing tax burdens by financing the bill through such profits.

I will now be glad to answer the gentlemen who desire to interrogate me, if able to do so.

Mr. MILLS. I want to get the gentleman's proposition clearly in my mind. As I understand it, under the gentleman's plan if a corporation had put a certain percentage of its earnings back into plant development and addition to its productive capacity, and it did not have liquid assets, the gentleman through a retroactive tax on surplus would either compel that corporation to sell its plant for the payment of taxes or borrow money with which to pay them?

Mr. FREAR. I would compel them to do what every man is compelled to do to-day who has to borrow or raise money to pay his taxes. If the corporation has used the profits contributed by the people through price exactions for the purpose of advancing their own business, however invested, I would say then they can readily step into any business place and get their tax money on the increased security by borrowing the same as any private individual has to do. If distributed as a cash dividend, the money would have gone into the payment of personal income taxes where it would have been subject to a surtax. That has been avoided by the stock-dividend route, but I ask to reach the profit tax when first the profit is declared.

Mr. MILLS. But if instead of keeping their profits in cash they build a new factory, the gentleman would compel them to sell the factory to pay the tax?

Mr. FREAR. Not at all; but I would compel them to borrow money on their new factory to pay the tax. If built with surplus profits, why should it not pay a tax on those profits? Or, as I said to the Secretary of the Treasury the other day, "If I were in your position, Mr. Secretary, I would not permit the Standard Oil Co. to make 77½ per cent profit annually and pay to its stockholders 22 per cent cash dividend and thereafter permit to go free from any 25 per cent penalty tax a 400 per cent dividend, for the purpose of developing Mesopotamia oil fields. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Or, in other words, if the cattleman pays no income tax, but uses all his profits every year to buy additional cattle and additional lands he ought to pay the tax; even if he has to borrow the money, or sell some property?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; he pays the tax, or should pay the tax, but the Standard Oil Co. and other companies who put their profits back in their business do not.

Mr. MILLS. Now the gentleman goes further. If any individual uses money made in business to buy new cattle the gentleman proposes to make him pay the tax.

Mr. FREAR. No. I am asking that corporate surpluses should not be merged into stock dividends so as to reach the surtax. The man in the cattle business in Texas pays the surtax if he makes profits, and why should not John D. Rockefeller, for instance, pay as well as every other individual?

Mr. BLANTON. What is sauce for the goose ought to be sauce for the gander.

Mr. MILLS. We are not discussing that; we are discussing taxing the surplus. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Will he explain to me how by the declaration of a stock dividend an individual stockholder avoids income taxes.

Mr. FREAR. I can not discuss a technical tax matter in the five minutes remaining of my time. If the gentleman will take the four dissenting opinions in the Macomber case he will find how completely they cover the attempt to avoid taxes through the stock-dividend route. That is as far as the individual surtax is concerned.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman explain to me——

Mr. FREAR. I have no time for explanation when you can read the dissenting opinions in the Macomber case that cover the question completely.

Mr. MILLS. I have read them and I have read the gentleman's speeches and I can not find out——

Mr. FREAR. I can not yield to the gentleman for a speech. If you will give me half an hour I will try and explain it to you if you do not understand.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman had five times a half an hour he could not explain how the——

Mr. FREAR. I can explain it, but the gentleman does not listen; he looks through colored spectacles, and he always has in this House and always will. The gentleman is a fine gentleman personally, but I simply disagree with him and ever expect to on the subject of taxing wealth according to its ability to pay.

Mr. Chairman, a word further regarding the merits of this tax proposal contained in the bonus bill attached to these remarks.

What more preposterous economic situation can be presented than that shown to-day by Standard Oil in Senate committee hearings. It fixes prices on oil for the country without any relation to production, reasonable profits, or any other matter ordinarily affecting trade. On its own showing, one subsidiary company has made $775,000,000 in net profits during the past 10 years, of which amount above taxes $220,000,000, or 22 per cent, annually was distributed among its fortunate stockholders and $400,000,000, or 40 per cent, additional annual average net profits are laid away in cash or in increased investments or in development of oil fields from California to Mesopotamia or in some other form. When income taxes are assessed on its $400,000,000 stock dividends it responds that five Justices of the Supreme Court have held its profits when put in stock dividends are not taxable.

WHAT GOOD JUDGES SAY OF THAT DECISION.

To this unjust decision made in violation of the spirit of the sixteenth constitutional amendment, four Justices dissented with two memorable statements:

> First, the known purpose of this (sixteenth) amendment was to get rid of nice questions as to what might be direct taxes and I can not doubt that most people not lawyers would suppose when they voted for it that they put the question like the present at rest. I am of the opinion that the amendment (sixteenth) justifies the tax.

Is not that statement of the judges unanswerable?

What answer, I submit, will stand against this second proposition quoted from the dissenting opinion of another judge in the same decision, who says:

> If stock dividends representing profits are held exempt from taxation under the sixteenth amendment the owners of the most successful businesses in America will be able to escape taxation on a large part of what is actually their income. So far as their profits are represented by stock received as dividends they will pay these taxes not upon their income but upon the income of their income. That such result was intended by the people of the United States when adopting the sixteenth amendment is inconceivable. Our sole duty is to ascertain their interest as therein expressed.

That is the opinion the gentleman from New York has read but does not understand.

In the face of the mandate of the people as expressed in the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution on the income tax, in the face of a previous 5 to 4 teeter-totter decision of the same court that made the submission of the amendment to the people necessary, an amendment later disregarded by five judges according to the opinion of the other four judges, in the face of a direct law passed by Congress pursuant to the will of the people expressed in the sixteenth amendment, five judges by hair-splitting reasoning overthrew the will of the people and of the Congress and allowed successful businesses, like Standard Oil in that case, to accumulate $2,000,000,000 in undistributed surpluses that will pay no tax as corporation profits or as individual surtax. This decision, rendered some three years ago by one deciding justice against the will of the people, the will of Congress, and in favor of these big businesses is followed by the Secretary of the Treasury's refusal to impose 25 per cent penalty provided by statute. He could not well do so, as his own oil company, Gulf Oil, led the stock-dividend race with a 200 per cent tax-free stock dividend; but why, I ask, should not Congress carry out the expressed will of the people in collecting this tax before the stock dividend is declared? As the dissenting justice said: "Let us get rid of nice questions" where it is "inconceivable" the people intended to exempt these profits from taxes.

THE TAX CAN BE COLLECTED IF CONGRESS ACTS.

We are asked by men of great wealth on this floor and by pamphlets placed on our desks by the Standard Oil Co., and by pamphlets issued by the National City Bank, of New York, and by every other big business to be affected, how the tax can be collected if the untaxed surplus is invested in the property. In other words, after the untaxed loot has been hidden behind invested profits how can it be reached? I have stated the "how" and we know the "why." It is for Congress to do its part by enacting the law.

Then the obvious answer is the same as the taxgatherer reaches with every other tax defaulter who fails to pay his tax. If he can not find the cash, he borrows the money to pay the tax, and thousands of homes and a hundred thousand farms are being sold for taxes this year because the owners are in default. Why not make the profiteer pay the same as the humbler citizen? And if it can not borrow on the enormous surplus profits retained, then sell part of its holdings.

One of the modern crimes against competition, against the rights of the little fellow in business, and against the vast army of consumers is the present stock-dividend practice carried to the nth degree. It enables the big fellow without distributing profits to gobble up the little fellow with those profits until, like Standard Oil or United States Steel, the prices are fixed by the great monopoly that destroys competition and abides by no economic law. Accepting the situation, why not make these unwarranted if not unlawful practices pay the cost of a soldiers' bonus bill?

It is said the corporations affected will immediately flee to the Supreme Court for their haven, based on the stock-dividend decision, if this retroactive tax on undistributed profits for the years 1917 to 1922 is pressed for passage.

In an effort to meet that situation I have provided in the bill that no part of the act shall be held invalid if more than one justice of the court dissents from the opinion.

The Constitution provides, Article III, "The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make." In view of some appointments and some recent proffered appointments for the highest judicial position in the country, Congress, representing the people, has a right and possibly a duty to protect their will, particularly as expressed in the sixteenth amendment or even through the act of Congress under its constitutional power.

If one member of the Supreme Court can set aside constitutionally enacted State or Federal law, as is constantly done under present practices, what protection can be had against such an anomalous situation? The people who enacted the sixteenth amendment can enact another amendment that will prevent any one justice from setting aside an act of Congress and the constitutionally expressed will of the people. That is not the alternative and the cure provided by the Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, I have sought briefly to present to your attention a soldiers' compensation bill that ought to pass, and a tax proposal is attached that will raise over a billion dollars, according to unofficial estimates, or far more than enough to pay the bill and to provide a sinking fund.

The bill is attached hereto, with the tax features appearing in the latter part. The excess-profits tax for 1922 and the tax on undistributed profits from 1917 are provisions that invite the support of every former opponent of the bill on the ground that it had no self-financing scheme to prevent a heavy draft on the Treasury. This bill will place $2 in the Treasury for every dollar taken out.

The bill H. R. 13659 introduced to-day is the same as H. R. 10874, this session, with slight changes. The following covers the parts of the bill that materially differ from the bill that passed Congress but was vetoed.

The bill follows:

LOAN PRIVILEGES BEFORE JANUARY 1, 1927.

SEC. 502. (a) A loan may be made to any veteran holding a certificate prior to January 1, 1927, upon his adjusted service certificate only in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(b) Any national bank, or any bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia (hereinafter in this section called "bank"), is authorized to loan to any veteran upon his promissory note secured by his adjusted service certificate (with or without the consent of the beneficiary thereof) any amount not in excess of 70 per cent of the loan basis (as defined in subdivision (f) of this section) of the certificate, such loan to mature on or before December 31, 1926. The rate of interest charged upon the loan by the bank shall not exceed, by more than 2 per cent per annum, the rate charged at the date of the loan for the discount of commercial paper under section 13 of the Federal reserve act, by the Federal reserve bank for the Federal reserve district in which the bank is located. Any bank holding a note for a loan under this section, secured by a certificate (whether the bank originally making the loan or a bank to which the note and certificate have been transferred) may sell the note to, or discount or rediscount it with, any bank authorized to make a loan to a veteran under this section, and transfer the certificate to such bank. In case the note is sold the bank making the sale shall promptly notify the veteran.

(c) If the veteran does not pay the principal and interest of the loan within six months after its maturity (or on or before December 31, 1926, if the loan matures on or after June 30, 1926), the bank holding the note and certificate shall present them to the Secretary of the Treasury not earlier than August 31, 1926, and not later than January 15, 1927. The Secretary shall thereupon cancel the note and pay to the bank the amount of the unpaid principal due it, and the unpaid interest accrued, at the rate fixed in the note, up to the date of the check issued to the bank. The Secretary shall restore the certificate to the veteran at any time prior to its maturity, upon receipt from him of (1) the amount paid by the United States to the bank in cancellation of his note, and (2) interest on such amount from the time of such payment to the date of such receipt at 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually.

(d) If the veteran dies before the maturity of the loan the amount of the unpaid principal and the unpaid interest accrued up to the date of his death shall be immediately due and payable. In such case, or if the veteran dies on the day the loan matures or within six months thereafter, or, in case the loan matures on or after June 30, 1926, if he dies on or after the day the loan matures but before January 1, 1927, the bank holding the note and certificate shall, upon notice of the death, present them to the Secretary who shall thereupon cancel the note (but not the certificate) and pay to the bank, in full satisfaction of its claim, the amount of the unpaid principal and unpaid interest, at the rate fixed in the note, accrued up to the date of the check issued to the bank; except that if, prior to the payment, the bank is notified of the death by the Secretary of the Treasury and fails to present the certificate and note to the Secretary within 15 days after the notice, such interest shall be only up to the fifteenth day after such notice. The Secretary shall deduct the amount so paid from the face value (as determined under section 501) of the certificate and pay the remainder in accordance with the provisions of section 501.

(e) When any loan becomes in default the bank holding the note shall within 30 days thereafter notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the facts relative to the note, the name of the veteran, and the number of his certificate.

(f) The loan basis of any certificate at any time shall, for the purposes of this section, be the amount of the adjusted service credit, plus interest thereon, from the date of the certificate to such time, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually.

(g) No payment upon any note shall be made under this section by the Secretary of the Treasury to any bank unless the note when presented to him is accompanied by an affidavit made by an officer of the bank which made the loan, before a notary public or other officer designated for the purpose by regulation of the Secretary, and stating that such bank has not charged or collected, or attempted to charge or collect, directly or indirectly, any fee or other compensation (except interest as authorized by this section) in respect to or because of any loan made under this section by the bank to a veteran. Any bank which, or director, officer, or employee thereof who, does so charge, collect, or attempt to charge or collect any such fee or compensation shall be liable to the veteran for a penalty of $100, to be recovered in a civil suit brought by the veteran.

LOAN PRIVILEGES AFTER JANUARY 1, 1927.

SEC. 503. The Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to instruct postmasters of the first, second, and third classes to take applications of veterans for Government loans and collect payments thereon.

SEC. 504. (a) Application for Government loans may be made at any post office of a first, second, or third class. Such loans, secured by the adjusted service certificate, shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, with or without the consent of the beneficiary, and payments thereon collected, in accordance with the provisions of this title, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him. He shall supply postmasters of the first, second, and third classes with blanks upon which veterans may make applications for Government loans. Such applications shall be in the form prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and have attached thereto a form of promissory note to be executed by the veteran, and a receipt, to be delivered to the veteran, which shall be signed by the postmaster receiving the application, and which shall acknowledge the receipt of the note and the certificate, and contain a description of each. The postmaster shall thereupon transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury the application, note, and certificate. Upon the approval of the loan by the Secretary of the Treasury he shall transmit to the veteran a check for the amount of the loan. He shall also issue in triplicate a statement showing the name and service of the veteran, the number of his certificate, and a schedule of the amounts of the several payments and the dates when due. The original of the statement shall be retained with the application, the duplicate shall be transmitted to the postmaster receiving the application, and the triplicate to the veteran. The postmaster holding such statement shall receive and indorse thereon the payments made by the veteran, shall give a receipt to the veteran, and shall promptly transmit payments to the Secretary of the Treasury. Such payments shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The veteran shall make repayment of the loan upon an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual installments sufficient to cover (1) interest on the unpaid principal at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum and (2) such amount of the principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period, not exceeding the life of the certificate.

(b) If the veteran fails to make any payment when due, the Secretary of the Treasury, at any time prior to the maturity of the certificate, shall cancel the note and restore the certificate to the veteran, upon the receipt of all installments in arrears, together with interest at 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually, upon each such installment from the time when due.

SEC. 505. No loan shall be made by the United States upon any certificate prior to January 1, 1927. The amount of such loans to any one veteran outstanding at any time shall not exceed:

(a) If the loan is made on or after January 1, 1927, and at any time not more than three years after the date of the certificate, 70 per cent of the sum of (1) the adjusted service credit of the veteran plus (2) interest thereon from the date of the certificate to the date of the making of the loan, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually; or

(b) If the loan is made at any time more than three years after and not more than six years after the date of the certificate, 85 per cent of the sum of (1) the adjusted service credit of the veteran plus (2) interest thereon from the date of the certificate to the date of the making of the loan at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually; or

(c) If the loan is made at any time more than six years after the date of certificate, 70 per cent of the sum of (1) the adjusted service credit of the veteran increased by 25 per cent, plus (2) interest thereon from the date of the certificate to the date of the making of the loan, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually.

SEC. 506. No certificate issued or right conferred under the provisions of this title shall, except as provided in section 502 or 504, be negotiable or assignable or serve as security for a loan. Any negotiation, assignment, or loan made in violation of any provision of this section shall be held void.

SEC. 507. In the case of the death of the veteran before the maturity of the loan, any Government loan made upon the certificate, and the note in respect thereto, shall be canceled, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct the amount of the unpaid principal and interest of the loan from the amount of the face value of the certificate in respect to which the loan is made, and the remainder shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the beneficiary named or, if no beneficiary is named, to the estate of the veteran.

SEC. 508. Any certificate issued under the provisions of this title shall have printed upon its face the conditions and terms upon which it is issued and to which it is subject, including loan values under sections 502 and 505.

SEC. 509. If the veteran dies after making application in accordance with the provisions of section 302 and before the issuance of a certificate to him, the amount of the adjusted service credit of the veteran shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the beneficiary named, or if no beneficiary is named, to the estate of the veteran.

SEC. 510. The certificate shall be canceled (a) if the veteran fails to redeem his certificate before its maturity, or (b) if he fails to make any payment when due and such default continues to his death.

SEC. 510a. Whenever application has been received from the veteran and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, said Secretary, in his discretion, at any time may call in for payment and cancellation any loan or certificate of veterans, such payment to be based on values as herein provided.

TITLE VI.—VOCATIONAL TRAINING AID.

SEC. 601. The Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "director"), upon certification from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as provided in section 303, is hereby directed to pay to the veteran designated therein (if he is not receiving the benefits of the vocational rehabilitation act, as amended) the sum of $1.75 for each day of his attendance (on or after January 1, 1923) on a course of vocational training previously approved by the director as suitable for such veteran. Such payments shall be made without deduction for Sundays, holidays, or vacations not exceeding two weeks in duration, or for absence for other cause which the director deems justifiable; but the total payment shall not exceed 140 per cent of the amount of the adjusted service credit of the veteran.

Payments under this section shall be made monthly or at more frequent intervals, as the director may determine generally or in special cases.

SEC. 602. The director shall establish such regulations as will insure the regular attendance of the veteran on his course of training, and no sum or sums shall be payable under this title unless the director has been furnished proof of such regular attendance. For each day of unjustifiable absence the veteran shall forfeit the sum payable for that day, and shall receive no reimbursement for it in any other form.

SEC. 603. If the payment under section 601 plus the amounts forfeited under section 602 is less than 140 per cent of the adjusted service credit, either by reason of the duration of the course approved or by reason of the veteran's discontinuing, with the approval of the director, his attendance on his course of training, he shall be entitled to receive an amount equal to the difference between (1) his adjusted service credit and (2) that proportion thereof which the payments made or accrued under section 601 plus the amounts forfeited under section 602 bear to 140 per cent of his adjusted service credit: Provided, That from the amount thus computed there shall be deducted an amount equal to the sums forfeited under section 602.

SEC. 604. If before the completion of the payments under this title the veteran is separated from the military or naval forces under other than honorable conditions, or is discharged therefrom on account of his alienage, no further payments shall be made under this title.

SEC. 605. (a) If the veteran dies after making application in accordance with the provisions of section 302, and before any payments have been made or have accrued under this title, the amount of the adjusted service credit of the veteran shall be paid by the director to his estate.

(b) If the veteran dies after the course of training has begun, his estate shall be paid by the director the same amount as would have been paid to the veteran under section 603, treating for such purposes the date of his death as the date of discontinuance of attendance on his course of training.

SEC. 606. (a) The director is hereby authorized to cooperate with State boards for vocational education in such manner as will secure their assistance in the approval of courses of training for veterans, and other assistance in carrying out the provisions of this title.

(b) Whenever any State provides funds for assistance to veterans in attendance upon approved courses or provides for free tuition in approved educational institutions, the director is authorized and directed to cooperate with the State board for vocational education of such State in securing the maximum educational opportunities to veterans entitled to the benefits of this title.

TITLE VII.—FARM OR HOME AID.

SEC. 701. (a) The Secretary of the Interior, upon certification from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as provided in section 303, is hereby directed, on or after July 1, 1924, to pay to the veteran designated therein, in one payment or in installments, an amount equal to the following percentage of his adjusted service credit:

One hundred per cent, if the payment or the first installment thereof is made during the calendar year 1923;

One hundred and five per cent, if the payment or the first installment thereof is made during the calendar year 1924;

One hundred and ten per cent, if the payment or the first installment thereof is made during the calendar year 1925;

One hundred and twenty per cent, if the payment or the first installment thereof is made during the calendar year 1926;

One hundred and thirty per cent, if the payment or the first installment thereof is made during the calendar year 1927; and

One hundred and forty per cent, if the payment is made during the calendar year 1928 or thereafter.

(b) Such payment shall be made for the purpose, and only for the purpose, of enabling the veteran to make improvements on a city or suburban home, or to purchase or make payments on such a home or farm, or to pay off indebtedness existing on such a home or farm prior to the date of the application by the veteran under section 302.

SEC. 702. No such payment shall be made unless and until the Secretary of the Interior has approved the purpose for which it is desired by the veteran, and has suitable assurance that the money will be expended for such purpose. The Secretary of the Interior may, on his own motion or at the option of the veteran, make the payment directly to the vendor or other person to whom such payment is due from the veteran.

SEC. 703. For the purpose of enabling him to pass upon the desirability of the investment, the Secretary of the Interior may make use of the services of land bank appraisers of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to be designated by the board.

SEC. 704. (a) If the veteran dies after making application in accordance with the provisions of section 302 for farm or home aid and before a contract has been entered into with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the amount of his adjusted service credit shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior to his estate; but no such payment shall be made if the veteran has been separated from the military or naval forces under other than honorable conditions or discharged therefrom on account of his alienage.

(b) If before the veteran's death a contract has been entered into with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and payments under this title on such contract are still due, such payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior to the vendor or other person to whom such payments are due from the veteran.

TITLE IX.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

SEC. 901. The officers having charge of the administration of any of the provisions of this act are authorized to appoint such officers, employees, and agents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and to make such expenditures for rent, furniture, office equipment, printing, binding, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, stationery, motor-propelled vehicles or trucks used for official purposes, traveling expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4 for officers, agents, and other employees, for the purchase of reports and materials for publications, and for other contingent and miscellaneous expenses, as may be necessary efficiently to execute the purposes of this act and as may be provided for by the Congress from time to time. With the exception of such special experts as may be found necessary for the conduct of the work, all such appointments shall be made subject to the civil service laws; but for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of section 305 such appointments may be made without regard to such laws until the services of persons duly qualified under such laws are available. In all appointments under this section preference shall, so far as practicable, be given to veterans.

SEC. 902. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 903. Whoever knowingly makes any false or fraudulent statement of a material fact in any application, certificate, or document made under the provisions of Title III, IV, V, VI, or VII, or of any regulation made under any such title, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 904. The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall severally submit to Congress in the manner provided by law estimates of the amounts necessary to be expended in carrying out such provisions of this act as each is charged with administering, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts sufficient to defray such expenditures.

SEC. 905. There is hereby appropriated such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, to be paid out of and to be a first charge upon the tax receipts collected under the following new revenue provisions that are made a part of this act. If at any time the amount of such receipts is not sufficient to meet the appropriation hereby made, the same shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 906. That section 230 of the revenue act of 1921 is hereby amended by adding a new subdivision at the end thereof as follows:

(c) In addition to the taxes hereinabove provided there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for each of the taxable years 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921, 1922, and for each year thereafter on that portion of the net income for any such year of every corporation, not distributed in the form of cash dividends, a tax upon the amount of such net income for such year in excess of the credits provided in section 236, and a further deduction of $3,000 for such year at the following rates:

Five per cent of the amount of such excess not exceeding $20,000;
Ten per cent of the amount of such excess not exceeding $100,000;
Fifteen per cent of the amount of such excess not exceeding $200,000;
Twenty per cent on all of such excess above $200,000:

Provided, That if any of such undistributed profits are taxed as above provided and the corporation shall have, after the payment of such tax, distributed in money any of the profits upon which this tax has been paid, then the corporation shall be entitled, in its next income-tax return, to a credit upon its tax so returned to the extent and amount of the tax which it has paid under its provisions of this subdivision.

SEC. 907. That the provisions of the war-profits and excess-profits tax for 1921 is hereby reenacted into law as a part of this act with numbered sections of 1921 act retained, which act reads as follows:

EFFECTIVE DATE OF TITLE.

SEC. 263. That this title shall take effect as of January 1, 1922.

War-profits and excess-profits tax.

PART I.—GENERAL DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 300. That when used in this title the terms "taxable year," "fiscal year," "personal-service corporation," "paid or accrued," and "dividends" shall have the same meaning as provided for the purposes of income tax in sections 200 and 201.

PART II.—IMPOSITION OF TAX.

SEC. 301. (a) That in lieu of the tax imposed by Title III of the revenue act of 1918, but in addition to the other taxes imposed by this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the calendar year 1921 upon the net income of every corporation (except corporations taxable under subdivision (b) of this section) a tax equal to the sum of the following:

FIRST BRACKET.

Twenty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under section 312) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

SECOND BRACKET.

Forty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

(b) For the calendar year 1922 and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation which derives in such year a net income of more than $10,000 from any Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, a tax equal to the sum of the following:

(1) Such a portion of a tax computed at the rates specified in subdivision (a) of section 301 of the revenue act of 1918, as the part of the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income. In computing such tax the excess-profits credit and the war-profits credit which would be applicable to such calendar year under the revenue act of 1918 if it had been continued in force, shall be used;

(2) Such a portion of a tax computed at the rates specified in subdivision (a) of this section as the part of the net income not attributable to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income.

For the purpose of determining the part of the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts, the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to gross income derived from such Government contract or contracts and from other sources, respectively, shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(c) In any case where the full amount of the excess-profits credit is not allowed under the first bracket of subdivision (a) by reason of the fact that such credit is in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital, the part not so allowed shall be deducted from the amount in the second bracket.

SEC. 302. That the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301 shall in no case be more than 20 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000 plus 40 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000; and the limitations imposed by section 302 of the revenue act of 1918 (upon taxes computed under subdivision (c) of section 301 of that act) are hereby made applicable to taxes computed under subdivision (b) of section 301 of this act. Nothing in this section shall be construed in such manner as to increase the tax imposed by section 301 of this act.

SEC. 303. That if part of the net income of a corporation is derived (1) from a trade or business (or a branch of a trade or business) in which the employment of capital is necessary, and (2) a part (constituting not less than 30 per cent of its total net income) is derived from a separate trade or business (or a distinctly separate branch of the trade or business), which if constituting the sole trade or business would bring it within the class of "personal-service corporations," then (under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) the tax upon the first part of such net income shall be separately computed (allowing in such computation only the same proportionate part of the credits authorized in section 312), and the tax upon the second part shall be the same percentage thereof as the tax so computed upon the first part is of such first part: Provided, That the tax upon such second part shall in no case be less than 20 per cent thereof, unless the tax upon the entire net income, if computed without benefit of this section, would constitute less than 20 per cent of such entire net income, in which event the tax shall be determined upon the entire net income, without reference to this section, as other taxes are determined under this title. The total tax computed under this section shall be subject to the limitations provided in section 302.

SEC. 304. (a) That the corporations enumerated in section 231 shall, to the extent that they are exempt from income tax under Title II, be exempt from taxation under this title.

(b) Any corporation whose net income for the taxable year is less than $3,000 shall be exempt from taxation under this title.

(c) In the case of any corporation engaged in the mining of gold, the portion of the net income derived from the mining of gold shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this title or any tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1917, and the tax on the remaining portion of the net income shall be the same proportion of a tax computed without the benefit of this subdivision which such remaining portion of the net income bears to the entire net income.

SEC. 305. That if a tax is computed under this title for a period of less than 12 months, the specific exemption of $3,000, wherever referred to in this title, shall be reduced to an amount which is the same proportion of $3,000 as the number of months in the period is of 12 months.

PART III.—EXCESS-PROFITS CREDIT.

SEC. 312. That the excess-profits credit shall consist of a specific exemption of $3,000 plus an amount equal to 8 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year.

A foreign corporation or a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 262 shall not be entitled to the specific exemption of $3,000.

That Parts IV, V, VI, and VII of the revenue act of 1921 are made a part of this act.

SEC. 908. No part of this act shall be rendered invalid by the decision of any court if more than one justice dissents from such decision, and no holding of any part of this act invalid shall affect the remainder of the act.

SEC. 909. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 910. That unless otherwise herein specifically provided this act shall take effect on the day following its passage.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, when a few years ago it was heralded that we had reached a billion-dollar Congress the people of the United States were astounded. A billion-dollar Congress meant that the direct appropriations from the Treasury annually had reached the sum of $500,000,000. So that for the two years of the life of the Congress the appropriations aggregated the sum of $1,000,000,000. But a little later when we spoke of a billion-dollar Congress we meant a Congress that appropriated each year a billion dollars. When we speak of a Congress now I will show you what we mean.

Our direct appropriations in the regular supply bills for the present fiscal year, exclusive of the permanent appropriations, amounted to $2,318,911,174.70, and the permanent appropriations for the present fiscal year, in addition to that sum, amounted to $1,394,852,282.63. That makes a total appropriation for the present fiscal year of $3,713,763,457.33. Fully that much was appropriated for the preceding fiscal year. In addition to these appropriations, we have revolving funds that aggregate up into the hundreds of millions. For instance, the Navy Department has access now to a revolving fund of $200,000,000 at least, in addition to its regular appropriations.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. That in a large measure was created during the war in buying supplies for war purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but whether in money or property on hand it may be used now, as they have access to it.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all included, but we are reducing that. We took $35,000,000 away from them.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad of that; the gentleman can say that on the hustings and can advise the newcomers in Congress that he is doing that. But what about deficiency appropriations?

Under our law and our present Budget system, the heads of the departments are supposed to come annually with their estimates of what they need for the fiscal year.

The President is supposed to give us his estimates for the regular supply bills for which Congress is to appropriate the necessary money. It is against the law for departments to create deficiencies. Yet in addition to the regular supply bills for these two years of the Sixty-seventh Congress I want to call attention to the extra appropriations which Congress has appropriated for in deficiency bills.

In the first deficiency bill of this Congress, an act approved August 24, 1921, we appropriated $50,566,222.72.

In the second deficiency bill for this Congress, an act approved December 15, 1921, we appropriated $105,277,593.50.

In the third deficiency bill for this Congress, an act approved March 20, 1922, we appropriated $137,245,686.54.

In the fourth deficiency bill for this Congress, an act approved July 1, 1922, we appropriated $47,011,935.46.

In the fifth deficiency bill for this Sixty-seventh Congress, an act approved September 22, 1922, we appropriated $2,454,210.09.

And now in this, the sixth deficiency bill for the present Sixty-seventh Congress, we are appropriating, if this bill passes as it is drawn, $74,645,674.06.

This makes an aggregate total in deficiency bills alone for this Sixty-seventh Congress of $417,191,322.37, which makes appropriated in deficiency bills alone in this Congress nearly the amount of the whole appropriations made by Congress in the first billion-dollar Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows that these deficiencies were not created in this Congress, but that they run from 1912 up.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, that passes the buck. I want the gentleman to explain that a little later. I have just 10 minutes, and I want to use it.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I have three minutes left.

Mr. BLANTON. I expect the gentleman to explain it in his time, because the people of the United States expect him to do it.

Yet when we ask for something that really benefits the people, how ridiculously economical the administration leaders are! Yesterday when they asked for $513,911.50 for the pneumatic tubes for New York and Chicago——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. Are they not going to have any in Chicago?

Mr. MADDEN. No; there is nothing in the bill for Chicago.

Mr. BLANTON. But they have it in contemplation.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know what they have in contemplation.

Mr. BLANTON. I do. I will not take that back—for Chicago and New York.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman ought not to say that.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I will not say Chicago yet, but will wait for it a few months; but in New York, where they have already five or six deliveries a day, when they asked for that sum for pneumatic tubes for New York, by a vote of 158 yeas to 81 noes it was granted. However, when attention was called to the fact that out in the little third-class post offices that serve the rural people of the country, where the clerical force is now paid as low as $10 a month or $15 a month or $20 a month, there was need for some larger appropriation, and also when attention was called to the fact that the Postmaster General tells us every time we ask for relief that he has not the money, that if we will give him the money relief will be granted, and when we asked for that relief yesterday what did the gentleman and his Congress do for the rural population of the country? By a vote of 94 yeas against 144 nays, almost the same number by which they gave the pneumatic tubes to New York, they denied the needed clerical help for the little third-class post offices scattered in the rural communities throughout the United States. The people are getting tired of it, and you are going to hear from them sooner or later!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is always eloquent when he talks about appropriations, but he would lead the country and the House to believe that all of these deficiency appropriations to which he has called attention were created because of the conduct of the business of the Congress in which we are sitting, the Sixty-seventh Congress. The truth is that out of the sum he mentions, $332,000,000, most of it was for 1922 and prior years, running back to 1912, mostly due to obligations created during the war, which have come down to us. For example, $158,000,000 was due to the Veterans' Bureau for medical and hospital services and vocational training, and I am sure the gentleman from Texas never objected to that.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDEN. He is in strict accord with that?

Mr. BLANTON. I am for that.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. That was not created as a result of any activity upon the part of the Sixty-seventh Congress or this administration. That was a war measure. The next thing was the Shipping Board, to meet losses of operation during the war, $48,500,000. Next was the refunding of taxes collected as a war measure from 1917 up to 1920. That amounted to $78,674,500. The next thing was a sum aggregating $11,980,000 to carry out new laws or treaties effective after the regular annual bills had been passed. The next thing are the judgments of $13,498,000 rendered by the courts of the land. Only $13,000,000 out of the whole $332,000,000 had anything whatever to do with the work of the Sixty-seventh Congress. I think that explanation ought to satisfy the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the progress of the road-building program of the country. Under an act of Congress more than a year ago we provided for a great interstate and intercounty system of highways throughout the country. This comprises something like 185,000 miles of highways and will connect up when completed practically every county and center of population in the 48 States.

My thought in rising is to call the attention of the Congress and the country to the fact that, in my opinion, the road program of the country is being cut down and obstructed. If we should appropriate $100,000,000 a year and that amount was taken up and met by the States, it would require about 10 years to complete this system of highways. If we appropriated only sixty-six and two-thirds million dollars a year it would require 15 years, and if we appropriated $50,000,000 per year it would require 20 years. I know it is contended that we are appropriating all of the money necessary to carry forward the road work, but I call the attention of my colleagues to a recent statement made by Mr. McDonald, the director of roads. Mr. McDonald testified in November of 1922 that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the States matched and there was taken up out of the Federal Treasury $109,127,000, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, $84,115,000, but for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, that amount had fallen to $49,000,000, showing that the Federal-aid program of the country had been cut in two in a single year, and at a time when road construction was more favorable than it had been for the years ending in 1920 or 1921. Mr. McDonald also points out:

> Had not progress been repressed during 1921 by the approaching exhaustion of apportioned funds the obligations during that year would undoubtedly have passed the $100,000,000 mark. Again, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, it is estimated that Federal-aid road work was repressed to the extent of approximately $50,000,000 because of lack of a congressional appropriation at the proper time to continue the work at the same rate as in 1920 and 1921.

The question is, Is the House willing and is the country willing to have its road program cut in two in this manner? The House early in 1922 passed a bill providing an authorization of $65,000,000 for the present fiscal year and $75,000,000 for the next fiscal year. The Senate reduced that sum to $50,000,000 and $65,000,000, respectively. This bill proposes to appropriate $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000 to be used for road construction. I wish to say here in my opinion and I wish to have the ear of the chairman of the committee, that I am very doubtful that we will get the other $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000 for road work. Oh, the chairman may say that we will get it in subsequent years, but it is undoubtedly the sentiment of this House and the country that there should not be appropriated less than $50,000,000 for this year and $65,000,000 for next year. If you appropriate only the $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000 authorized for this year, then we lose $25,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. There is not a chance in the world that any State will lose a single dollar of the $50,000,000. That will be appropriated as the department needs it. They have obligated only $16,000,000 and odd against the $50,000,000. Mr. McDonald certifies to the Committee on Appropriations that they will not need any more than $25,000,000, and, perhaps, not that much, before next December, and we have provided in this bill that no State under any circumstances shall lose any rights or be retarded in its progress in road building.

Mr. ROBSION. But I have the statement of the Director of Roads that the road program of this country has been cut in half.

Mr. MADDEN. He did not tell us that.

Mr. ROBSION. Here is his statement, page 373, given in November, 1922, on the Agricultural appropriation bill, in which he says:

> During the fiscal year 1920, $109,127,000 in Federal funds were obligated to the States; during 1921, $84,115,000; and during the fiscal year 1922, $49,000,000. Had not progress been repressed during 1921 by the approaching exhaustion of apportioned funds, the obligation during that year undoubtedly would have passed $100,000,000.

So for the fiscal year 1922 you have only had $49,000,000; fiscal year 1923 you are going to use less than $50,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Ninety-eight million dollars.

Mr. ROBSION. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROBSION. I have his statement here.

Mr. MADDEN. I know, but we have his statement here, too.

Mr. ROBSION. But you did not use the $98,000,000 in 1923——

Mr. MADDEN. Nineteen hundred and twenty-four.

Mr. ROBSION. He says it was cut down $50,000,000, and the States would have used $100,000,000 but for the action of Congress delaying appropriations.

Mr. MADDEN. We did not delay anything. We gave carte blanche where there was a contract——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The proof of that fact arises in the fact that he has or had in November—or November the 1st—$65,000,000 unobligated. He now has only $16,700,000 of $25,000,000 obligated, and there will not be any State in the Union that will call upon the Treasury for any more than a million dollars between now and the 1st of March, all told.

Mr. ROBSION. I understand; but what has brought about this condition is because of congressional action in repressing the road-building program Congress failed to provide sufficient money in time and by saying we did not need the money.

Mr. MADDEN. That means we did not pass bills that gave more than $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 or $75,000,000 instead of a billion dollars.

Mr. ROBSION. No; the legislation was held up until winter came, and they could not spend the money.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is not the fact of the uncertainty of these appropriations—and there is no certainty in a deficiency bill until the bill passes both Houses and is signed by the President——

Mr. MADDEN. There is no uncertainty——

Mr. KINCHELOE. There is nothing but uncertainty in a deficiency appropriation bill. And here Congress has come and authorized $50,000,000 for 1922, and the Appropriations Committee proposes to meet it by piecemeal appropriations.

Mr. ROBSION. And the statement I am making is this, that America will not get over $25,000,000 of this $50,000,000 for the road program.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The appropriation by piecemeal in an appropriation bill of itself stops the road projects and road contracts throughout the country; and if it is not all appropriated and not all spent that is now available, is not that brought about by reason of the fact that some of the States have not taken advantage of it, and the States that have taken advantage of it every year are dubious on account of this uncertain policy of piecemeal appropriations?

Mr. ROBSION. And those States are being penalized.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky, who is one of the leading Republicans on this floor, in making this charge of inefficiency and repression of governmental activities is guilty of a kind of lese majeste against the administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas will be in order.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, I want to say this to the gentleman from Arkansas, that he heard the ranking Member [Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee] on the Democratic side say that he would join in to carry forward this policy of repression, if it is repression. It seems not to be a one-sided affair.

Mr. WINGO. Getting back to normalcy and having less of hysteria and more practicability.

Mr. ROBSION. I can not yield further. There is undoubtedly a movement on foot in the House and outside this House to curtail the road-building program of this country; and one of the agencies behind it are the railroads of the country. Perhaps some of you have noticed the propaganda being put out by the railroads of the country in which they are assailing the road-building program, and they are having their employees on the trains hand literature to travelers. Among other statements they say this—this is from the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad:

> The legitimate function of a highway is, first, the accommodation of private owners of vehicles for their individual pleasure or business. They are not designed nor intended as permanent roadbeds for transportation business and should not be depended upon to fulfill that function.

Here are the railroads of the country putting out propaganda not to build good roads in the country because of their jealousy of the growing use of the motor trucks in handling the business of the country. The railroads can not carry all the business, and their rates are so high people are forced to use trucks. Now, I do not want to criticize anyone; but since the bill passed by more than 8 to 1, I think that we should at least have $50,000,000 for road purposes. We should have this sum. I am making the statement that we will not get over $25,000,000 of this $50,000,000 unless my amendment is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBSION. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

> To pay the widow of John I. Nolan, late a Representative from the State of California, $7,500.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes out of order.

Mr. STEVENSON. Reserving the right to object, what subject is the gentleman going to discuss?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like to discuss the referendum to be held in Washington next month.

Mr. WINGO. About what?

Mr. CRAMTON. The referendum on the question of beer and wine, to be held in this city next Monday.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not taking that seriously, is he?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STEVENSON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For payment to James I. Campbell for expenses incurred as contestant in the contested-election case of Campbell v. Doughton, audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections No. 2, $2,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 2, after line 14, insert the following: "For payment to Jacob Gartenstein for expenses incurred as contestant in the contested-election case of Gartenstein v. Sabath, audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections No. 2, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery for Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, $125.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request to be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say in that connection that I had anticipated time in general debate, but through a misunderstanding it was not reserved for me.

Mr. MADDEN. I had promised the gentleman from Michigan that I would reserve time for him, but I overlooked it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not wish to interfere with any arrangements made by the gentlemen on the other side, but, as I understand, an effort is to be made in the morning to bring up the District of Columbia appropriation bill. It seems to me the gentleman will then have ample time to discuss the subject he has in mind.

Mr. CRAMTON. The District bill?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the taking of time by me to-morrow, I may say that I think it will be only fair to the House that such time as I take to-morrow should be devoted to the bill that I have in charge.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That bill ought not to be considered to-morrow. The bill has just been printed, and the hearings have not yet been printed, as I understand.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; the gentleman can get copies of the hearings in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What opportunity has anybody had to study a bill reported only to-day? It seems to me we ought not to adopt the plan of going ahead in that very hasty and haphazard way.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggest that time can be given during the general debate on the District bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What does the gentleman contemplate in the way of general debate?

Mr. CRAMTON. I had hoped to take care of pressing requests and at the same time limit it as might be agreeable.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Well, I shall not make any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman—and I do not think I shall object—the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] spoke of the District appropriation bill being introduced yesterday or to-day and being taken up to-morrow, and that that plan ought not to be followed. I want to ask the chairman if it is not true also with respect to every other supply bill thus far considered by the House, bills that have to deal not only with the few miles square composing the District of Columbia but also have to do with the entire 48 States of the Union? The bills are introduced on one day and taken up the next day under general debate.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have opportunity to speak only in connection with the Interior Department bill, of which I was in charge, and that bill was before the House several days before it was taken up.

Mr. BLANTON. Practically all of them were taken up the next day after having been reported.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I hope nobody will object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on Monday there is to be conducted a wet and dry vote. We are told in an article in the Washington Post of January 2, which, I take it, is good authority on the question, apparently the official wet organ, that—

Now that the old year has gone and the new year is here, Mayor F. C. Harley, of Astoria, Oreg., arises to ask the boys—and girls—a question: "Is or is not Washington wet or dry?"

This is the article:

GIRLS TO TAKE CITY WET AND DRY VOTE—BEVY ARRIVES TO PRESIDE OVER BALLOT BOXES FOR NATIONAL LIBERAL ALLIANCE—POLL TO BE OPENED MONDAY—WILL BE THOROUGH, SAYS MAYOR F. C. HARLEY, OF ASTORIA, OREG., IN CHARGE.

Now that the old year has gone and the new year is here, Mayor F. C. Harley, of Astoria, Oreg., arises to ask the boys—and girls—a question: "Is or is not Washington wet or dry?"

"Ahem," ahems the chorus. "That all depends on whose party you attended the other night."

At any rate, the mayor is ready for business. He wants to poll the town, and he's going to get the votes. To see that everything shall be done in the right way, he has wired to Providence, R. I., for assistance. Out of that fair city comes Miss Helen L. Baughan, director of the women's division of the National Liberal Alliance. She arrived yesterday, and with her came a bevy of beautiful girls. They are going to get your vote!

3,000,000 VOTES ALREADY IN.

Miss Baughan, an experienced vote getter in seven States, will be in active charge of all these girls who are to be stationed on principal corners of the city, hotel lobbies—in fact, everywhere—for the one purpose: Finding out what Washingtonians want—light wines and beer or a drought.

The National Liberal Alliance is the direct antithesis of the Anti-Saloon League. It is an organization built up to aid, if possible, in obtaining the opinion of the Nation on a question that is causing men many sleepless nights. In getting this opinion its officers and workers are prepared to journey over the entire United States. To date the New England States have been canvassed and 3,000,000 votes have been obtained.

Just to show that its heart is in the right place, the National Liberal Alliance takes votes both ways—pro and con, for and against. Out of the 3,000,000 votes so far, approximately 1 per cent are against the return of light wines and beer. That is the computation just made by Mayor Harley, and from these figures he believes that the States he has visited are for a return of these beverages.

VOTE TO BE TAKEN MONDAY.

As Washington is the Capital of the Nation, as it is a city the residents of which never had a chance to vote, and as it is immediately under the eyes of the Congress, Mayor Harley is going to extend himself in making the contemplated poll. The vote will be taken next Monday.

"I intend to have ballot boxes placed wherever people gather," says the mayor. "I will have one box for every 500 of the population. These boxes will be placed in hotel lobbies, grocery stores, restaurants, churches—wherever permitted—drug stores, department stores, and barber shops.

"I respect the views of everyone. There are folks in this city, as in all others, who do not believe in the return of light wines and beers. There are others who do. Just how many are lined up on each side I do not know at present, but I intend to find out. The ballot that is placed in the hand of each man and woman asks for the information that the country needs.

WOULD SAVE YOUNG GIRLS.

"When we get votes we do not merely ask for a 'yes' and 'no' answer. We ask for names, addresses, occupations, etc. Any person who takes time to fill out one of these blanks is serious. It is surprising just how many men in the higher professions have already voted for a return of light wines and beers."

Miss Baughan is a former Providence newspaper woman. She is a member of the Young Women's Christian Association, has no use for so-called "hard liquor," but believes that too many young girls are being ruined because of the present-day tendency to stage what are popularly known as "hip-hip-hurray parties," the carrying of liquor on the hips of young men who trip the light fantastic.

They claim the referendums which they are conducting have now polled 3,000,000 votes, of which only 1 per cent is opposed to the return of beer and wine. That may give you some idea as to the unprejudiced manner in which this poll is taken.

We are told that to legalize the sale of beer and wine will promote temperance, when we know its underlying appeal grows out of human appetite or out of the greed of those who would exploit that appetite for selfish gain. Many organizations have come into existence having as their object the furtherance of this proposal. I have long been convinced that many well-meaning and patriotic citizens are being misled by this cunning and insidious propaganda. I have just had brought to my attention these activities of this National Liberal Alliance, with headquarters in New York City. The affidavit of Mr. Edward Gordon, formerly director of distribution of the association, and letter which I now place in the RECORD show very clearly the character of some of the methods which are being employed to mislead the American people upon this important question. These exhibits show that certain of the promoters of this organization have evidently seized upon the question of prohibition, which is now one fundamentally of law and order, as a means of exploiting the American people for personal advantage. I feel sure that most of the citizens whose names are associated with this organization would never have loaned their moral or financial support to this organization had they not been utterly deceived in the character of its activities.

I will insert the letterhead of the organization giving the names of those that have been put forth as sponsors, and also the appeal for funds, which has so prominent a part of the work of this National Liberal Alliance:

The following appears on the letterhead of the National Liberal Alliance:

(Purpose: To restore and secure to the people of the United States the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. National Liberal Alliance. New York State Headquarters. Jerome A. Myers, campaign director, 169 West Forty-ninth Street, at Seventh Avenue, New York City. Phone, Circle 1430.)

The following is a sample of the appeals for funds which have been made by correspondence:

DEAR FELLOW LIBERAL: Have you ever stopped to think why we have prohibition to-day?

LETHARGY OF THE PEOPLE.

Webster defines lethargy as follows: "Dullness; inaction; inattention; apathy."

If the prohibition agitator had been filled with lethargy there would have been no prohibition. Continual lethargy on our part will see more of our constitutional rights taken away from us unless we wake up.

Your ballot received shows you are with us as against prohibition and for light wines and beer, and that you are also opposed to blue laws.

Great, fellow liberal!

With your views and with hundreds of thousands, in fact, millions of others expressing themselves throughout the United States, no doubt some of our parasitic, hypocritical, political representatives will begin to realize that some of the people are beginning to throw off the yoke of lethargy which took hold of them during and after the war and are now ready to assert themselves.

Individually we can do nothing, but concertedly we can undo that which the prohibitionist wished on us at a psychological moment—prohibition. However, this can not be done alone by your moral support, which we appreciate. To win, we need your material support to buy and distribute ballot boxes, ballots, and other educational printed matter. Unless we do get your help our efforts will be seriously handicapped. Therefore we feel you will not hesitate to back up your views by joining the National Liberal Alliance. The membership fee is $1.

We are inclosing membership subscription blank, which we trust you will fill out at your convenience. But do it now!

Every dollar will help us buy more ammunition to carry on the fight for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Very truly yours,

NATIONAL LIBERAL ALLIANCE,
JEROME A. MYERS,
Campaign Director.

The primary purpose of the National Liberal Alliance is to get money. I will also insert one of their appeals. The following appeal for funds appeared in the publication of the National Liberal Alliance, called the National Liberal Alliance News:

HOW YOU CAN HELP.

1. Join in the referendum; get your friends to use the ballots. We want millions to vote, so that the sentiment of the Nation may be voiced. This referendum should be the biggest vote of the people ever recorded.

2. Become a member of the National Liberal Alliance and induce your friends to join. An associate membership costs only $1. Surely you can afford that small sum to aid in this great struggle for liberty. Make the members of your family members. The blight of prohibition and blue laws is a menace to the generation now growing up. Father, mother, sons, daughters, even the baby's name should be enrolled with the National Liberal Alliance in its great work. Associate membership cards will be mailed to you promptly from national headquarters, No. 15 Whitehall Street, New York City.

3. Send a contribution, as much as you can spare, to advance our educational campaign. No salaries are paid to our officers, but we pay for the best brains in the country in pushing our propaganda. Speakers, clerks, ballot boxes and ballots, printing, postage—all cost money. It is your fight as well as ours. Help us with the sinews of war—money. A contribution of only $5 will pay for the installation of one of our ballot boxes, with the attendant expenses of ballots, clerical work, distribution of literature, and information to the newspapers for publication. Make your financial aid as great or small as your purse permits, but before you write your check think well how much this fight against injustice, oppression, and bigotry means to America, and means to you and your family.

The inaccuracy and bad faith of these alleged referendums is shown by the following affidavit of Mr. Edward Gordon, who, as the letterhead shows, was formerly director of distribution of the alliance.

Here is a portion of an affidavit. I have the original affidavit in my possession. I will not insert all its charges, for I have not had the opportunity to make the extrinsic investigation that I would desire to make as to some of them. It is an affidavit, I say, given by Mr. Edward Gordon, who has heretofore been connected with the National Liberal Alliance, in charge of direct distribution.

In the month of July, 1921, I entered the employ of the National Liberal Alliance at their uptown office located, first, in the Lowe Theater Building, later on moved to 169 West Forty-ninth Street, New York City, with confidence in their honesty and integrity of purpose. A few days after many things happened to weaken my faith in the officers of the organization. The stationery that I offer shows my position with them. I discovered that they kept imperfect records of where the ballot boxes were located, and after many complaints had come to me from people having ballot boxes in their places of business was told by Jerome A. Myers, campaign director, on my request for ballots to supply the needs of box holders, "Hell, we don't give a damn about the ballots; its the money we are after."

This Mr. Gordon, who makes this affidavit, is a man of some perception.

I then concluded they were not sincere with the public. * * *
I started an investigation of the activities and records of the National Liberal Alliance and have found a great deal of evidence, some of which has been turned over to the proper authorities, and I have much more in course of preparation for their consideration. * * *

EDWARD GORDON.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of Queen, ss:

On this 23d day of November, 1922, personally appeared before me Edward Gordon, who being by me duly sworn, deposes and said that he is the person who signed the foregoing statement and acknowledged to me the execution thereof.

[SEAL.] MAX STEINER,
Notary Public, New York County No. 408.

(New York register's No. 4090, certificate filed in Queens County No. 954.)

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has been talking about wine, beer, and money. The gentleman said this man was engaged in distribution. Was he engaged in the distribution of funds or of liquor?

Mr. CRAMTON. His title is director of distribution. What he distributed I do not know; I suppose he distributed their literature.

This is the way the brewers view the activities of the National Liberal Alliance:

The National Liberal Alliance of New York makes things hum. Many stores have been provided with voting boxes for the customers to show their preferences for wet or dry. Since most of the shoppers are ladies, it is an experiment worth watching. (The Brewers' Journal, August 1, 1921.)

This shows the point of view of the brewers concerning this organization. I appreciate the courtesy of my friend from Maryland [Mr. HILL] in asking that I be given time this morning. I am not discussing his particular organization. This is another one of the 30 different brands. Let me tell how New York newspapers view the National Liberal Alliance.

The New York Evening Journal of Friday, November 24, 1922, contains an article with the heading—

Court scores antidry body as "phony."

This article says—

Magistrate Corrigan, in the West Side court to-day—

I do not suppose Magistrate Corrigan is one of these prohibition fanatics at all, holding office as he does in New York City. The article says:

Magistrate Corrigan, in the West Side court to-day, characterized the National Liberal Alliance, which purports to be an organization fighting prohibition, as "a phony enterprise," and fined one of its young women members $25 for collecting money without a license on the streets.

The young woman is Irene Bryant, who gave her address as 958 East Fourteenth Street, Brooklyn. She, in charge of several other young women, was one of the principals in a meeting which several speakers for the alliance were conducting at Broadway and Forty-seventh Street on November 4. Memberships in the alliance were sold at this meeting, as well as copies of the alliance's organ, The National Liberal Alliance News.

Edward Gordon, office manager of the Stanley Electric Contracting Co., of 132 Fourth Street, Long Island City, who had resigned from the alliance because he did not like its methods, went to the Broadway meeting. He bought a membership and several copies of the paper. He consulted the city authorities and discovered, he says, that the alliance had no permit to hold meetings and that it was not incorporated in this State and did not hold a Federal charter.

Miss Bryant said she did not solicit any money from Mr. Gordon, but that he made all the advances. Magistrate Corrigan spoke to her severely.

That is the organization that proposes to take this ballot in the Capital of the Nation next Monday. As this article states, he imposed a fine of $25 upon a representative of the National Liberal Alliance, and in doing so he said:

I believe prohibition to be the most important matter before the country to-day. We are suffering enough from bootleggers, poisoned whisky, and other results of the Volstead law. We do not want to have in addition phony enterprises that are supposed to help those against prohibition and do not.

The New York Herald of Saturday, November 25, 1922, carried a news item to the same effect, as follows:

MAGISTRATE ASSAILS BOGUS DRIVES BY WETS—CORRIGAN FINES GIRL $25 FOR SOLICITING FUNDS.

"The prohibition issue is one of the most important in this country to-day," said Magistrate Corrigan in West Side court yesterday. "We certainly suffer enough with bootleggers without people going around and collecting money for bogus enterprises that are supposed to help and do not."

The magistrate gave this opinion in the case of Irene Bryant, 22, charged with soliciting funds for the National Liberal Alliance, which has headquarters in the Hotel Continental. Miss Bryant is secretary to Helen J. Baughas, who is in charge of 500 girls conducting a drive. She was fined $25.

That is the attitude of a court in New York City that had on trial one of the representatives of the National Liberal Alliance, and condemned it as a "phony" organization that was seeking only to get money without doing anything real for those who furnish the money.

The dry forces of Washington have declared a policy with reference to this organization and its alleged poll, which is to be followed probably throughout the country, and have issued a signed statement appealing to the people to ignore so irregular and undesirable and "phony" an enterprise as Mr. Harley is to conduct here next Monday. That appeal is as follows:

JANUARY 4, 1923.

To the people of Washington, D. C.:

It has been announced in the daily press that the National Liberal Alliance, through its national chairman, F. O. Harley, a defeated wet candidate for governor in Oregon, is planning an alleged poll of the people of Washington on light wine and beer.

We desire to make known to the public that this wet organization furnishes no evidence of accuracy or integrity in the taking of such poll. Sworn statements in our possession by a former employee of the organization make clear that there is neither accuracy nor good faith in the conduct of these polls. In addition, to hold out to the people of Washington that light wine and beer can be legalized under the eighteenth amendment is an insult to their intelligence. Any poll indicating the desirability of adopting an unconstitutional proposal is indefensible and against sound public policy.

We therefore appeal to all law-abiding persons of the District of Columbia to refuse to participate in such a poll, and respectfully suggest to those who are opposed to prohibition that they proceed in a legal and orderly manner to amend the Constitution of the United States—if the legally constituted majority desires to do so—instead of participating in an unauthorized referendum, the only effect of which is to encourage lawlessness.

Andrew Wilson, president Anti-Saloon League, District of Columia; Emma Sanford Shelton, president Woman's Christian Temperance Union, District of Columbia; E. O. Watson, secretary Federal Council of Churches in Christ in America; W. L. Darby, executive secretary Washington Federation of Churches; William Knowles Cooper, general secretary Young Men's Christian Association; Homer J. Councilor, chairman central committee, Men's Organized Bible Classes, District of Columbia; Clarence True Wilson, general secretary Board of Temperance, Prohibition, and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel Anti-Saloon League of America; Herbert F. Randolph, president Pastors' Federation, District of Columbia; Albert E. Shoemaker, executive secretary and attorney Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Can the gentleman give the House any information as to the sources from which they receive this money to carry on this election?

Mr. CRAMTON. Their main purpose is to get the money. Everyone who signs up one of these slips will receive an appeal soliciting money ostensibly to conduct the election. The election is the excuse for the collection of the money, but the real purpose of the money is to pay good salaries to Mr. Harley and his assistants. Everyone who is engaged in this work is working on commission for part of the money.

Harley himself appears to be a worthy one to head this "phony" organization. He parades himself as "Mayor of Astoria" and defeated candidate for Governor of Oregon. My information is that he was once mayor of Astoria, to the lasting regret of that town, and that when he left he stood not upon the order of his going. He was defeated for the nomination for governor and hardly had enough votes to put him among the "also rans."

I have before me a telegram from Portland, Oreg., which sums up the standing of Harley in Oregon. It is dated January 4, 1923, and says:

Harley entirely discredited. Has no following. Overwhelmingly defeated in primary for governor in which he had support of worst wet element. It is common rumor he was disloyal. Delivered addresses in I. W. W. meetings and had their support. Owes thousands of dollars in Astoria and Portland. Administration as mayor of Astoria wide open in its most aggravated form. Has headed many movements. Collected tens of thousands of dollars from Japs of entire coast to lobby in Washington to open wide their entry into this country.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Just one more question. The gentleman from Michigan does not know whether the representatives of the National Liberal Alliance are going to take these ballots around to the mothers in the homes and ask them how they are going to vote?

Mr. CRAMTON. My judgment is that however people vote the result announced will be just the same, because they have had the audacity to say that only 1 per cent of those who have voted so far are against wine and beer, and no one with any judgment—not even my friend from Maryland [Mr. HILL]—will contend that any such result would come from any such election anywhere in the country.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the gentleman that I do not know anything about the organization to which he refers, but I should like to ask him if its attitude toward the collection of money and the payment of salaries is not the same as the attitude of the Anti-Saloon League?

Mr. CRAMTON. I suppose the Anti-Saloon League must have money with which to carry on its organization, but the gentleman and those with him will testify that the Anti-Saloon League and other temperance organizations have secured results for the money contributed to them. The charge of the judge in New York was that this organization was a "phony" organization; that it would not get results for those who contributed money to it.

Mr. HILL. I am sure the gentleman agrees with me that the Anti-Saloon League ought to file reports of its expenses.

Mr. CRAMTON. We do not want to get into too much of a discussion, but the Anti-Saloon League is the only organization of the kind that has really made any reports of its political activities.

Mr. HILL. Have they filed any report this year?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not checked up on all of it. I understand they have.

Now, I wish to show the effort of this organization to yoke up blue laws with prohibition in an entirely unfair way. That is shown in the form of the proposed ballot submitted by the National Liberal Alliance.

Here is a copy of the ballot:

NATIONAL LIBERAL ALLIANCE.

GENTLEMEN: I am (for) against presenting to Congress a memorial requesting the modification of the Volstead Act and a liberal construction of the national prohibition amendment, as indicated by my mark X on the ballot herewith.

(Vote this side if against prohibition and the blue laws.)		(Vote this side if for prohibition and the blue laws.)
I am for liberal construction of the national prohibition laws.		I am for strict enforcement of the national prohibition amendment and the Volstead Act.
I am for light wines and beers.		I am against light wines and beers.
I am against all "blue laws."		I favor strict enforcement of "blue laws."

The above ballot proposes a vote upon the question of light wine and beer. Everyone on the floor of this House knows that wines, light or heavy, can not be made or sold under the eighteenth amendment, yet this wet organization proposes to make the discontented thirsty in a few wet centers of this country believe that beer and wine can be legalized under the eighteenth amendment.

Such a proposal or fake referendum ought not to be permitted upon the streets of the Capital City. The Capital of the Nation should and does stand for law and order. It is just as blameworthy to propose an unconstitutional referendum as it is to violate the law itself.

The next proposition they propose by a referendum is: "I am against all blue laws." What are blue laws, and why is such a question presented? Manifestly for the purpose of trying to make the people believe that those who voted prohibition into the Constitution would favor some kind of blue law that would take all the joy out of life. The same practical men and women who wrote the eighteenth amendment into the Constitution are back of every movement that puts joy and wholesome pleasure into life and are not in favor of taking the joy out of life. A majority of the people of this country will never favor a blue law that kills wholesome pleasure. This sane majority will never favor any red law, either, that stands for anarchy and lawlessness. The people of the United States are neither for the so-called blue laws that kill joy nor for the red laws that kill law and order. They are back of the "red, white, and blue" laws which stand for orderly government.

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution was written into it by the orderly processes of government, and it is never going to be mutilated and destroyed by a minority whose appeal to the people is dictated by their thirst rather than by their loyalty to law and order.

Prohibition as a national policy in this country is the result of the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution by the people of the United States. This amendment prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. Congress can not amend the existing law to permit the sale of liquors which would be intoxicating in fact. Even were it to do so, the law would be declared unconstitutional by the courts.

Many misleading statements are being disseminated by which, frequently, patriotic and law-abiding citizens are being misled to believe that Congress can, by an amendment to the enforcement statute, so change the definition of intoxicating liquors as to satisfy the demands of those who desire an alcoholic stimulant. It is the unquestioned right of any citizen to proceed by lawful means to secure the change of any governmental policy which does not meet with his approval.

To those who desire to legalize the sale of beer and wine only one legitimate method is available; that is, by proceeding to secure an amendment to the Constitution. When this is attempted no one will dispute the right, though many will deny the wisdom of such a course.

Much of th alleged popular support for the beer and wine proposal will vanish like the mist before the rising sun when the American people are made aware of the fallacious and illegal grounds upon which it rests. When they are called upon to face squarely the issue of nullification or preservation of the Constitution there will be no doubt of the outcome. Not only is the proposal itself legally unsound, but many of the arguments which are urged in support of it are conceived in deceit and inspired by selfishness.

In closing let me say that a man named Harley, defeated once for governor of his State, and now engaged, so a New York court says, in a "phony" enterprise for the money there is in it, urges return to beer and wine and proposes a fake vote. The laws of the country provide the way in which the sentiment of the people shall be registered; and in the recent election the people of this country indorsed prohibition, and retained an overwhelmingly dry majority in both Houses of Congress. We do not need to fool with these fallacious attempts of such organizations as the National Liberal Alliance, created to raise money and not to accomplish any good thing; but I do want to read a letter written by the President of the United States within a few days to an organization in New York, and I shall put his statement up against the statement of such organizations as that of Mr. Harley and his National Liberal Alliance. This letter from the President was printed in the Washington Post this morning, and is confirmed by the White House to-day as an accurate statement of what the President wrote in response to those who sought an interview with him. A woman's club of New York wished to lay before the President their arguments in favor of a return to beer and wine and for repeal of the eighteenth amendment. In declining an interview President Harding said:

> Ordinarily I would receive any delegation on your suggestion, and I try to make it a rule to find time for an audience with any delegation whose members desire to present to the President a pressing problem of government. Frankly, however, I do not believe it would be an opportune time just now to receive a delegation which aims to give expression to its hostility to the eighteenth amendment. It is such a futile thing to expect the repeal of the amendment that I doubt the wisdom of giving an interview which can only result in controversial publicity and create a suspicion that the Federal Government is not in good faith endeavoring to enforce the prohibition laws.

The President appeals to us to stand back of law and order and the Constitution. The vote here which comes next Monday is only for the purpose of creating suspicion and doubt in the minds of the people of this country. No one who believes in law, order, and the Constitution should pay any attention to this "phony" enterprise. Let them get their money from those who are not interested in law, order, and the Constitution. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS—DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

FOREST SERVICE.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase a gasoline motor boat in the administration of the Alaskan forests to replace boat sunk by striking rocks in Sumner Strait, $8,500.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, if these motor boats are insured.

Mr. MADDEN. No; the Government does not insure its boats.

Mr. WATSON. How about the Shipping Board boats?

Mr. MADDEN. The Shipping Board has an insurance fund, and they pay their losses out of that fund.

Mr. WATSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

COOPERATIVE CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS.

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of such act as amended, $25,000,000, to remain available until expended, being part of the sum of $50,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, by paragraph 1 of section 4 of the act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1923, approved June 19, 1922: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall act upon projects submitted to him under his apportionment of such authorization of $50,000,000, and his approval of any such project within three years shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of its proportional contribution thereto: Provided further, That the appropriations heretofore and hereafter made for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of such act of July 11, 1916, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, shall be considered available for the purpose of discharging the obligations created by the approval of projects.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBSION: Page 6, line 3, strike out the figures "$25,000,000"; also strike out all of the remainder of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$50,000,000 to remain available until expended, being the sum of $50,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, being paragraph 1 of section 4 of the act making appropriations for the fiscal year 1923, approved June 19, 1922," so that the paragraph, as amended, shall read as follows:

COOPERATIVE CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS.

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of such act as amended, $50,000,000, to remain available until expended, being the sum of $50,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, by paragraph 1 of section 4 of the act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1923, approved June 19, 1922.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that if the gentleman strikes out all after the $25,000,000, in line 3, his amendment does not restore the language embraced in what he says would be the paragraph, because he has stricken it out and he does not reinsert it.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, early in 1922 the House passed a bill authorizing $65,000,000 for the present fiscal year and $75,000,000 for the next fiscal year to aid the States in the construction of good roads. That bill was adopted by the House by a vote of something like 8 to 1. It went to the Senate and was cut down by the Senate to $50,000,000 and $65,000,000, respectively. It was the intention of the House, and I am sure the sentiment of the country, not to cut the road appropriation any less than the sums fixed by the Senate. I know it will be argued by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that this is not being done, but I want to say to my colleagues it is being done. There can be no other construction placed upon the action of the Appropriations Committee. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. MADDEN], the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, will tell you that in this bill they are proposing to appropriate $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000, and they will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make contracts with the States for roads for the other $25,000,000, and also make available any balances in the Treasury now due the various States for the payment of claims that may be presented by other States. But when we do that we borrow from the States that have not used their part of the road money, and it must be repaid. The deficiency bill before us appropriates $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000 heretofore authorized by the Congress. The amendment which I have just offered proposes to appropriate the other $25,000,000 of that $50,000,000 so as to make the $50,000,000 available for road construction this year and until it is expended, and I think my amendment should be adopted.

A few days ago we passed the Agricultural appropriation bill. In that bill we appropriated $30,000,000 of the $65,000,000 authorized for roads for the year 1924. In that bill no mention was made of the $50,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for this year. The Appropriations Committee up to that time had entirely ignored the mandate of Congress authorizing $50,000,000 for roads this year. When this was discovered by the friends of good roads they got busy, and $25,000,000 of this $50,000,000 was put in this deficiency bill. Although Congress has authorized $50,000,000 and $65,000,000, respectively, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and June 30, 1924; you will observe that the Appropriations Committee is attempting to appropriate only $25,000,000 and $30,000,000, respectively. You will remember that the chairman [Mr. MADDEN] said a little while ago if we appropriate the $25,000,000 carried in this bill and the $30,000,000 carried in the bill which we passed a few days ago that there would be no more appropriations for roads until 1925. If that is true, then you lose the authorization for $25,000,000 this year and you lose the $35,000,000 for next year.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield? Of course, the gentleman from Kentucky does not want to convey the idea——

Mr. ROBSION. I will cover the gentleman's point in a moment.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think the gentleman knows what I was going to say.

Mr. ROBSION. The bill passed a few days ago and this bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into contracts for road construction with the States to the amount of the $25,000,000 and the $35,000,000. In doing this you merely string out and extend what we have already authorized. In other words, if you take $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000 that was authorized for this year and extend it over into the fiscal year of 1924, then you have lost it so far as the sum total for road construction is concerned. If you take the $35,000,000 of the $65,000,000 authorized for the year of 1924 and extend it into the fiscal year of 1925, you lose the $35,000,000 for the road program for 1924. You gentlemen mark my words, you gentlemen who will be here in 1925, instead of having the $50,000,000 and the $65,000,000 for the fiscal years of 1923 and 1924, you will find that they will string out the $50,000,000 and $65,000,000 into the years of 1924 and 1925 and, unless the friends of good roads get active, there will be no more authorization or appropriations for roads other than what was authorized for 1923 and 1924 until 1925.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBSION. I ask to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION. I make that statement predicated on the statement of Mr. McDonald, the director of roads, that the policy that has been pursued by the Congress is cutting down the road-building program of the country. Under the unfavorable conditions during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, Federal aid amounting to $109,000,000 was matched by the States, and for the fiscal year ending 1921 Federal aid of nearly $85,000,000 was matched by the States. For the year ending June 30, 1922, only $49,000,000 of Federal aid was put up, and the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, only about $50,000,000 of Federal aid will be used and matched by the States, although Mr. MacDonald, the director of roads, states that $100,000,000 could have been used by the States if the money had been available at the proper time. What is the cause of this cutting down of the road program of the country? It is due to the delay and obstruction offered in the Congress and by the Congress. For instance the $75,000,000 provided for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, was not appropriated until the month of November, 1921, after the road-building season was over. It requires months to provide and prepare road projects and let the contracts. The road program of the 48 States is so large and complicated that in order to carry the program out successfully and fully the States must know six months or a year in advance what to expect. The plans must go ahead of the actual building and expenditure of the money from 12 months to 18 months. This great program can not be carried on by dribs or makeshifts. It is unwise to follow a hand-to-mouth policy as it seems to me is being attempted by the Appropriations Committee.

GOOD ROADS v. SHIP SUBSIDY.

It is argued that we must conserve the Treasury. I certainly do not favor the useless expenditure of a single dollar. I want to cut down the expenses of the Government to the lowest minimum; but a little, jerky, niggardly policy in the road-building program of our country is a false economy. The good roads law that we passed some time ago provides for a great system of interstate, intercounty highways, comprising 185,000,000 miles, which when completed will practically tie up and unite every county seat and center of population in the 48 States, and further provides for the constant upkeep and maintenance of this great system of highways. All have agreed that this will be of great economic value to the country. If this be true, why delay the enjoyment thereof? Already about 25,000 miles of this system have been completed, and if the Congress provides $100,000,000 per year of Federal aid the entire system can be completed in about 10 years, but if we only provide $50,000,000 per year it will require 20 years to complete this system. Nothing could add more to the wealth and prosperity of the Nation or to its national defense than a great system of highways like is contemplated, but we are told by the proponents of this bill that the States can not use the $100,000,000 or even $50,000,000 per year, and are attempting to appropriate the money in small dribs to meet this program.

A few days ago we had before the House—and it passed the House—a bill known as the ship subsidy bill. That bill proposes to pay certain shipowners a "bonus" or "subsidy" in the operation of their ships, and, of course, in addition to the regular freight and passenger rates charged by them. We are collecting on import duties now about $500,000,000 per year. The ship subsidy bill proposes to take one-tenth of that sum every year and for 10 years and place it in a fund to pay these shipowners these subsidies. Under that bill that money will not even go into the Treasury, but something like $500,000,000 will go into the Shipping Board fund. A 10-year program at something like $50,000,000 per year, and these shipowners receive certain exemptions on their income taxes and other indirect benefits. All of which may amount to as much as $600,000,000 or more in 10 years. It is not claimed that the "ship subsidy" will create new cargoes or increase the amount of cargoes. This subsidy is not necessary to create ships to carry our goods. We already have three times as many ships as are necessary.

The war caused all of these nations to build a large number of merchant ships. Our merchant fleet cost us between $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000. There is a much larger shipping tonnage than is necessary to carry the cargoes. If the ship subsidy would mean all to this country that its most enthusiastic proponents claim, it could not compare in benefit to the American people with what this system of highways will mean to the people. Its benefits will extend to every nook and corner of the 48 States, yet the shipowners are provided with finances for 10 years for their subsidy, while the roads are denied a complete program for a year. The roads must wait until the money has been obligated and expended, and then we must come, hat in hand, and say we want a small appropriation for roads.

It is true that some of the States have not used their quota of the road fund. This bill proposes to borrow from those States and pay off the claims of the States that have used up their quota of Federal funds, but we must not forget that one of these days these States that have not used their Federal funds will use them and the money will have to be paid back to them by the Federal Government. We are merely robbing Peter to pay Paul. But the ship subsidy must have a 10-year program. The road program can wait.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman from Kentucky hear the speech of my colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN] the other day giving the result of his investigations about this matter, wherein he said that he felt perfectly satisfied on the situation?

Mr. ROBSION. He is perfectly satisfied to this extent: We will have money to run the road program this year all right, because here are New York and some other States that have not used their Federal aid money and it is now in the Treasury, and in one of the provisions of this bill they authorize that money to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to pay the claims of States that have used up their Federal money and for which no appropriation has been made to continue their road program; but my point is this, you are merely borrowing here. You must pay it back, and in this way we are only using $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000 authorized for this year, and $30,000,000 of the $65,000,000 authorized for next year. In that way you are cutting down the road program of the Nation at least $60,000,000 for this year and next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there an objection?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman state how much is in the Treasury at the present time already appropriated for road construction?

Mr. ROBSION. I have read the hearings over and over, and I think there are about $139,000,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there not $139,000,000 in the Treasury appropriated for this purpose, and is it not also true that Mr. MacDonald stated in the hearings before the committee that $25,000,000 will run them until December 1, 1923, which is several months after this year's appropriation ends?

Mr. ROBSION. The gentleman is undertaking to ask a question and then answer it.

Mr. DOWELL. Is not that true?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes; Mr. MacDonald said that if we would give him $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000 authorized for this year and then permit him to take the money in the Treasury due to New York, Tennessee, and other States, but which has not been used by them, and use that money, they can go along all right. But here is the point: You are not adding anything to your road program but you are taking away what the House voted. In November Mr. MacDonald testified before the committee that they wanted an immediate appropriation of $50,000,000, the amount of money authorized by the Congress for this year, and $30,000,000 of the $65,000,000 authorized for the fiscal year of 1924 and before the 1st of January, 1924, to appropriate the other $35,000,000. I contend that this Congress went on record almost unanimously in authorizing that $50,000,000 be appropriated for the present fiscal year and $65,000,000 for the next fiscal year. The Congress did not authorize us to string it out and add to it by using some of the money due some of the other States.

Mr. BURTNESS. Are there States that do not expect to use their quota for each year?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. If there are, then why the appropriation for the full amount suggested?

Mr. ROBSION. If you do not get it now, you will never get the $25,000,000 for the roads of this country.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes, you will.

Mr. ROBSION. Oh, I know you will get some money next year, but then we have the $65,000,000 authorized for that year and you will wipe out this $25,000,000, the balance of the $50,000,000 authorized for this year and which is covered by my amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Will you not get it as soon as you can use it?

Mr. ROBSION. No; Mr. MacDonald says the road program of the country has been repressed by the action of Congress and cut in two, in half. He further says instead of spending $49,000,000 in 1922 and $50,000,000 for 1923, but for the action of Congress the States could have used and have absorbed judiciously $100,000,000 of Federal aid.

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman's amendment strikes out both provisos in the paragraph in which he seeks to amend, but does not restore either one of them. It occurs to me that at least the first proviso is a very important one. What has the gentleman to say as to restoring that proviso?

Mr. ROBSION. Do you want to embark on the policy of borrowing the Federal aid money from one State to pay the Federal aid due another State?

Mr. ROACH. No.

Mr. ROBSION. If you want to do anything for the States that are not going to use their money, put them on terms; but what is attempted to be done here, in my judgment, is to adopt a plan to cut down the sum total for road construction in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. If we appropriate the money now before we need it, the Treasury will have to have it and will have to pay interest probably for it, whereas if the States are not going to use it, and if we do not need it just now, we will save the interest on that money by not having to pay it.

Mr. ROBSION. You will save $25,000,000 and $35,000,000 from going into the highways of the country. That is what you will save. In addition to former appropriations, this House went on record nearly eight to one authorizing $50,000,000 for this year and $65,000,000 for next year, after the Senate had cut down the House bill from $65,000,000 and $75,000,000 to these sums, and as one of the advocates of good roads in the House I want to see this $50,000,000 appropriated for this year and $65,000,000 for next year, and will not be satisfied with the $25,000,000 for this year and $30,000,000 for next year. I favor at least $100,000,000 of Federal aid per year for the next 10 years until the great system of interstate and intercounty highways heretofore authorized by Congress is completed.

RAILROADS FIGHTING FEDERAL AID FOR ROADS.

I am convinced that there is a concerted movement on, both in Congress and out, to hamper and obstruct the Federal aid road program. Some of the railroads of the country have become active in this fight against Federal aid. There are now millions of motor vehicles carrying passengers and freight, and this has provoked the jealousy of many railroads. Some of the railroads are putting out literature denouncing the use of these motor vehicles. I find the following in a booklet put out by one of the railroads:

> The railroads and their patrons have a great deal at stake in the growing use of motor vehicles for commercial purposes and the extension of hard-road systems to cover the whole country. Indeed, it is an important problem, and one which deserves urgent attention.
> The legitimate function of the highway is, first, the accommodation of private owners of vehicles for their individual pleasure or business. They are not designed or intended as permanent roadbeds for transportation business and should not be depended upon to fulfill that function.

One of the very great problems of the times is how to feed, clothe, and warm the people of this country. This problem will become more pressing as the years come and go. We need everything that can be produced. The producers and the consumers must be brought together. Fruit, vegetables, and other products are going to waste in great quantities in many sections of the country while countless thousands want for food, clothing, and heat. The producer and consumer are brought together by means of transportation. Transportation is carried on by railroads, by water, and by highways.

The most important of these is the highways of the country. They penetrate all sections of the country and extend to the producing centers, and are the means by which the products are brought to the railroads, the water, and consuming centers. If people are to be attracted to the farms, the rural communities must be made more attractive by good roads. Good roads will produce better farms and better farmers, better schools, better churches, and better homes, and it will mean more to the national defense than a standing army. I can not understand the viewpoint of gentlemen who are willing to vote hundreds of millions out of the Treasury for railroads and ship subsidies and oppose Federal aid in the development of the highways of the Nation. I favor a great American merchant marine, but I opposed the ship subsidy bill that was passed by the House because, in my opinion, it will not produce or maintain a merchant marine, and under the provisions of that bill the merchant fleet which cost our Government more than $3,000,000,000 will be sold to shipping syndicates or trusts made up of a few rich men for $200,000,000 or less. There is no market now for ships, and if we attempt to sell them we will not realize as much as 15 cents on the dollar of their cost. It will not mean cheaper transportation rates by ocean, but under that bill, in my judgment, we will pay to these shipowners $50,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States annually for the next 10 years and give them other direct benefits amounting to $10,000,000 per year. The countries of the world that have the best merchant marine pay little or no subsidies. Great Britain, that has by far the greatest merchant marine in the world, does not pay in excess of $2,500,000 per year as a subsidy. Italy and France pay the highest subsidies and neither of them has a merchant marine equal to little Norway, that pays no subsidy. Two reasons have been assigned for granting subsidies to these shipowners: First, the high cost of construction of American ships; and, second, the high wages. No one contends that the persons who buy our ships will pay more than 15 cents on the dollar of the cost; and, of course, this knocks out the question of high cost, and it has been shown that a British ship of equal size with an American ship pays practically the same wages as an American ship, and whatever sum we vote for a ship subsidy will benefit the American shipper but little, if anything. Railroad rates are so high that they have crippled many industries of this country. The greatest means of transportation for the American people is our highways, and I favor less subsidies for ships and less appropriations for railroads and more money for good roads.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] is unduly alarmed. There is no disposition anywhere to cut out any provision for road building anywhere in the United States. We not only appropriate $25,000,000 in this bill but $30,000,000 in the Agricultural bill, and we propose to take the money that is now lying idle allotted to the States and permit it to be used without taking any rights away from any State. Now, what would be the result of the gentleman's contention? It would be that if there was only one State in the Union that required money to carry out its obligations that you would have to appropriate for every other State in the Union whether it needed it or not. Say that we only needed a million dollars to pay to the State of Kentucky and you wanted to appropriate the money for that obligation, you could not do it without appropriating a million dollars to each of the other 47 States. Now, we are trying to simplify the problem, and instead of having three or four hundred million dollars lie idle in the Treasury allotted to the States we are giving to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to make the allotments to the States as the law provides——

Mr. MCKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will kindly not interrupt me until I finish this statement—as the law provides and under which they are permitted to make contract obligations to the full extent of the allotment. But we propose instead of having 48 accounts, one with each State in the Union, to create one single account against which checks may be drawn to pay the obligations of any State under the contract obligation for road building. That will leave the funds for road building liquid. Now, we have a ship-building program, we entered upon it in 1916, and under that program we agreed to build a certain number of capital ships and other ships, and we made an initial appropriation of several hundred million dollars, but we did not set aside a certain amount for each ship. Whatever we appropriated we appropriated in a general fund, that general fund to be used for the payment of any bill for any work done on any ship. That is what we propose to do now. It is the simple, businesslike way to do it. There never was any sense in the plan that we have had in existence. It only resulted in turmoil; it did not expedite the road construction in any State where they did not want to build the roads, but it did retard the State that did want to build roads, because it could only go as far as the allotment was subject to an appropriation. Now, any State that does not want to proceed loses no right in the matter of allotment, and the State which does is not retarded by the States that do not do any work. So here we are. We are establishing a modern business method to take the place of the antiquated system that we have had in existence. [Applause.] And we are not only doing that but we are taking out of the Treasury a lot of money that was set aside for the purposes for which it is not being used, and we are putting it into active use on the roads of the States that want to use it, and while we are doing that we are not taking any rights of those other States away. On the other hand, we are preserving every right that they have under the law by saying that the money allotted shall be subject to contract over a period of three years, and this money allotted or appropriated shall be subject to draft against the funds for a period of three years, whereas it only exists for one now under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. And I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky will not prevail, but that we will adopt a modern, simple, systematic method of conducting the Government's business and wipe out the antiquated system that is now in existence.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there has not been a more consistent friend of road improvement than I have been since I have been a Member of the Congress. I have supported every proposition looking to the improvement of roads, and would not support any proposition which might result in delaying the improvement of roads, but I am satisfied that my friend from Kentucky is unduly alarmed over the situation. If his amendment is adopted it simply means that we will take $25,000,000 more out of the pockets of the people at this time and pile it up in the Treasury not to be used possibly for a year and a half or two years, according to the statement of Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. ROBSION. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For a brief question.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, if this $25,000,000, and the other $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000, no action taken until 1924 and for 1924, and then the other $35,000,000 of the $65,000,000 authorization, no action taken until 1925, will not the sum total for road improvement of the country be cut down if it is extended out and lengthened out to a subsequent year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I do not think so by any means, because, as the gentleman from Illinois stated, if the gentleman's amendment is adopted it will not be used; it can not be used according to the statement of the director of public roads. Now, here is what he said.

Mr. ROBSION. Will the gentleman yield further, please?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield for a brief question.

Mr. ROBSION. Now, if you do not use, or in a sense borrow or take away the money due from the States that have not used any, would you not have to have the whole $50,000,000?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, we might for two States, but why keep in the Treasury $139,000,000, lying there idle, merely because in two or three years certain States will need their proper proportion of that amount? Congress is going to be in session and will make the necessary appropriation when it is needed because, under this bill and under the road act, it is made a legal obligation of the Government.

Now, here is what Mr. MacDonald said to the committee, and the committee acted in accordance with Mr. MacDonald's statement and his request. He says: "We believe that it is not necessary to appropriate at this time the entire $50,000,000, but if the entire sum of $50,000,000 is not appropriated at this time we are concerned that provision shall be made to authorize the Secretary to approve projects following the end of this fiscal year which will not allow any of the 1923 authorizations to lapse," and the committee has incorporated in this bill and recommended to the House the very provision that the director of public roads drafted to the committee and asked them to insert in the bill in order to preserve the authorization for 1923.

Now, more than that, Mr. MacDonald says this:

Mr. MACDONALD. Under the act carrying the previous appropriations the amounts which were available for each year were apportioned to the individual States, as prescribed in the law, and each State's account has been carried as a single account. After the fund has once been divided into 48 parts we have carried 48 separate accounts; so, although a large Treasury balance appears, if the balances in the 48 accounts are brought together into one total, there are States which have exhausted, or have practically exhausted, their individual funds. This makes it necessary for us to come to Congress to ask for an additional appropriation, while there are still apparently large Treasury balances available.

The CHAIRMAN. If we should make appropriations under the old system, we would have to appropriate to each State?

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not care to make any remarks of my own about this, but I do want to call attention to what Mr. MacDonald says about the matter. Mr. MacDonald further states:

The CHAIRMAN. And it would not be necessary for you to modify the rule——

Mr. MACDONALD (interposing). If the language is now modified so that the Treasury balances are available for meeting obligations as they mature, without regard to the balances in the accounts of the individual States, then it would not be necessary to ask for additional appropriations by Congress until the Treasury balances have been drawn down to a point reasonably near the point of exhaustion; that is, it will only be necessary to carry a reasonable balance to cover the period between sessions of Congress. That would mean that our future policy would be based upon two distinct lines of action: The first would be the authorization for the program of road development, under which the Secretary of Agriculture would be authorized to contract with the States, and that program would be carried out ahead of the actual appropriation. There is a lag of from 6 months to 18 months between the time the authorization is made and the time the funds are actually needed to pay for the work accomplished; so that it would not interfere with the efficiency of our work if we have a program authorized for, say, a three-year period in advance without an appropriation. We would then come to Congress for an appropriation to cover the authorizations as the work is completed or as the States made demands upon the department for payment for work actually completed.

Mr. BYRNS. Would that plan of making the prior appropriations available as a general fund militate in any way against any State which did not need its part of this fund, in so far as its allotment of prior appropriations is concerned?

Mr. MACDONALD. Not in any way.

Mr. BYRNS. In other words, no State would be deprived of its proportion of the appropriations or of prior appropriations?

Mr. MACDONALD. There is absolutely only one question involved, and that is simply the necessary action by the Congress. Having directed the Secretary to apportion the funds and to enter into contracts with the States, there is the necessity of making the appropriation when the States shall actually need the money.

Now, in addition to that, gentlemen, Mr. MacDonald made this statement:

Mr. MACDONALD. We are asking $25,000,000, as this must carry us over until next December.

The CHAIRMAN. That will carry you through until December, 1923?

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That would take in a part of the fiscal year 1924?

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. $25,000,000 would be all that would be needed in addition to what is provided in the regular annual bill?

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes, sir; and the probabilities are that if the legislation proposed is enacted, we will not have to come to Congress for any further appropriation before the fiscal year 1925, but it will be necessary to request authority for the Secretary to apportion the authorization of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year 1925 when the regular Budget is considered for that year.

Now, as has been stated, on December 1 there was in the Treasury $139,000,000 to the credit of the road fund. The regular annual bill carried $30,000,000 in round numbers for the next fiscal year, and we are appropriating on this bill $25,000,000 with full authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to make authorizations so as to preserve the rights of the States under the road act.

Now, if gentlemen wish to pile up money in the Treasury and add to the appropriation bills, you can do so by adopting this amendment. But, gentlemen, I submit that under the circumstances and under the statement of the director we ought not to adopt this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

BUREAU OF LIGHTHOUSES.

Damage claims: To pay the claims adjusted and determined by the Department of Commerce under the provisions of section 4 of the act approved June 17, 1910 (36 Stat. p. 537), on account of damage occasioned to private property by collision with vessels of the Lighthouse Service and for which the vessels of the Lighthouse Service were responsible, certified to the present Congress in House Document No. 489, $653.15.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 7, after line 4, insert the following:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

"BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

"Fort Sill Apache Indians, Oklahoma: For the relief of and purchase of land for certain of the Apache Indians of Oklahoma confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation and authorized by the act of September 21, 1922, $42,500."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of that amendment I wish to say that by act of Congress approved September 21, 1922, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized and directed to continue relief to the Apache Indians of Oklahoma, lately confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, for their subsistence and for the purchase of land for their settlement thereon, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War.

And there was authorized in that act to be appropriated $42,500, to be made immediately available. The appropriation has never been made. The question did not come to the Committee on Appropriations soon enough to have it incorporated in the report of the committee, and hence the amendment which is just offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS OBJECTS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

For the payment of costs taxed in the Supreme Court against the United States in the case of R. E. Kennington and others against A. Mitchell Palmer and others (October term, 1921), $49.65.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, these items that we have just read are all bona fide deficiency items and properly come on a deficiency bill.

A short while ago I called attention to the fact that this Sixty-seventh Congress in six deficiency bills, counting this as the sixth, has appropriated $417,191,322.37. It was admitted this morning by the Treasury Department official appearing before a committee of Congress that there is to-day a Treasury deficit of $273,000,000. If we could get paid the interest due this Government on the $11,000,000,000 of foreign indebtedness, we would stop having any deficit of $273,000,000, or any other deficit.

I am sure that the people of the United States of America were astounded yesterday when they found out for the first time that the governor of the Bank of England, Mr. Montague Collet Norman, had secretly appeared in the capital of this Nation eight months ago and spent two weeks here, and as a member of the debt-funding commission of England had had various conferences with the President of the United States and with certain particular members of his official family—two or three Cabinet officers. And the people doubtless were also astounded when they learned yesterday that not a single member of our debt-funding commission appointed under authorization of this Congress had been taken into any of these conferences or had even been granted any knowledge of the secret appearance in this country of this great official, the governor of the Bank of England. I want to say that unless the membership of this Congress keep on the alert and unless we keep up in the pit of this House a continual fight against the insidious propaganda being carried on all over this Nation for the cancellation of our $11,000,000,000 of foreign indebtedness, sooner or later it is going to pass beyond our reach, and some unauthorized agreement is going to be made on behalf of this Government by some official of this Government that is going to wipe out beyond our power of recovery all of this $11,000,000,000 of sacred funds of the people, raised by the people through their borrowing of money from banks in order to purchase Liberty bonds to send this great sum of money across the water. The people of the United States are going to demand that this money be paid back, and they are not going to stand for these menacing secret conferences that are being carried on all over the country. Every day we read in the paper where some man of great importance in this Nation leaves his post of duty and goes far across the continent to speak in behalf of the cancellation of the foreign debts due to this Government. It is just a part of the insidious propaganda that is being carried on in this country for the cancellation of this debt. Every Member of this Congress who is not in favor of the cancellation of that debt ought to keep this matter alive before the people, and the people of the United States ought to know what is going on in this Nation about this sacred fund. Whenever you keep knowledge of the people's business away from the people, then the people lose confidence in their representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I presume we are all of us very much pleased, indeed, to notice that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] gives his approval to the action of the administration. There is no possible doubt about what the attitude of the administration is. The President, as well as members of the Cabinet, has declared that there would be no consideration of a proposition to cancel our foreign debts. The gentleman seems to think there is something very alarming about the fact that a representative of the Bank of England came over here secretly for the purpose of interviewing members of the administration. Well, suppose that is true. It is very significant, Mr. Chairman, that as a result of that interview, after that representative presumably had made his report to the English Government, the English Government commenced paying the United States the interest on the debt that it owes us. [Applause.] That is a sufficient answer to any query that there might be in the mind of any gentleman with regard to the information which that English representative obtained from the officials of the United States Government. The Congress of the United States, both the House and Senate, the President of the United States, the representatives of the United States in foreign lands, all those who have had anything to do with the proposition or who have given any expression of the attitude of the United States, all those charged with any responsibility whatever in the United States with regard to our foreign debt, have made repeated statements to the effect that this Government expects the payment of the foreign debt with interest. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who is a member of our Debt Funding Commission, did not keep his visit abroad secret. He let it be known to the world what he was there for, what he was doing, what he was talking about. He did not keep it secret from any person.

Mr. TOWNER. No; he went officially. The other gentleman did not come officially, so far as we know.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918, $89.16.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 8, line 7, after the figures "1918," strike out "$89.16" and insert in lieu thereof the following: $9,000,089.16: Provided, That of this amount $9,000,000 shall be expended for the immediate prosecution of such of the 172,349 cases pending on June 30, 1922, in the United States courts, and instituted by the United States, which still remain on the court dockets."

Mr. MADDEN. I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a few moments?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I will not object to the gentleman getting time to speak; but I think this amendment is so ridiculous that it ought to go out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. One of the best commendations of the amendment I have just offered was given by the gentleman from Texas just now when he said it was ridiculous. In support of that amendment, which I regret was ruled out on a point of order, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the hearings on this bill, at page 124, and I desire to read to the committee a portion of those hearings. I think the hearings disclose a situation in this country which should call for an immediate appropriation for the Department of Justice. If I erred in the selection of a proper place to offer this amendment for the appropriation of the $9,000,000, I shall offer it later in another place. I read from the hearings as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Will there be more marshals needed on account of the new judges?
Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, sir; we will have to have more deputy marshals.
Mr. KENNARD. There is also an increase in the business.
Mr. HOLLAND. There is a very large increase in the business.
The CHAIRMAN. What is that occasioned by?
Mr. KENNARD. By greater judicial activities; a larger number of cases commenced, principally under the national prohibition act.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean that the national prohibition act caused that increase of business?
Mr. KENNARD. It has been one of the contributing causes, and the heavy contributing cause.
The CHAIRMAN. How many cases are pending in court now?
Mr. HOLLAND. Do you mean prohibition cases?
The CHAIRMAN. I would not ask for that, but what is the total number of cases?
Mr. KENNARD. I can state the number of prohibition cases commenced, terminated, or pending, as you may prefer.
The CHAIRMAN. Give it in all its phases.
Mr. KENNARD. The number of cases under the national prohibition act commenced during the fiscal year 1922 was as follows: Civil, 2,157; criminal, 34,984; and the collections on account of the litigation were $2,376,305. The number of cases terminated under the national prohibition act or disposed of during the fiscal year 1922 was as follows: Civil, 1,537; and criminal, 28,743.
The CHAIRMAN. Those are cases pending?
Mr. KENNARD. Those are cases terminated or disposed of.
Mr. KELLEY. In what time?
Mr. KENNARD. In one fiscal year.
Mr. KELLEY. There were commenced 34,000 and there were closed out 28,000 cases, so that you are just about keeping up.
Mr. KENNARD. We are not quite keeping up.
The CHAIRMAN. What is the state of the calendar of the courts now?
Mr. KENNARD. They are very seriously congested. The total number of cases pending at the close of the year was 172,000.
The CHAIRMAN. How does that number compare with the number in the prior years?
Mr. KENNARD. It is 30,000 more than were pending at the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921.
The CHAIRMAN. How many cases were instituted during the period that you have just referred to in each year?
Mr. KENNARD. Under the national prohibition act?
The CHAIRMAN. Are you just talking about prohibition cases?
Mr. KENNARD. No, sir; I was referring to all cases.
The CHAIRMAN. I am referring to all cases. That is what we want.
Mr. KENNARD. There were 172,349 cases pending on June 30, 1922; 142,402 cases pending at the end of the previous year; and 118,000 cases pending at the close of the year previous to that. The increase in the business has been approximately 20 or 25 per cent per annum expressed in case units, whereas the increased expense has been only 1.6 per cent for the previous year and nine-tenths of 1 per cent for the fiscal year 1922.
The CHAIRMAN. What about 1923?
Mr. KENNARD. The information for 1923 is incomplete, and we could not make any calculation on that at the present time.
Mr. HARRIS. We give that by fiscal years.
The CHAIRMAN. So you can not tell us about 1923.
Mr. KENNARD. No, sir.

Mr. Chairman, we should at once appropriate the money to clean up the 172,349 cases pending on the dockets of the Federal courts.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that these cases could be cleaned up without the necessity of an appropriation if the President would take advantage of the authority given him last September to appoint additional district judges, which the gentleman from Maryland said at the time there was urgent need for?

Mr. HILL. No; I voted against the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman's party voted for it.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Damage claims: To pay the claims adjusted and determined by the Navy Department under the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911, on account of damages occasioned to private property by collisions with vessels of the United States Navy and for which naval vessels were responsible, certified to the present Congress in House Document No. 496, $6,969.46.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. I will say that I know that it is not in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, after line 17, insert:

MARINE CORPS.

To pay Maj. Russell B. Putnam, assistant paymaster, United States Marine Corps, to cover the loss sustained by him through the embezzlement of such amount of Government funds by Robert H. Rudolph, pay clerk, United States Marine Corps, in 1915, while serving as pay clerk to the said Major Putnam, at Marine Barracks, Philadelphia, Pa., and on expeditionary duty in the West Indies, and which amount Major Putnam was required to and did deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, $2,173.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am thankful for that much. I confess that this amendment is out of order, but I am endeavoring to do what I think is right to obtain justice for an injured man. I would like to have that amendment attached to some vehicle which is likely to reach the station and not be thrown off at the switch. Here are the facts with their unusual merit: A private bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and this claim has been reported on favorably by every tribunal that has examined the facts for the last four or five years. Never was there a case of more positive injustice done to an individual coming to my notice since I have been a Member of this House, 25 years. I believe in observing the rules, but there are occasions when they might be set aside in order to do absolute square justice between the Government and an individual. This bill has unusual merit in it and the injury demands immediate redress.

I will not take up much of your time. This officer bears the grade of major and is a paymaster in the distinguished corps of the United States marines. He is a man who has been used for all kinds of service. He has been highly commended for distinguished valor in battle. He has been used everywhere that an officer might be used. When line officers were few in number the department has called upon him to perform service on the firing line. He has been commended time and time again for heroism in battle.

Repeating, he was at the time of the occurrence complained of a paymaster and is now a paymaster, and without invitation from him, I understand, the Government appointed and assigned to him a clerk who robbed him. This is a historical case. He was paymaster at the Philadelphia Navy Yard. The department sent him off on an expedition and left the clerk in charge, and during his absence the clerk robbed him of $1,200. That was in 1915. After that he was sent on another expedition, and the same clerk robbed him of $400. This same clerk fixed up the books in such an expert manner that the robbery was only discovered after accountants had gone over the books and after the officer had left the navy yard. For a man who knows how to do a job well I commend this same paymaster clerk.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand there are about 100 claims of that sort by gentlemen which have been approved by the War Department now pending before the Committee on Claims, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is chairman. Does the gentleman think it would be fair to pick out one of them and pass it?

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to say that if the gentleman knew of the hardship in this case I think he would be in favor of immediate relief. I know it is subject to a point of order. Friends came to this paymaster's assistance and assisted him to pay the money into the Treasury. The thief was court-martialed and sentenced to jail. The paymaster endeavored to find a plan to make a lawful demand for reimbursement. The case was heard before an examining board appointed by the department while the paymaster was off on an expedition, I imagine, and the Court of Claims held that because he did not testify before this board but only submitted his accounts he lost his right before the Court of Claims, and he could not appeal the case because the amount was less than $3,000. I am glad that an opportunity is given me to speak in this man's favor, and care not who may interpose the rules of the House against it. I criticize no one for it. He can not appeal; he has not the funds so that the judgment might be overridden. Our whole committee examined the facts with great care as reported by the subcommittee, and any claim that can get by that subcommittee I will vouch for without ever looking at it. Any claim that can pass Mr. MILTON KRAUS and his colleagues is a good one and a hundred per cent white. There is no question but that this man was robbed, and there is no question at any time he was in any way careless or culpable. It required experts to discover that the embezzlement had been made.

Mr. GARNER. Who sent this man over there?

Mr. BUTLER. The department sent him, detailed him, and sent him into battle. He went cheerfully and performed acts of heroism.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman did not understand my question. Who sent the man over there who stole the money?

Mr. BUTLER. The department sent the man, and since this larceny from this officer they have revised the whole method of accounting of paymasters. They have brought about a complete change in the administration of affairs of these different paymasters. I mean the manner of keeping books. I want to repeat what I have said. This man needs this money and the Government owes the money to him. He has paid every dollar into the Treasury, and he was in no way culpable or responsible. He is a man who has as good a record as any man has ever had.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Was not the clerk placed there without the consent of the paymaster, under the civil-service rules?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I presume he was. I will say to my friend that since then the clerks are all bonded by the Government, so that the Government is protected, likewise the paymasters.

Mr. KNUTSON. He was an enlisted man.

Mr. BUTLER. My friend from Minnesota makes a suggestion. The man was unaccustomed to such duties, and while we have splendid men in the enlisted force, this man, in my judgment, had never had such experience as would justify his being placed there. It is said that he gambled. He was sentenced and put in jail, and then in order that there might be leniency shown to him, he promised to pay back. He was released and the Court of Claims held that he might have paid the money which he embezzled against the statement of this officer that he never had paid it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is entirely right. This amendment is subject to a point of order, and I must submit to the rule if applied, but I promise him, and I promise the rest of you, that I will use every effort within me to make this bill a law to reimburse this paymaster, and I will try to remain in Congress long enough to accomplish this result. The bill is on the calendar. It is unanimously reported by the committee. Hearings were held, experts were asked to testify, and I repeat to the credit of this man, that they have always found him honest and efficient. But what chance has this man in his struggle for justice with this bill on the Private Calendar, to be called at some indefinite time in the future? They say that they will consider it some day. Why, I would rather try to grow hair on a bald head than I would to try to pass this bill at this session of Congress. I know there are a number of such claims, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] says. Why are they not spoken of here, and why not some one speak for them if they have merit such as this one has? I certainly would not oppose them. Is there not anyone here who is ready and willing to speak for them? Of course, this bill must go out on the point of order, if it is made, but I thank the committee for its patience and its attention.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw it.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope he will; but I have endeavored only to do justice to this man in taking the time of the committee for 5 or 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, just a word. This bill was reported favorably from the committee of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is the distinguished chairman on December 30 last, four or five days ago. The bill under consideration is not an omnibus claims bill. It is a deficiency appropriation bill. If we adopt the practice of adding claims, and there are many on the Private Calendar of like merit to the one under consideration, this bill will be littered with private claims here or in the other body. I do not think it is good practice. I believe it is the understanding of the majority leader that a day is going to be set apart for the consideration of bills of this character unobjected to.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill was sent from the Navy Department in June last. I do not know the reason it was not reported sooner or action taken upon it by the Committee on Naval Affairs. If it had been it likely would have been reached before now, because this Congress has passed more private claims bills than any other Congress within my knowledge.

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin asks why this was not taken up before. I confess my inability to use the English language very well, but I have endeavored to say to this committee that this man has dogged the Court of Claims, and he has been refused a hearing. He paid the money over five years ago as an honest man would and like the man of honor that he is. Here is the explanation why he was not here earlier asking for justice from his countrymen. I want to promise my friend from Wisconsin that this measure will become a law, as I am sure my colleagues here will admit it should.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Morgan general ordnance depot, South Amboy, N. J., $300; for Pig Point ordnance reserve depot, Virginia, $3,000; for Middletown air intermediate depot, Middletown, Pa., $165,000; for Edgewood Arsenal, Edgewood, Md., $24,200; for Fitzsimons General Hospital, Denver, Colo., $1,500; for inland warehouses, Philadelphia, Pa., $575,000; in all, $769,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 16, after line 24, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"National Guard: During the fiscal year 1923, the cost of subsistence allowance for enlisted men of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard shall be chargeable to the appropriation for subsistence of the Army."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is not adopted, it will create a deficiency in the current year's appropriation for the support of the National Guard. When we passed the Regular Army appropriation bill for this current year we included the cost of subsistence of the instructors from the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard under the item of subsistence. Subsequently, on September 22 of last year, new legislation was passed by Congress which charged that appropriation directly to the National Guard. We had made no provision in the current appropriation for the National Guard for that purpose. Consequently, if we do not adopt this amendment at this time there will be no way for providing for the subsistence of these instructors of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any estimate of the amount of money required?

Mr. ANTHONY. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think I must say that there is no doubt about the merits of this case, and, so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, I am glad to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKENZIE: After line 24, following the amendment just adopted, insert:

"The expenditures authorized by Public Resolution No. 44, approved April 1, 1922, as modified by War Department appropriation act approved June 30, 1922, for the purchase of real estate to establish suitable burial places in Europe for American military dead, may, when title to such real estate can not be secured, be made instead for the acquisition of the exclusive rights of burial in perpetuity in such lands."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order until some explanation is made.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, House Resolution No. 44 was passed on April 1, 1922. It was a resolution reported from the Committee on Military Affairs authorizing the expenditure of $111,000 of the appropriations carried in the sundry civil bill for the purchase of lands in Europe for the burial of our soldiers, but it was found that in England, where our boys were buried, that under an act of Parliament passed in 1852 it was impossible to get a fee simple title. So then it was undertaken to get a title for burial purposes in perpetuity. The Comptroller of the Currency held that an appropriation made by Congress for the purpose of buying land in fee simple could not be expended for the purpose of taking over land for burial purposes in perpetuity, and this amendment simply provides that that appropriation made by Congress under the authorization from the Committee on Military Affairs may be carried out and become effective to take care of the bodies of our boys over there.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the deficiency subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has made a thorough investigation of this, and we find the facts as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] to be true. We would have reported this item from the Committee on Appropriations, but we felt that we had not the legislative jurisdiction to do it. As it had joint reference to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations felt that it was the proper function of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, requested the Military Committee to report it. If they had not done it, we would, but we wanted to concede their right. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask that the heading "National Cemetery" be put on the amendment, so that it may be distinguished.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the reservation of the point of order and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois as modified by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total audited claims, section 2, $1,267,449.36.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 33, after line 23, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. This act hereafter may be referred to as the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1923.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13615 had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I offer a privileged report carrying appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman fom Michigan, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, submits a privileged report on a bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13660) (Rept. No. 1326) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SUGAR EQUALIZATION BOARD.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture I submit a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution (H. Res. 475) requesting the President to transmit to the House of Representatives certain facts in his possession concerning the United States Sugar Equalization Board.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar.

EULOGIES.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, February 11, be set apart for the holding of memorial exercises on the life, character, and public services of my deceased predecessor, Hon. SAMUEL M. BRINSON, Member of Congress from the third North Carolina district.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. OLIVER for seven days.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 5, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

861. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, concerning the appropriations for the construction of rural post roads in cooperation with the States, the Federal administration of this work, and the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within or only partly within the national forest; to the Committee on Roads.

862. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, with a letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, amounting to $83,260.47, which have been submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury and require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 526); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

863. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a judgment rendered against the United States by the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting in admiralty, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato," approved February 18, 1922 (private act No. 28, Sixty-seventh Congress), which requires an appropriation for its payment, with a proviso that this judgment shall not be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired (H. Doc. No. 527); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

864. A communication from the President of the United States transmitting, with a letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, schedules of claims amounting to $110,339.61 allowed by the various divisions of the General Accounting Office, as covered by certificates of settlement (H. Doc. No. 528); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6754. Also, petition of C. C. Thomas (Navy) Post, No. 244, American Legion, San Francisco, Calif., urging support of the Navy Department's request for $6,000,000 appropriation for the Naval Reserve; also, petition of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, Calif., urging appropriations for an Army of 150,000 men and the necessary officers; to the Committee on Appropriations.

6755. Also, petition of the water users of the Strawberry Valley project, at Payson, Utah, relative to the time for repayment of construction charges on reclamation projects; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

6756. By Mr. TEN EYCK: An appeal to the civilized world made by Right Rev. Gregorius Khomishin, D. D. Ukrainian, Bishop of Stanislaviv, and others, at Lemberg, East Galicia, November 5, 1922, protesting against the exterminating policy of the Polish Government in East Galicia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 5, 1923.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, January 3, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the National Academy of Sciences, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the National Academy of Sciences for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none. The unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Utah, but I think we ought to have a quorum. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is not in the Chamber. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Brookhart	Caraway	Curtis
Bayard	Bursum	Couzens	Dial
Borah	Calder	Culberson	Dillingham
Brandegee	Capper	Cummins	Ernst
Fernald	Kendrick	Norbeck	Smoot
Fletcher	King	Norris	Spencer
France	Ladd	Oddie	Stanfield
George	La Follette	Overman	Sterling
Glass	Lenroot	Pepper	Sutherland
Harreld	Lodge	Phipps	Townsend
Harris	McCormick	Pittman	Trammell
Harrison	McCumber	Pomerene	Underwood
Heflin	McKellar	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Hitchcock	McKinley	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Johnson	McLean	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Robinson	Warren
Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sheppard	Watson
Kellogg	New	Smith	Weller

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily detained by reason of serious illness in his family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Utah will yield to me a moment, I would like to submit a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I think it will take but a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield for that purpose.

ABROGATION OF PANAMA CANAL AGREEMENTS.

Mr. LODGE. I report back favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 259) authorizing the President to abrogate the international agreement embodied in certain Executive orders relating to the Panama Canal, and I submit a report (No. 989) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. With the understanding that it will involve no considerable discussion, I would have no objection; but if considerable discussion should arise, I hope that the Senator will not press it.

Mr. LODGE. I have no intention of keeping it before the Senate if it leads to any general discussion. I can not conceive how it could. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

In 1904 temporary arrangements were made by ordinances and orders for the protection of the Canal Zone during the building of the canal. Those orders and ordinances were approved by Congress. The canal has been long finished, and it is desired, both by Panama and the United States, to put those ordinances and orders and some additional provisions into a treaty. The President does not feel able to make such a treaty unless Congress gives him authority to abrogate the pending orders, which were a temporary arrangement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that the joint resolution may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 259) authorizing the President to abrogate the international agreement embodied in certain Executive orders relating to the Panama Canal.

Whereas it is provided in the act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, "that all laws, orders, regulations, and ordinances adopted and promulgated in the Canal Zone by order of the President for the government and sanitation of the Canal Zone and the construction of the Panama Canal are hereby ratified and confirmed as valid and binding until Congress shall otherwise provide"; and

Whereas among the orders so ratified and confirmed as valid and binding are Executive orders, issued by the Secretary of War, by direction of the President, on December 3, December 6, and December 28, 1904, January 7, 1905, and January 5, 1911, in which were embodied the terms of an agreement reached between the Secretary of War and officials of the Panama Government to serve as a modus operandi during the construction of the canal; and

Whereas the purpose of the agreement in question has passed with the formal opening of the canal, and the agreement no longer provides an adequate basis for the adjustment of questions arising out of the relations between the Canal Zone authorities and the Government of Panama, and should be replaced by a more permanent agreement:

Resolved, etc., That the President be authorized to abrogate the international agreement embodied in the Executive orders issued as aforesaid, on December 3, December 6, and December 28, 1904, January 7, 1905, and January 5, 1911.

SEC. 2. That when the President shall exercise the authority hereby granted, such orders shall no longer be valid and binding, and the legal effect of these orders given to them by the said act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, shall be repealed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am compelled to object to the request on the ground that the bill has just come into the Senate and I believe it ought to be read. I noticed in the newspapers a day or two ago a great deal of comment as to the rapidity with which bills appropriating enormous sums were passed by the House without adequate opportunity being afforded to examine them. The members of the Committee on Appropriations, of course, are familiar with the pending bill but others of us are not. I have not had time to examine it; I want an opportunity to do so, and therefore I object.

Mr. SMOOT. The request made by me merely refers to the formal reading of the bill. If that be dispensed with, nevertheless every word of the bill will be read, and the Senator can follow it as it is read from the desk. I have merely asked that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that, but I want the bill to be read, as I desire to examine it. I object.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to say a word in the hope possibly that the Senator from Tennessee will withdraw his objection. If the bill is read formally, it will not be read again and will be open to amendment at any point or stage.

Mr. McKELLAR. That, at least, would give some of us who are not members of the Committee on Appropriations an opportunity to examine the bill. I think we might be privileged to look at it. I tried to get a copy of the bill last night, as did several others who wanted to examine it, but, as I understand, it was not even in print last night.

Mr. LODGE. Of course it may be read formally at the desk by the Secretary, but then there will be no other reading.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course not.

Mr. LODGE. And I think the formal reading by the Secretary at the desk will receive merely such attention as the formal reading of bills ordinarily receive.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that the practice which has grown up in the Senate of allowing the great appropriation bills to go through without any reading at all is a bad practice. We ought to know something about the measures which we are called upon to pass.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think we will save time if the Secretary will begin the reading of the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

MEMORIALS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I present memorials that were sent to me by a large number of American citizens remonstrating against the ratification of the treaty that is now pending in the Senate in regard to the Isle of Pines. I do not ask that all the names be printed in the RECORD, but that the body of one of the memorials be printed, so that it is available for the use of the Senate. The treaty is now before the Senate and the memorials should go to the table.

There being no objection, the memorials were ordered to lie on the table and the body of one was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the United States Senate:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, respectfully petition the President and Senate to take such action as may be required to make the Isle of Pines permanently a possession of the United States. By the treaty of Paris Spain ceded the island to this country in 1898. President McKinley thereupon placed it on the official maps of the United States, and the War Department informed intending settlers that it was our territory; as a result the Isle of Pines has become a distinctively American colony, citizens of the United States owning over 95 per cent of the land and constituting a majority of the population.

When the Cuban Republic was established, the Isle of Pines was omitted from its constitutional boundaries; yet, against the protest of its inhabitants, a treaty, surrendering the island to Cuba, was negotiated eight years ago. This treaty the United States Senate patriotically refused to ratify, and we now ask that a new agreement be negotiated with Cuba confirming the title of the United States to the Isle of Pines.

We refuse to believe that our Government after officially promoting on its own territory a colony of its citizens will deliberately abandon that colony to the control of an alien people, who have not yet demonstrated their capacity to govern themselves.

Mr. LADD presented the memorial of P. A. Petersen and nine other citizens of Pekin and vicinity, in the State of North Dakota, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 4167) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, in order to extend the benefits of said act to certain employees in the Panama Canal Zone, reported it without amendment.

Mr. STANFIELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5475) for the relief of the Standard American Dredging Co., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 990) thereon.

ESTATE OF JAMES W. MARDIS.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3652) for the relief of the estate of James W. Mardis, reported a resolution (S. Res. 397), as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3652) for the relief of the estate of James W. Mardis, now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4278) to establish the department of public welfare and to determine its functions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4279) for the relief of W. C. Milligan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4280) to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $215,000 for beginning the construction of a new McKinley Manual Training School on land north of Taylor Street and east of Fourteenth Street, now owned by the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13660, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 13481, the Agricultural appropriation bill. In connection with the amendment I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations the original letter addressed to me on the subject by the Secretary of Agriculture under date of September 13, 1922; a copy of letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate by the Secretary of Agriculture, under date of September 21, 1922; and a copy of letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate by the Acting Secretary of Agriculture under date of October 24, 1922.

There being no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. FLETCHER and the letters referred to by him were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

On page 64, strike out lines 7 to 18, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof:

"For collecting, publishing, and distributing by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of live stock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, and other agricultural products, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, $1,100,000."

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, September 13, 1922.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: This is in reply to your letter of August 19, with reference to the manner in which the appropriation of $405,000 "for collecting, publishing, and distributing by telegraph, mail, and otherwise timely information on market supply and demand," etc., is being expended.

This appropriation provides for the market news service work carried on in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, and covers fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, honey, live stock and meats, dairy and poultry products, and grain, hay, feeds, and seeds. This appropriation is being expended for the services on these various products approximately as follows:

For live stock and meats	$139,150
For fruits and vegetables	208,850
For dairy and poultry	37,000
For grain, hay, feed, and seeds	20,000

With the appropriation provided for the current fiscal year it is possible to maintain news service over leased wire at the following points: Washington; Boston; New York; Baltimore; Philadelphia; Pittsburgh; Cincinnati; Columbus; Chicago; Waupaca and Fond du Lac, Wis.; Minneapolis; St. Paul; St. Louis; East St. Louis; Kansas City; Omaha; Fort Worth and Austin, Tex. Under cooperative agreements with various States, whereby such States pay the cost of the leased-wire extensions from the Federal circuit, offices are being maintained at Trenton, Harrisburg, and Lancaster, Pa.; Columbus, Ohio; Madison, Wis.; Jefferson City and St. Joseph, Mo.; and Lincoln, Nebr. In addition a limited amount of market information is furnished by commercial wire to a number of points where temporary branch offices are maintained during the heavy movement of important crops.

The inclosed map (No. 1) shows the leased-wire mileage now being operated by the department. The appropriation of $405,000 available for the news-service work is not quite adequate to cover this system, the leased-wire service to Austin and Fort Worth being operated for only a part of the current year.

No extension of the market-news service was contemplated in the estimates submitted to the Bureau of the Budget for the year ending June 30, 1923. Although the department has on several occasions submitted estimates to Congress for an appropriation sufficiently large to permit of the reestablishment of a complete market-news service which in addition would cover both the southern and western sections of the country, this estimate, for economical reasons, was not submitted for the current year.

During the period from August 10, 1917, to June 30, 1919, a very complete market-news service was built up in the department, financed largely from the war-emergency funds provided under the food production act. The service in operation at that time included a leased-wire circuit which covered the Pacific coast region and another circuit which included the important market centers of the South and East. It was necessary to discontinue both the western circuit and the southern circuit on June 30, 1919, however, on account of the great reduction in available funds. Since that time it has been possible to maintain only a "skeleton" organization, which, of course, must include the large eastern markets and the points of heavy shipment in the Middle West.

As you are doubtless aware, a bill has been introduced in the Senate which provides for the appropriation of $500,000 for the extension of the present leased-wire service to Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, and other cities upon the Pacific coast.

Many requests have been received by the department also for an extension of the leased-wire service into the important producing sections of the Southeastern States. We have made a careful estimate of the cost of this extension, and have found that with an additional appropriation of $200,000 a leased-wire circuit could be arranged to include Atlanta, Ga.; Jacksonville and Orlando, Fla.; Birmingham, Ala.; Memphis, Tenn.; and New Orleans, La.; and probably a few other points for short periods during the year.

The accompanying map (No. 2) shows the principal leased-wire circuits which were in operation while funds were available under the war-emergency appropriations.

Map No. 3 shows in general the leased-wire circuits which would be necessary in order to extend this service to the principal producing sections of the West and the South. In order to conduct the news services on this basis an appropriation of approximately $1,100,000 would be necessary.

If there is any further information which you may desire along this line, I shall be glad to furnish it.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY C. WALLACE, Secretary.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., September 21, 1922.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: Consideration has been given to Senate bill 3908, providing for the extension of market news service, transmitted with your letter of August 24, and the following is submitted for the information of your committee:

During the period from August 10, 1917, to August 30, 1919, a very complete market news service was built up by the department, financed largely from war emergency funds provided under the food production act. The service at its maximum included a leased-wire circuit to the Far West, as is shown on inclosed map No. 2. It was necessary to discontinue both the western circuit and the southern circuit on June 30, 1919, when the funds available for this work were reduced in amount. Since then it has been possible to maintain only a limited leased-wire service between the principal markets and Washington, as shown on map No. 1, attached. The extension from Kansas City to Austin, Tex., was opened September 1 last.

Senate bill 3908 is apparently designed to provide for a leased-wire service to the Pacific coast somewhat along the same lines as existed when the service was at the maximum. The agricultural situation in much of the western country, especially with regard to the movement of potatoes, apples, and other fruits, is very serious at the present time. Producers and handlers are facing a very serious situation; and while we know that additional market news service would not solve their difficulties entirely it would accomplish a great deal in facilitating the trading by making available to all concerned a better knowledge of the daily movements, unloads, and prevailing prices in the large consuming centers. There is a question, however, whether an appropriation such as contemplated is fully justified at this time, taking into account the need for strict economy in the expenditure of Federal funds and the other needs of agriculture which can not be met.

For your information I am inclosing map No. 3, which shows a projected leased-wire system, including both a southern and western circuit, which extension would involve an appropriation of $1,100,000, according to estimates just completed.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY C. WALLACE, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., October 24, 1922.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: In the absence from the city of Secretary Wallace, I am replying to your letter of September 9, in which you requested reports on various bills, among which were the following: S. 3976, S. 3977, S. 3979, and S. 3983.

The object sought by these bills is the extension of the market news service of the Department of Agriculture by telegraph to various sections of the country. I think in considering these bills the department can do no better than to refer to the Secretary's letter of September 21, reporting on bill S. 3908, on the same subject. The Secretary mentioned therein the present situation as well as conditions as they existed in the past with reference to the operation of the leased wire by this department. The possibility of extension was also covered by the letter of September 21. As the same conditions apply to all of the bills, the report on S. 3908 will serve as a report upon those enumerated above. A copy of the department's letter of September 21 is inclosed for convenient reference.

Sincerely yours,

C. W. PUGSLEY,
Acting Secretary.

RETURN OF AMERICAN TROOPS FROM GERMANY.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to offer two resolutions which I should like to have lie on the table. I ask to have them read, however, for the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Without objection the Secretary will read the resolutions.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 395), as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby respectfully requested to at once cause the return to the United States of all troops now stationed in Germany.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask that that resolution lie on the table, and I give notice that I intend to ask to take it up at the earliest opportunity, probably the first morning hour that we have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered.

PROPOSED CESSION OF CERTAIN WEST INDIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask now to have the second resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 396), as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to ascertain whether the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, etc., is willing to discuss the cession by it to the United States of all or any part of its possessions in the West Indies, including the island of Trinidad, and also the Bermuda Islands.

The President is further requested to ascertain whether the Government of the Republic of France is willing to discuss the cession by it to the United States of all or any part of its possessions in the Lesser Antilles, including the islands of Grande Terre, Guadeloupe, Marie Galante, and Martinique.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, nearly a year ago I introduced the same resolution but in two separate resolutions covering the same subject matter. One of those resolutions went to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it has been sleeping there ever since without action. I ask that this resolution may lie on the table, and I give notice that on next Wednesday, if the business of the Senate will permit, I shall address the Senate on the last resolution which I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will lie on the table.

PROBLEMS RELATING TO REFORESTATION.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the question of reforestation is one of the most important, I think, with which we might deal. There are millions of acres of land where the forests have been cut, and nothing has been done toward reforesting them. I know that applies to my section, and it applies to the western section. I venture to say that this country has done less toward reforestation than any other civilized country on the globe. So I submit a resolution, which I ask may be printed, read, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 398) was read, referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate appoint a committee to consist of five Members of the Senate, three from the majority party and two from the minority party, to investigate problems relating to reforestation, with a view to establishing a comprehensive national policy for lands chiefly suited for timber production in order to insure a perpetual supply of timber for the use and necessities of citizens of the United States. The committee shall make a final report of its investigations with recommendations to the Senate not later than December 2, 1924. For the purpose of this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act at such times during the sessions or recesses of the Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth Congresses and in such places within the United States, to hold such hearings, and to employ such clerical and stenographic assistants, as it deems necessary. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per folio. The committee is further authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to take testimony. The expenses of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

MERGER OF MEAT-PACKING COMPANIES (S. DOC. 283).

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to submit a request to the Senate from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Some time ago the Senate passed a resolution calling on the Secretary of Agriculture for certain information. The Secretary of Agriculture replied. I was not present when the reply of the Secretary of Agriculture came to the Senate, and I have not read his reply. For some reason or other the usual course was not followed, which, I understand, is that when a Cabinet officer replies to a request from the Senate for information the reply is printed for the information of the Senate. However, for some reason this was not done in the case to which I am referring. The reply was referred without any instructions to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I ask that the reply of the Secretary of Agriculture be printed in the usual form, which would be in the form of a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill having been concluded, the Secretary will state the first amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ernst	Lodge	Reed, Pa.
Ball	Fletcher	McCormick	Sheppard
Bayard	George	McCumber	Shortridge
Borah	Glass	McKellar	Smith
Brandegee	Harreld	McKinley	Smoot
Brookhart	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Bursum	Harrison	Myers	Stanfield
Calder	Heflin	Nicholson	Sterling
Capper	Hitchcock	Norbeck	Trammell
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Underwood
Couzens	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Wadsworth
Culberson	Kellogg	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Kendrick	Pittman	Warren
Dial	King	Pomerene	Watson
Dillingham	Ladd	Ransdell	Weller
Elkins	Lenroot	Reed, Mo.	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Secretary will state the first amendment reported by the committee.

The READING CLERK. The first amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations is, on page 2, line 8, in the items for Office of the Secretary, to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$4,000," so as to read:

chief clerk, who shall be chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and Assistant Secretaries, $4,000.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, this being an appropriation bill, I am reminded of what we are appropriating in the South to keep going the bucket shops in New York. I am not going to speak long; I have no desire to filibuster against this bill; but I have been intending for a few days to make known to the country a practice which is now in vogue in New York, especially in connection with what is known as the bucket-shop business. The fact has come to my attention that the people all over the country, and particularly in the cotton sections, have been sending their funds to New York to buy "odd-lot" cotton. I am not going to make a cotton speech, and I am not going to speak about the legitimate exchanges; I am not saying whether I favor or do not favor exchanges; perhaps they may serve a good purpose; but if anyone wants to invest his money to hedge or to speculate I would advise him to do so with some house of good reputation, of financial standing, and which is a member of a regular exchange. It is a dangerous proposition to advise people about speculating, and I do not undertake to do so. I have seen 30 reasons for thinking that the price of cotton would go one way and then have seen it go the other way.

Mr. President, if one desires to invest in the manner in which I have mentioned, he ought to put up sufficient margin to take care of his contract even down to zero, and he ought to be prepared to demand the delivery of the cotton. The evil of which I wish to speak now is in the "odd-lot" transactions which are carried on by a certain crowd in New York. It has been brought to my attention that a large number of people in the South have sent their money there to buy cotton within the last several months, and I am astonished to find that instead of going to reputable houses they have gone to this shyster crowd. I wish to send out an S. O. S. warning to the people of the United States, to all Government officials, both State and National, to look out for the propaganda that is proceeding from this nefarious bunch. The matter has been reported to the Post Office Department, to the Department of Justice, and to every other department of the Government which may have an interest in it. It is hard enough in these times, Mr. President, for people to accumulate and keep a few dollars on hand, but when they are enticed to send their money away to be placed for investment in the hands of these crooks who will not pay back the profit much less the margin it presents a most outrageous situation.

That crowd has not the conscience of even the boll weevil. The boll weevil will leave the stalk lying on the land, while this crowd not only refuse to return the profit which may be made but they refuse to return the margin.

The manner of conducting the bucket-shop business is not generally known. The way they operate is this: If they, for instance, get an order to buy, and the market goes up, they pay no attention to it; but if the market goes down, they require additional margin, and keep on calling on the customer to put up more margin. If the market goes against them, they have themselves thrown into bankruptcy. I have before me an instance of that kind where one concern in New York the other day had itself put into bankruptcy owing $100,000 with nominal assets of only $10,000, and they followed the sharp practice of having a petition filed by employees of the company and by a printing concern. They had flooded the South with propaganda with these circulars about an easy way to make money. The fact is, we have too many printing presses in the country anyway. I wish the Post Office Department would find some way to put a whole lot of them out of business; but here is this crowd, employing clerks, and claiming to owe clerks, and then going in, possibly in conjunction with a printing concern, to issue these enticing circulars and send them all over the country. I have a few of them in my office. The reason they do that is because they offer to cut the commission under that of the regular commission houses. We have a few of that crowd up there that ought to be brought to the attention of the public.

Here was one a short time ago known as the American Cotton Exchange. That concern dealt in odd lots—that is, less than 100-bale lots. They were convicted of bucketing, and were fined $5,000 by the court, and then went into the hands of a receiver. They have another institution there of the same sort, known as the National Cotton and Grain Exchange; then still another one, known as the Odd Lot Cotton Exchange; and still another one, now being organized, known as the New York Odd Lot Cotton Exchange or the Curb Odd Lot Cotton Exchange.

I have taken occasion to investigate the members of some of these institutions, and while, of course, I am not condemning all of them, yet I see that they are made up in a great measure of crooks. I notice that there was one whose name formerly had the euphonius sound of Gorowitz. He is now going under a most honored name in the United States. He has Americanized his present title, and so have many others.

I hear further that the manager of one of these odd-lot concerns is a darkey, with a few white girls working under him.

A great many others have been expelled from other exchanges and there are serious charges hanging over them. So I merely want to warn my constituents, and the people in the South in particular, not to be allured by a cheap service, but if they want to invest at all to do so through some house of standing, some house of worth and reputation, and they can very easily find out which ones they are.

This odd-lot crowd appeals to people of small means, who can ill afford to lose.

I trust that the courts will look into the actions of these people. The other day one of these men was called upon by a creditor, and he got no satisfaction. He was threatened with being reported to the United States district atorney, and he said, "You can report it"; that he had as much influence with the district attorney as anybody else. Mr. President, I do not believe any such assertion. I have respect for the district attorneys of the United States and for the courts of the United States, and I do not believe that any crook would have any influence with the district attorney in New York or anywhere else; but I want the district attorneys to be more diligent and to see that these people receive their deserts and that they are put out of business and in stripes, where they belong. Let the bankruptcy courts scrutinize carefully.

Recently I have had letters from various of my constituents, some of whom have several thousand dollars in the hands of these people, and they refuse to return the margin, much less the profit. There is no reason in the world why the people who invested their money in cotton contracts within the last six months should not have made money, because the market has been going up. I am not advocating making contracts, but I do want to say that after people work hard and have a little surplus on hand they should not be induced to send that money away from home, to go into the hands of people of doubtful reputation, or without reputation at all. The people have already spent a great deal of money in wildcat schemes, all kinds of stocks and bonds and oil companies and the like, and it is time that we were stopping. It does seem that the public ought to become sane and have a little more judgment. Better keep your money at home.

Mr. President, the object I had in this was simply to call the attention of the people to this subject and to urge them to pay no attention to circulars from these crooks and to investigate the matter if they want to do so, and if they have any money out in that way now to put it in the hands of honest people and members of the regular exchanges who do business in a proper way.

At a later date I propose to say more about the cotton futures contract law, which is depriving our people of hundreds of millions of dollars annually; but for the day I will content myself with what I have already said, as I have no desire to delay the consideration of the bill which is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 9, to increase the total appropriation for salaries in the office of the Secretary of the Interior from "$221,520" to "$222,020."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 24, after the word "telegraphing," to insert "telephone service"; so as to read:

For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary and the bureaus, offices, and buildings of the department; furniture, carpets, ice, lumber, hardware, dry goods, advertising, telegraphing, telephone service, street car fares not exceeding $250, and expressage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 2, after the numerals "$5,000," to insert "which sum is hereby made immediately available"; so as to read:

For the purchase for the use of the Secretary of the Interior, at a cost not to exceed $5,000, which sum is hereby made immediately available, of one passenger-carrying automobile to replace one present passenger-carrying automobile, which may be exchanged or traded in part payment thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 14, after the figures "1913," to strike out "$29,000" and insert "$29,900," and in line 16, to strike out "$41,000" and insert "$41,900"; so as to make the paragraph read:

For the Bureau of Mines, including printing, engraving of illustrations, and binding bulletins, technical papers, miners' circulars, and other publications to carry out the purposes of the act of February 25, 1913, $29,900; for miscellaneous printing and binding, $12,000; in all, $41,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 12, to strike out lines 13 to 16, inclusive, in the following words:

Traffic in intoxicating liquors: For suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among the natives of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator in charge of the bill explain the striking out of lines 13, 14, 15, and 16?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the department, and also the committee of the Senate, decided after the hearings that it was not necessary to have two agencies in operation for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among the Indians in Alaska. The Department of Justice is handling that matter. The Senator knows that the cities are far apart, travel is very expensive indeed, and there is no necessity of the Government having two agencies in each place in Alaska for the purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. The appropriation under the head of the Department of Justice is sufficient for this purpose, is it?

Mr. SMOOT. It is sufficient for this purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, there ought not to be two agencies having charge of it away up in that Arctic country, I should think. It seems to me, therefore, that the amendment is a very proper one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for surveyor general and ex officio secretary of the Territory of Alaska, on page 11, line 1, to increase the appropriation for clerks from "$11,100" to "$12,300," and at the end of line 2, to change the total appropriation from "$18,600" to "$19,800."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there are a number of items on page 11 that indicate that they are increases of salaries of various clerks. Will the Senator state just what the facts are about that matter? I have not had a copy of the hearings, so I am obliged to ask the Senator about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that what I say now applies to all of the other items.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I know that.

Mr. SMOOT. It is no increase of salaries whatever. It is carrying out the existing law and paying the employees in each one of these offices just what they are being paid to-day, and just what the Budget estimated that they should be paid. The House, for some unknown reason, made these cuts, and in the opinion of the Senate committee they were not justified.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the House provisions should be adopted, then these various clerks would get less than they are now getting by law?

Mr. SMOOT. They must, or else one of them will have to be entirely done away with. Take Arizona. The amount appropriated for the surveyor general is $3,000, and for the clerks the House appropriated $15,820. We gave them $16,120. There is a difference of $300. The $300 has to be taken off the present pay of those clerks, or else one clerk has to be discharged. That can not be done in this office, and therefore I can not understand why it was done by the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, as I understand the Senator, this appropriation is not a lump-sum appropriation for that particular office, but it must be paid out in accordance with existing law, providing for so many clerks at such and such salaries?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for surveyor general of Arizona, on page 11, line 4, to increase the appropriation for clerks from "$15,820" to "$16,120"; and at the end of line 5 to change the total appropriation from "$19,520" to "$19,820."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I understand the Senator to say that what he has just said applies to all these items on pages 11 and 12. His explanation of the matter applies to all of them?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; down to and including line 8 on page 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for surveyor general of California, on page 11, line 7, to increase the appropriation for clerks from "$12,000" to "$13,500"; and at the end of line 8 to change the total appropriation from "$15,550" to "$17,050."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for surveyor general of Colorado, on page 11, line 10, to increase the appropriation for clerks from "$11,100" to "$14,520"; and at the end of line 11 to change the total appropriation from "$14,600" to "$18,020."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for surveyor general of Montana, on page 11, line 16, to increase the appropriation for clerks from "$13,180" to "$14,000"; and at the end of line 17 to change the total appropriation from "$16,705" to "$17,525."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for surveyor general of Nevada, on page 11, line 19, to increase the appropriation for clerks from "$11,100" to "$12,040," and, at the end of line 20, to change the total appropriation from "$14,500" to "$15,440."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for surveyor general of New Mexico, on page 11, line 22, to increase the appropriation for clerks from "$11,100" to "$14,650," and at the end of line 23, to change the total appropriation from "$14,650" to "$18,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for surveyor general of Utah, on page 12, line 2, to increase the appropriation for clerks from "$11,100" to "$13,500," and, at the end of line 3, to change the total appropriation from "$14,650" to "$17,050."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for surveyor general of Wyoming, on page 12, line 8, to increase the appropriation for clerks from "$9,980" to "$10,600," and, at the end of line 9, to change the total appropriation from "$13,430" to "$14,050."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 2, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses of land offices; for clerk hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the district land offices, etc., from "$360,000" to "$370,000."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the chairman of the committee explain the increase of $10,000 on page 14?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the appropriations for the present year amounted to $380,000. The Budget estimated for this year $375,200. The committee of the House gave them $370,000. On the floor of the House the amount was reduced to $360,000, as the bill now shows. I have a letter from the department in which they plead for the $375,200 and give the reasons why they should have that amount; but the committee agreed to compromise the matter between the House and the Senate and make it $370,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the letter explain why they wanted the additional $10,000?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will remember that two years ago, when we had up the question of an appropriation for this purpose, there was read into the RECORD a statement showing the number of entries made by the homesteader that were still lying in the office unsettled. They have to have the money in order to get those entries into shape so that the lands can be patented. This is for the hire of employees and all the contingent expenses of the land offices; and I want to say to the Senator now that last year we thought the work was of such importance that we gave $385,000 for this purpose. We have cut that now, and with the increase that was given last year the number of pending cases in the Land Department has been decreased over 50 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it estimated that any portion of the appropriation for last year will not be used, or will they use it all?

Mr. SMOOT. Every dollar of it. Really, I think it would have been very much better if we had last year added a little more, so as to clean it up.

Mr. McKELLAR. There has been no suggestion of a deficiency?

Mr. SMOOT. No; none whatever.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator seems to know exactly what this is for, and I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 18, to increase the appropriation for surveys and resurveys of public lands, examination of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, etc., from "$650,000" to "$699,600."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of my colleague whether this increase in the appropriation is for the survey of public lands or for any of the other items found within the paragraph?

Mr. SMOOT. The great bulk of it is for public surveys, and we have recommended exactly what the Budget estimated. The House gave $650,000. The Budget figure was $699,600, and that is the same as the appropriation for this year. If there is one item in the bill which ought to be appropriated for, it is this one.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the junior Senator from Utah yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. What reason did the House have for reducing it to $650,000?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not state the reason. I do know that the Government is being compelled to make a great many resurveys. The titles to the land are involved. Men who go upon public land that is not surveyed—and the Senator knows a great many entries are being made—can receive no titles to their lands until the lands are surveyed. No matter how many improvements a man may want to make, no matter what kind of a building he may want to build, no matter how much money he may want to borrow in order to improve the land, he has no title to the land, and he can not get the money necessary to make the improvement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is a systematic resurvey being made of all the public lands? I know a great many lands down in my section of the country, and some over in Arkansas, have been resurveyed comparatively recently, and I was wondering whether this appropriation was for such a purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. No; resurveys are made where conflict arises. In some of the mining sections of the country it would have been far better if the lands had never been surveyed in the first instance as they were surveyed.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is referring to surveys away back before the Civil War?

Mr. SMOOT. Years back. When a conflict arises the only thing to do is to have the land resurveyed, and the Government is required to do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is a very wide discrepancy between the surveys we have had in the last few years and those which were had many years ago. I do not know who has been at fault.

Mr. KING. Let me say to my colleague that I make no criticism of the increase in this item, provided the increase is to be devoted to an extension of the public surveys. I want to say to the Senator and to my friends on this side that the settlement of the West is being retarded in many places because the Government of the United States has not made adequate provision to survey the public domain.

Mr. SMOOT. Take our own State; I do not think 30 per cent of our State has been surveyed.

Mr. KING. I know of many persons who have gone upon the public domain, many of them have lived there for years, and though they have made repeated requests to have the public lands surveyed, no appropriation has been made for that purpose, and they are there without title. Their improvements are there. They have not made the progress they would have made if they could have gotten title or if the land had been surveyed, and I think the Government is not fair to those settlers, where lands are capable of occupation and settlement, in failing to take steps that title may be obtained.

I would be in favor of very liberal appropriations for the survey of the public lands, because if they are surveyed the public lands will sooner pass into the hands of private individuals. I should have been glad if the committee had seen their way clear to make more liberal appropriations to survey the public domain.

The point I had in mind when I interrogated my colleague was to find out whether any part of this was to be devoted to clerical help in the offices here, or whether all of that increase was for the survey of public lands.

Mr. SMOOT. This is for the survey of public lands. The bill provides:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, examination of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, making fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

It is only resurveys for that particular purpose. The great bulk of the appropriation is for the survey of public lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Bureau of Indian Affairs," on page 32, after line 18, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to establish and maintain the former Fort Apache military post as an Indian boarding school for the purpose of carrying out treaty obligations, to be known as the Theodore Roosevelt Indian School. For support and education of 350 pupils, including pay of superintendent, $78,750; for repairs, remodeling, and improvement, $17,800; for purchase of equipment, $17,500; for collection and transportation of pupils, $1,200; in all, $115,250, to be immediately available: Provided, That the Fort Apache military post, and land appurtenant thereto, shall remain in the possession and custody of the Secretary of the Interior so long as they shall be required for Indian school purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Utah make the explanation as to this amendment he made to me a few moments ago, so that it may be in the RECORD? I understand it is to fulfill a treaty obligation.

Mr. SMOOT. The Government has a treaty with the Apache Indians, the date of which is June 1, 1868. Under that treaty the Government is required to educate the children of the Indians of that tribe, and this amendment is simply to carry out the treaty provision. I recognize the fact that there are only about 325 children in that tribe, but without this appropriation there would be no school whatever for those children. Under the treaty between the Indians and the United States we are compelled to educate those Indian children, and the appropriation is only to carry out that provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator tell us why this has not been done before?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this should have been done long ago, but it was not done owing to the reluctance of Congress to make the appropriations. Fort Apache was a military post for nearly 50 years, and it has been abandoned for military purposes. It was almost the last of our western posts; and the buildings, which are numerous and some of which are modern, are being utilized by the Indian Bureau, having been transferred to that bureau at a saving of several thousand dollars.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice that $17,800 of the appropriation is for repairing, remodeling, and improving those buildings, which indicates that it will not be a permanent charge.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the repair of the buildings this year is included in the total of $115,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me that if we have a treaty with the Indians providing for such a school, and the Indian children are there, unquestionably that school ought to be appropriated for, and we ought to educate the children. It seems to me it should have been done before. We know that we have not been as liberal with the Indians, perhaps, as we should have been, and certainly we ought to fulfill every obligation in regard to the Indians. For that reason I shall not object in any way to this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, we have passed over an item on page 21 about which I wanted some information from the Senator from Utah or some other Senator. It is an item reading as follows:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors and deleterious drugs, including peyote, among Indians, $25,000.

What is peyote?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a drug which acts upon the Indian as rot-gut whisky acts upon the white man, I think, except that the effect lasts longer. In justice to the Indians, however, I want to say that there are some Indians in the United States who claim that they use it in their religious worship, and I know there is an objection to its suppression.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is it made of?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is made from a small bean. It is the extract from that bean which is grown in the West. I do not know whether it is grown in Arizona or not, but I think it is.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it have to be imported?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is grown in this country.

Mr. ASHURST. It is made from a shrub grown on the Rio Grande, in Texas, and possibly in some parts of New Mexico.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it a deleterious drug?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Somewhat like opium or cocaine, or worse? What effect does it have? Does the Senator know anything about it?

Mr. ASHURST. Observation leads me to believe that in the addict it produces grandiose ideas, the delusion that one is rich, although in truth poor.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, it gives a man a temporary paresis?

Mr. HARRISON. An exhilaration.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if he will wait until we conclude the committee amendments I have promised to send for the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who wants to speak upon this subject.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to speak upon the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I said the senior Senator from Mississippi wants to speak upon it.

Mr. HARRELD. I also want to be heard on that question.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not antagonistic to the provision in the bill.

Mr. HARRELD. I am.

Mr. HARRISON. Has such a provision always been carried?

Mr. SMOOT. No; on several occasions it has been put in in the House, and the Senate committee has also reported it to the Senate, but in the past it has always gone out on the floor of the Senate. In the consideration of past appropriation bills the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has insisted that it go out of the bill; but I hope we will not take any time to discuss it now, because there will be an amendment offered to strike it from the bill, and it is going to lead to some discussion.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] opposed to the item?

Mr. SMOOT. He is.

Mr. HARRELD. I am. I want to say that the question is very much in doubt. A few years ago a few old fossils from the Interior Department made a report to the effect that it was deleterious. There is a bill pending in the House now and a committee is making an investigation and testimony is being taken as to whether or not it is deleterious. I am going to oppose the inclusion of the item in the pending bill because of the investigation pending in the House, which will determine whether or not it is deleterious. I think that it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator refers to the words "including peyote"?

Mr. HARRELD. Yes. I am going to make a motion to strike out those words whenever the opportunity presents itself.

Mr. SMOOT. After the committee amendments are acted upon.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I may say that two or three years ago the Committee on Indian Affairs had hearings of considerable length regarding this item. I do not know of a question about which there are such strong differences of opinion.

Mr. HARRELD. That is quite true.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is claimed by some, I think by Doctor Wiley, among others, that it is a very deleterious drug. On the contrary, there were others who have visited the Indians and say that it is used for sacramental purposes in connection with their religious rites.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it produce the kind of intoxication that has been suggested here, that it makes them believe temporarily that they are rich?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not believe I heard any direct testimony, except that of one witness who was a missionary among these people. He was of Indian blood, however. He said that the effect was to bring about a very beautiful state of mind; that after the use of this drug the whole thought of the individual was centered upon everything that is beautiful and good; and that if he had plenty of it he could make a Christian out of every Indian in the country.

I know that the subcommittee of which I was a member that made an investigation of the matter did not feel like making the report on it at the time. The testimony was taken toward the close of the session of Congress when former Senator Gronna was chairman of the committee.

My judgment is that it is a matter involving such serious differences of opinion that it ought not to go in the bill in this way. The members of the church stated that it was an essential part of the sacraments of their church and that it tended to bring about the development of Christian ideas. As I said a while ago, the representative of the church made the broad statement that if he had plenty of it he could make a Christian of every Indian in the land.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did they try it on the committee?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; we did not. We had samples of it there and could have tried it, but of course did not. I might add that it is used in different forms. It is a bud that grows upon a shrub, and after it is dried it would probably be a quarter of an inch in thickness and about an inch in diameter, having the appearance, to a considerable extent, of a very small sunflower dried. They sometimes use the buds by chewing them and swallowing the juice, and at other times by making a tea of it and drinking the tea. But it is used in their ceremonials usually on Saturday night. Some of the churches objected to its use because, having these very exciting and interesting exercises all night, they were not able to attend the orthodox church the next day. It is a question about which there are violent differences of opinion, and I do not think Congress in this way ought to touch it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been in the Senate for 20 years, and there have been hearings upon this very thing every year since

I have been here. We have had Indians here by the dozens, all testifying that they wanted it, and the medical fraternity of the United States testifying it was an exceedingly dangerous and deleterious drug and ought to be prohibited, not only to the Indians but to everybody else. I know that in the Indian reservation in Utah, when they get hold of it and use it, they lay in an absolute stupor for two days; they know nothing. Of course, they may dream beautiful dreams during that time, but the testimony we have had from the people in my own State is that they would very much prefer to have liquor given direct to the Indians than to have them use this drug.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There is violent opposition to its use; there is no question about that.

Mr. HARRELD. I would like to ask the Senator from New Mexico, and also the Senator from Utah, if it is not a fact that in the same testimony the proof went to show that the effects to which the Senator has referred were produced by the hootch they drink rather than the eating of this berry?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sorry I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. HARRELD. Did not the testimony to which the Senator referred leave it in some doubt as to whether the effects were produced by the use of this berry or by drinking hootch that is always being sold among the Indians?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The testimony taken before the committee dealt only with the use of this particular drug. I think the use of the drug is objectionable, but if taken it undoubtedly had a very decided effect upon the mentality or imagination of the individual who took it. Whether it was deemed deleterious to his physical welfare or spiritual welfare, it was impossible to determine from the evidence which was taken from a great number of witnesses.

Mr. HARRELD. If the Senator refers to the testimony of one old fossil who talked to me about it, I would not give much credence to his testimony.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I can not at this time undertake to say who were entitled to credence in connection with it. There is a violent difference of opinion among them about its use.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there is another question I want to ask if we are through with peyote for the present. I notice there is now an appropriation for $25,000, but it is my recollection that a few years ago there was appropriated something like $200,000 or $250,000 for the suppression of traffic in intoxicating liquors among the Indians. Can the Senator from Utah tell me about that? The amount seems to have been greatly reduced.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that for 1924 the amount appropriated for this very purpose is $25,000; for 1923, $30,000; and for 1922, $65,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the Senator tell us what it was in 1912 and 1913?

Mr. SMOOT. In 1912 it was $75,000 and in 1913 it was $75,000.

Mr. HARRISON. So it has been reduced quite a good deal?

Mr. SMOOT. It has been reduced, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the Senator tell us what has been the effect of the appropriation—whether it really has done much good?

Mr. SMOOT. The officials of the department think it has. They do not want any more money than is necessary, but there are some places where there is a great sale of liquor to the Indians.

Mr. HARRISON. But they do not think it would take as much money to suppress the traffic among the Indians as it did formerly?

Mr. SMOOT. No; they think not. This is what the Budget gave them.

Mr. HARRISON. It is peculiarly strange, does not the Senator think, when we hear so much of the violation of the prohibition law among the whites, that it seems to be getting better among the Indians?

Mr. SMOOT. I rather think that is true.

Mr. HARRELD. That is largely due to the fact that we have the Volstead Act and under it a lot of officials are duplicating the very same work. As a matter of fact, I think the provision ought to be stricken out entirely and the work left to the Federal officers who are enforcing the general provisions of the Volstead Act.

Mr. SMOOT. A part of the purpose of the Volstead Act was to suppress liquor traffic among the Indians.

Mr. HARRELD. The same force is at work among the Indians in my State suppressing traffic in liquor, and therefore it is not necessary to have such a large force for this purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. That depends on where the Indians are located. In the Senator's State they are located, many times, right adjacent to a city. In other States they are some distance away from a city. In that case, of course, this money would be used, and no doubt there is ample money for those particular cases.

Mr. FLETCHER. This provision includes drugs?

Mr. HARRELD. Yes. In our State there is really no necessity for it, in my judgment.

Mr. HARRISON. So the decrease in appropriation might not be indicative that the liquor traffic among the Indians is diminishing?

Mr. HARRELD. Not necessarily.

Mr. HARRISON. That is, the use of liquor is not diminishing, but the appropriations decrease in this bill because there are very large appropriations elsewhere provided for the enforcement of the Volstead law.

Mr. SMOOT. The House incorporated a provision for the enforcement of it in Alaska, and the committee struck it out because of the very fact that in Alaska the Department of Justice is enforcing the law, and we did not think it was necessary, nor did the Department of Justice itself after its attention was called to it think it was necessary. Therefore we struck it out of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to page 13, where it is proposed to consolidate the offices of register and receiver of the land office at Gainesville, Fla.? I do not care to have the Federal Treasury burdened with two salaries at that place if there is any saving to be accomplished by the consolidation. I ask the Senator from Utah if there would be a saving by consolidating the register and receiver of the land office?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it must necessarily be so.

Mr. FLETCHER. It would not necessarily follow if, for instance, in the case of the consolidation of the office of register and receiver they would employ a lot of additional clerks to do the work.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; that would not follow, because we have given each office just so much money for clerk hire, and this provision necessarily takes out one of the officers in the department. That is the purpose of it. The Senator will remember that last year we enacted a measure authorizing certain offices, where the receipts would not amount to a certain sum, to be consolidated. This is merely carrying out the provisions of that law. We are consolidating at Leadville, Colo., Gainesville, Fla., and other offices.

Mr. FLETCHER. I remember the act that was passed formerly, but I am not familiar with the development of it, as to whether there would be actual economy accomplished by making this change.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. Not only that, but in some of the offices which were consolidated under the original act the receipts were so small that they could not get a man to serve in either one of the offices; but with the consolidation of the two the receipts which come into the office will take care of one man.

Mr. FLETCHER. I realize, of course, that the public lands of Florida are very limited in extent.

Mr. SMOOT. They are very limited, indeed.

Mr. FLETCHER. That raises the question whether there ought to be both a register and receiver there and whether the fees are sufficient to take care of their salaries. Of course, if they may be consolidated and the officer is either a register or receiver or whatever he may be designated, the fees ought to be sufficient to take care of his salary and expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. Judge Finney in his testimony before the committee, when he was asked whether it would save the Government any money, stated:

> It will depend, Governor, on the receipts. At Gainesville the receipts have been a little over $4,000. If we consolidate the offices and appoint one man, he would receive $3,000. There would be a saving of $1,000.

That would be the saving to the Government, and then the man who does the work could be allowed $3,000, which would justify him in holding the office. That is the reason why the consolidation is proposed to be made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under that showing I do not feel that I should be justified in objecting to the consolidation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may have my colleague's attention for a moment, I desire to state that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was calling attention to the enforcement of the prohibition law, and that suggested some observations by the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD]. I was wondering if the committee on reorganization is considering the proposition which has been discussed a great deal for years—I know the Attorney General has suggested it, and I have offered a bill to effectuate it—of bringing under the head of the Department of Justice all governmental agencies which have to do with enforcement of the law.

May I say that I have had perhaps a thousand letters from various officials of the United States and from various individuals recommending that that course be pursued. As it now is, we have a force under the Treasury Department seeking to enforce certain statutes, and under the Post Office Department another force, or perhaps more than one, engaged in enforcing criminal statutes. The result is that we are duplicating work. When I was home recently—and no doubt my colleague's attention has been called to the matter—the claim was made by persons interested in enforcing the prohibition law that there was duplication. It was insisted by some that if the enforcement of the law were left with the district attorneys, with competent marshals and aids, the prohibition law could be far better enforced than it is under the present system, and that if the enforcement of the penal statutes of the United States were left with the district attorneys, they would be better enforced, and there would be greater economy than under the chaotic conditions which now obtain.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I myself think that the enforcement of all the laws should be under one head. I think better results would thereby be obtained. I will call my colleague's attention to the fact that we undertook so to provide in an appropriation bill here some time ago, but those who were deeply interested in the prohibition question would not consent to have the enforcement of the prohibition law taken from under the Treasury Department. In the reorganization legislation, however, when it is enacted, I hope there will be provided a consolidation in one department of all agencies for the enforcement of the law. I think that is the proper way to do it, in accordance with the view which my colleague has expressed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Pension Office," on page 71, line 5, to increase the salary of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions, from "$3,000" to "$4,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before the amendment is agreed to I wish to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Florida not allow us to complete the consideration of the few committee amendments? Then I shall be glad to answer any question the Senator may ask.

Mr. FLETCHER. We are considering items on the various pages, and I thought——

Mr. SMOOT. We are now merely considering committee amendments and shall be through with them in a very few moments, as they are very few in number. Then I will be glad to answer any question which the Senator from Florida may ask.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely wish to make an inquiry in regard to an item on page 37, but I can do so later.

Mr. KING. May I ask my colleague if he does not consider it rather an unwise precedent to increase the compensation of some clerks in view of the fact that a reclassification bill is now before this body, and in view of the further fact that, if we increase the compensation of one, demands will be made for increase in the compensation of others?

Mr. SMOOT. The committee has no option in the present case. The law itself provides $4,000 for this position. When the reclassification bill comes in we are going to endeavor to adjust all these salaries to one level; that is, the salaries of employees who fall within a certain class. However, when the bill passed Congress in reference to this matter Congress provided that this position should have a salary of $4,000, and the committee is merely carrying out the law.

Mr. KING. I think that was rather unwise, because it is bound to create conflicts and demands from others that they be equally compensated where the work is of the same grade and of the same importance. I perceive, however, that we can not deal with the matter in the pending appropriation bill, because to do so would be legislation upon the appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 71, line 13, to increase the total appropriation for salaries in the Pension Office from "$1,383,720" to "$1,384,720."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "United States Geological Survey," on page 87, line 16, to increase the appropriation for geologic surveys in the various portions of the United States from "$300,000" to "$325,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 19, to increase the appropriation for the examination and classification of lands requisite to the determination of their suitability for enlarged homesteads, stock-raising homesteads, public watering places, and stock driveways, or other uses, as required by the public land laws, from "$225,000" to "$300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, at the end of line 20, to increase the total appropriation for the United States Geological Survey from "$1,615,190" to "$1,715,190."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "National parks," on page 99, line 12, to increase the appropriation for administration, protection, and maintenance, etc., of the Glacier National Park, Mont., from "$100,000" to "$125,000."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in that case there is an increase of $20,000. For what purpose, may I ask?

Mr. SMOOT. For the administration of the Glacier National Park.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is that within the estimates and within the Budget allowance?

Mr. SMOOT. It is within the estimates, I will say to the Senator, and I will tell the Senator in just a moment what was the amount appropriated last year. The estimate was $127,295, and we cut the estimate, as the Senator will notice, from that amount to $125,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. What did the Budget recommend?

Mr. SMOOT. The Budget asked for $127,295, and we cut that to $125,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amount in the bill is just what the Budget recommended?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is a little less than the Budget recommended.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is an increase of $35,000 in the total carried by the House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; in the two items, including that for construction, repair, and physical improvement, there is an increase; but the amount recommended by the Budget for the physical improvement of the park was $127,505, and we gave $125,000 in each case, reducing the amount recommended by the Budget.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator mean the estimate or the Budget?

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate is the Budget recommendation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the Budget Director passed on it?

Mr. SMOOT. The Budget passed on it and asked for $127,295 for maintenance and $127,505 for physical improvements.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I call attention to one matter here which is rather general in character? I observe in the paragraph under consideration a provision for the—purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work.

We also find on the preceding page provision for the "purchase, maintenance, operation, repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles."

Mr. SMOOT. Those words are used in connection with the appropriation for each one of the national parks.

Mr. KING. The point I am about to make is that in nearly every appropriation bill we find very large sums carried to buy automobiles for employees of the Government. It has gotten so now that nearly every employee of the Government, except Senators and Representatives, has a private vehicle provided by the Government for him; there are thousands and thousands of them. A gentleman who came to protest to me about this abuse, as he denominated it, told me yesterday that he had attempted to figure up the cost to the Government annually for motor vehicles for employees of the Government and it exceeded $10,000,000. In his estimate he included wear and tear, gasoline, and so forth. My opinion is that he very much underestimates the amount.

Mr. SMOOT. I think his estimate is too low.

Mr. KING. I think that the actual amount is two or three times that sum. Attention was called by the same gentleman—and he is a resident of the District—to the fact that in the District of Columbia, as he avers—I do not vouch for the statement—that many of the employees use these cars and their families also use them. We frequently find them parked at the theaters and the picture shows, evidencing the fact that some persons in the Government service or some persons pretending to be in the Government service are using these Government cars. In my opinion, from my observation of the appropriation bills, there has been a very great abuse in this respect.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And they are marked "For official use only."

Mr. KING. They are marked "For official use only," as the Senator from Nebraska suggests, but they are not confined to "official use only."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have understood also that frequently the cost and the upkeep of the car, which, of course, are all charged to the Government, are greater than the salary of the employee who uses it. There ought to be some committee of the Senate or of the House or of both to examine into the matter of passenger-carrying motor vehicles for Government employees. I think an enormous saving could be made in that regard, for there is no doubt in the world that the privilege of the use of Government-owned machines, not only here but all over the country, has been greatly abused, and it ought to be stopped to a very large extent. I presume the greater part of it arises under this bill.

Mr. KING. This bill represents only a very small part of it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Every appropriation bill which comes before us contains large appropriations for this purpose. Certainly something ought to be done in connection with that matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word in conclusion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that there is one really good provision in this item which is generally not found in the direct appropriations for the use of automobiles. I refer to the provision in line 8, which reads:

Including not exceeding $3,000 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles.

So not more than $3,000 can be expended for the purpose indicated. There is a limitation, whereas in some years past there has been no limitation whatever.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Utah, who always takes such an active interest in appropriations and understands the situation so fully, whether it would not be a wiser plan to require all appropriations for automobiles to be set out specifically for that purpose, and say that such sums shall not be paid out except upon specific authority of law? In that way wide publicity would be given to it. There are a great many officials of the Government and a great many employees of the Government who would not use Government machines if it were known that they were costing the Government these sums of money; but they are paid for at present out of lump-sum appropriations. I find a number of Government garages here in the city, and they are full of machines; and apparently a great many Government employees use them who would not ordinarily use them.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that no Government employee is using an automobile at present unless it is by authority of law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course; but it is usually in a lump-sum appropriation, and in that way it is covered up.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I think they are limited in all the appropriations of late. Originally they were not limited; they were paid out of a general expense appropriation; but since we passed the law requiring that every Government automobile should be marked "U. S. A." in letters, I think, 5 inches in height, no appropriation that I know of has been made authorizing the purchase of automobiles unless it was specifically stated in the law. We have passed provision after provision authorizing the transfer of automobiles now held by the War Department to the different departments and to various officials, and also to the States, but that is always done by general legislation; and in this case I called my colleague's attention to the fact that we limit to $3,000 the amount that can be spent for the purchase and maintenance and operation of horse-drawn and motor-driven vehicles.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, I know; but the limitation is quite large, and a great many machines may be used. I am not objecting to this particular item, but it seems to me that a resolution ought to be passed by the Congress requiring the heads of all departments to show the number of passenger-carrying automobiles used in their departments, what officers use these machines, and the cost of each, including the maintenance and the cost of gasoline and everything else connected with the automobile. Whenever we secure the passage of a resolution like that, and get the information, as certainly as we live the expenditures for passenger automobiles are going to be greatly lessened, because the public will not stand for the large appropriations that are now being made for that purpose.

I hope the Senator from Utah, with his great skill in cutting down appropriations, will look into this matter and see if we can not have a resolution of that kind put through.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say frankly that I fought this automobile business for years and years and years, long before there was any regulation at all, and when everybody was using Government automobiles Sundays, nights, and at every other time.

Mr. CARAWAY. They do that yet.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose there is some of it done yet; but when it is done, there is not any question but that they have to park their automobiles somewhere, and we know that they are Government automobiles, whereas before we did not.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator really wants to know, if he will go out he can find them anywhere parked in front of apartment houses—not only automobiles of the Government, but automobiles of the District of Columbia. I rather imagine that it is the usual way of going courting.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose it is not limited to any one particular purpose; but when you take into consideration the extensive area of the Glacier National Park, in Montana, and the roads that the superintendent and the employees have to pass over, and the fact that we allow only $3,000 for automobile service and horse-drawn service, there can not be very much waste in that amount.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, line 13, to increase the appropriation for construction of physical improvements at Glacier National Park, Mont., from "$115,000" to "$125,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill, on page 72 the total of the appropriation for pensions this year is $253,000,000. Will the Senator state how that compares with the appropriations for last year and the year before?

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator in just a minute.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is for invalid pensions and pensions for widows and minor children and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls. I had understood that the number had been very greatly decreased by death, and I was wondering whether the appropriation had been decreased in the same proportion. I assume that it has.

Mr. SMOOT. In 1923—that is the present year—it was $253,987,720.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a decrease of $900,000.

Mr. SMOOT. In 1922 it was $266,839,920, or a decrease of about $11,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what I wanted to find out—why there was such a large decrease last year and only a relatively small decrease this year. In other words, as I remember the figures that the Senator has given, there was a decrease of about $12,000,000 last year, and this year it is about $900,000.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not possible that there would be that variation in the number of deaths; is it?

Mr. SMOOT. I was trying to think whether during last year or during this fiscal year there was not a pension bill passed increasing the appropriation for Indian pensions. I think that was the case, but I am not quite sure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Budget provide for this amount or for a less amount?

Mr. SMOOT. The Budget provided for the amount. This is the Budget estimate.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill appropriates the same amount that was provided for by the Budget?

Mr. SMOOT. Just the same as the Budget provides for.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the Senator thinks that the cause of what is virtually an increase is found in the passage of the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the only appropriation bill that I can think of.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was wondering whether the Senator might not be figuring on the Bursum bill, which was vetoed a short time ago.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; that was not figured. That would have cost $108,000,000 alone if it had become a law.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Indian pension bill would not be in here, would it?

Mr. SMOOT. These are all pensions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the old system of appropriating, my recollection is that the entire Indian appropriation bill was less than $10,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. No; they are all handled in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was that true when we were appropriating separately for Indian affairs?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the pensions never came under Indian affairs. They were always appropriated under the Interior Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it the Senator's recollection that the appropriation for Indian pensions amounts to as much as $10,000,000?

Mr. SMOOT. I should think it would; or more than that; I think all of that, if not more.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the figures, these are pensions provided for in the various acts of Congress largely for the Civil War. They are decreasing at the rate of about $10,000,000 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and in two or three years they ought to be considerably less, but if the widows come in there will be very, very little decrease.

Mr. McKELLAR. They were all married, I suppose, or nearly all of them.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the impression of the Senator from Utah that the widows do not die?

Mr. SMOOT. The widows are generally younger than the old men.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator a question. Is the civil pension list for Government employees in there?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is separate.

Mr. SMOOT. The high mark for pensions was in 1921.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much was it then?

Mr. SMOOT. Two hundred and seventy-nine million dollars; but if the Bursum bill had become a law the high-water mark would have been next year.

Mr. McKELLAR. About how much does it carry—$79,000,000?

Mr. SMOOT. One hundred and eight million dollars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, line 18, to increase the total appropriation for Glacier National Park, Mont., from "$215,000" to "$250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 6, to increase the appropriation for administration, protection, maintenance, etc., of the Mesa Verde National Park, Colo., from "$21,000" to "$25,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 7, to increase the appropriation for construction of physical improvements at Mesa Verde National Park, Colo., from "$10,000" to "$14,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 9, to increase the total appropriation for the Mesa Verde National Park, Colo., from "$31,000" to "$39,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 18, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$73,000, including not exceeding $38,000 for continuing widening of the Nesqually entrance to Paradise Valley Road," and, in line 24, to change the total appropriation from "$95,000" to "$133,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

Mount Rainier National Park, Wash.: For administration, protection, and maintenance, including not exceeding $1,800 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $60,000; for construction of physical improvements, $73,000, including not exceeding $38,000 for continuing widening of the Nesqually entrance to Paradise Valley Road, including not exceeding $25,300 for new public camp grounds at Longmire Springs, not exceeding $2,000 for a residence for the chief clerk, and not exceeding $2,000 for an employees' duplex cottage; in all, $133,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me correct the spelling there. It should be "Nisqually" instead of "Nesqually."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator explain how that item comes here? Was that an afterthought after the estimates were made up or is it an increase over the estimates?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not an increase. This amount of $38,000 is for continuing the widening of the Nisqually entrance——

Mr. FLETCHER. I know; it is taking care of a particular item there for continuing the widening of the entrance to Paradise Valley Road. It is an increase from $35,000 to $73,000 so as to include that.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would not that be new legislation?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is within the Budget estimate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know; but it is legislation on an appropriation bill apparently.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it was carried last year exactly the same, and now it is in the Budget estimate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Why was it omitted in the House?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know why the House left it out. I can not say.

Mr. McKELLAR. I imagine that it was contrary to their rules, just as it is contrary to ours.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Washington know why that was done?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that I do not know, of course, why the House committee omitted it; but an amendment was offered on the floor of the House to put it in, and the vote upon it was 17 to 18. The Senator knows how, in the Committee of the Whole, Members are not present and the votes are very small; but that shows how the membership was divided. This road, I understand, goes up into the park to an elevation of seven or eight thousand feet. Along this road there are great precipices, and riding along in a wagon or an automobile you look right down maybe two or three thousand feet. There are some places where the road is very narrow, and the authorities want to widen the road so as to make it perfectly safe. Thousands of tourists go into this park every year, and the numbers are increasing every year, and the purpose is to make the existing road much safer than it is now. It is a very dangerous situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is new legislation, but I shall not object to it, because I think it is a very worthy purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that it was estimated for, and the estimate was $81,200. We have only recommended $73,000, so we cut the Budget estimate.

Mr. McKELLAR. However that may be, it seems to be a very proper appropriation, and I think it ought to pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I desire to inquire of my colleague with respect to these various park appropriations. It seems, from a hasty examination of them, that the administrative costs are rather disproportionate to the aggregate appropriations. For my information, and doubtless for the information of other Senators, I would like to inquire generally the number of employees and the necessity for such a great amount for administrative purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. We can hardly make any estimate of the cost of the maintenance of all the parks. The Senator knows that when a park is first established the physical upbuilding of the park costs a great deal more than its maintenance costs after it is established. I have not the list of the number of employees. I can give the Senator in detail what the money is expended for, but I can not tell the number of employees.

Mr. KING. What is the average compensation paid superintendents? I see they have clerks—apparently considerable clerical help—in some of these parks. I can not see the necessity for clerks there.

Mr. SMOOT. I will look at the Budget and see if the appropriations for the different parks have been kept separate. I doubt very much whether the employees in the parks are paid any more than the regular employees of the Government are paid.

Let us take Crater Lake National Park, in Oregon. The superintendent is paid $2,400; the chief typist, $1,320; the head ranger, $1,200; the others, $1,080; foreman, $90 a month; machinist, $135 a month; storekeeper, $90 a month; timekeeper, $75 a month; blacksmith, $100 a month; engineman, $100 a month; truck driver, $90 a month; pump man, $75 a month; stableman, $75 a month; cook, $100 a month; carpenter, $6 a day; stonemasons, $6 a day; plumbers, $6 a day; teamster, $2.85 a day; and laborers, $2.70 a day.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether that park receives any tourists?

Mr. SMOOT. A great number of tourists visit it.

Mr. KING. I notice in the item for the Grand Canyon National Park, in Arizona, for administration, protection, and maintenance, $60,000 are provided. Then, for construction of physical improvements, $66,400, including not exceeding $40,000 for widening of certain roads; $6,000 for a building to be used as a community center; and $3,000 for the construction of a duplex cottage for employees. Then I notice in some of these appropriations provisions for homes for the superintendent and for the clerks. Is it the purpose to erect buildings to house all of the employees?

Mr. SMOOT. No; nor is that done. Generally there is a house provided for the superintendent, and necessarily so. I can tell the Senator how many people visit all the parks.

In his testimony before the committee Mr. Cammerer stated that during the past five years the number of people visiting the national parks has increased from 450,000 to 1,150,000. Of course, that throws an additional burden on the administration of the parks, and necessarily the expense has been increased.

Mr. KING. I am in sympathy with the policy of the Government to establish and protect and properly care for a limited number of national parks, but if we are not careful the expenses are going to be so enormous and the demands for increased parks so frequent that we will burden the Government after awhile far beyond the exigencies of the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. I have voted a great many times against the establishment of national parks.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think, from the record before him, that these very large sums for so-called physical improvements are necessary?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the physical improvement appropriations are the most vital in the bill. If the people are going to visit these parks it will be necessary to have somewhat better roads in the parks than are maintained to-day, and I think that before the parks are really taken advantage of, and result in what we intended they should result in, the Government of the United States has to spend some money for the building of roads and the maintenance of the roads and the physical improvement of the parks a great deal better than it is doing it to-day.

Mr. KING. I agree with my colleague that if we have parks they should be properly protected and guarded, and the roads should be such as will be inviting to tourists.

Mr. SMOOT. The Budget in nearly every case has estimated more money than the House gave, and we have increased the estimates very slightly indeed.

Mr. KING. I notice that in each of these numerous provisions dealing with separate parks an item is carried for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger vehicles.

Mr. SMOOT. It must necessarily be so.

Mr. KING. It would seem as though they have to have new vehicles every year.

Mr. SMOOT. Take the case of the Glacier National Park. They have only $3,000 for the maintenance of their motor vehicles, and if the Senator has undertaken to maintain an automobile in the District of Columbia, with the wear and tear and the expenses of keeping it, he knows what it costs. Out in the mountains, with gasoline costing almost double what it does here, $3,000 will not go very far toward maintaining the whole transportation facilities within a national park.

Mr. KING. All these physical improvements were deemed necessary by the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. If I had my way, I would see that the appropriations for physical improvements were increased so as to get the parks into shape, and not half do it and then let automobiles run over the roads during the year and destroy all that had been done beforehand. It is just as we used to do in the building of roads in the West. We would haul in a lot of dirt and fill up the roads, and the next year we would haul it out; and we never had a good road. As to the physical improvements in the parks, I think I would rather do less in extent and do it right, because when it is done right it is permanent. But when we put a patch here and a patch there, we never have a road complete.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, now that this discussion has been opened, I feel like saying that in my judgment there is no investment the Government of the United States makes that is more justifiable and returns better results than these expenditures made to make the national parks attractive. Year by year the number of our people who visit them is growing. A most gratifying showing is made.

Heretofore anyone who had a summer vacation to spend and wanted to get to the mountains or to some place where the scenery was attractive, posted off to Europe. The amount annually expended by American citizens who go to Europe to observe the attractive scenery is something stupendous. It forms an important item in the balances of an international character.

We have scenery in those parks, which are set apart by the wisdom and beneficence of the Government, that is unsurpassed anywhere in the world. Much has been done by the Government, as well as by the railroads interested in exploiting those parks, to bring their scenic beauty and their attractions to the knowledge of the American people. After many years of struggle that effort has begun to be appreciated. We have here something well worth visiting. The consequence is that many of our people not only go to visit those parks but return year after year to spend their summer vacations in the attractive and health-giving surroundings found there.

From an examination of these items, so far as the physical structures and the allowances made for the keeping up of vehicles for travel by the superintendents and the guards are concerned, they seem to be very reasonable indeed. I do not think any of the appropriations ought to be reduced, at least.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I agree with all the Senator from Montana has said. However, I live in a section of the country where perhaps one-eighth of the population go to the mountains in the summer time, and they appreciate very much the good roads leading to the mountains and through these parks. But I hear a good deal of complaint about the concessions the Government gives to people in these parks. Concessions are given to the hotel men and to the fellows who run automobile lines, and a good deal of complaint is made about the action of those concessionaires. I would like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the committee has ever looked into those things in this connection.

Mr. SMOOT. In the past, in one or two cases, complaints have been made and investigation has been undertaken and carried to a conclusion. I know of one complaint involving the Yellowstone National Park, where, of course, the concessionaires have better chances than in any of the other parks to make money out of any grant which may be given. At that time it developed that nothing had been made. I do not know what has been made since. I know, of course, that the travel through the park has increased greatly, but at that time the concession was a dead expense. In our State we have Zion Canyon Park, and it is hard for us to get a man to go there to take one of these concessions. In fact, in several cases the railroads have actually assisted in paying the expenses of a man to run the hotel in that park, small as it was at that time.

I do not think there is very much in the complaint. What I have heard more complaint about were the roads. Tourists have been put to great expense and great annoyance at times by the roads not being in condition, so that they were unable to get to a stopping place through some neglect, as they claim, of the party having the concession for carrying people into the parks. But when we come to examine into it, it always will be found there is some reason for it. There may be, as the Senator said, some ground for it, because there has been no investigation that I know of made since the increased travel has taken place in the parks. Within the last two years the increase of travel in our parks has been over 200 per cent. I never expect to see a year from now on in which the travel in our parks will not increase by leaps and bounds.

Mr. HARRELD. That ought to make it easier on the concessionaires and they ought to reduce their prices.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is true. I think when that situation arises there should be an examination made. I do not believe that any undue amount should be made by any concession that may be granted by the Government in any park. But before they get established I want to say that it is a pretty hard proposition for the concessionaires to make even a living in the parks. There is a short season generally, in the West a few months in the year, and travel has to be exceedingly heavy in order to pay any kind of concession to the Government. They are paying them in large amounts now, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I think perhaps some of the criticism has been directed to the point that the right to use passenger-carrying vehicles has necessarily been limited to the concessionaires. The complaint comes from transportation companies, who are unwilling to go in and agree to furnish regular service through the entire season when the park is open to the public, or in some cases, as, for instance, the Rocky Mountain National Park, through the entire year, because there are people who live in that section the year round. The question that arose there was thoroughly inquired into. It was taken up by one of the local chambers of commerce at the instance of a certain hotel keeper in the park, who has since passed away. The conclusion of the inquiry was that the park service was fully justified in awarding the contract to the transportation company that would agree to furnish and has furnished regular and adequate service to the visitors.

So far as I am aware, no complaint has been made as to the charges. The charges are believed to be reasonable, so far as my information goes. I think the information coming to the Senator is probably centered around the Rocky Mountain Park transportation service. I believe that has been inquired into and that the conditions have been found to be really above criticism under all the circumstances.

Mr. HARRELD. The last complaint I have had is that, with all the immense traffic through there, they have not reduced the rates. They ought to reduce the rates as the volume of business increases, but they have not done so.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to that suggestion I want to say to the Senator that the records show that so many private parties are taking their own automobiles into the park in greater numbers than ever before that it reduces the business of the concessionaire rather than increases it. I suppose there are one hundred automobiles going from the State of Utah into the Yellowstone National Park each year now where one went 10 years ago. There has been at least that much of an increase. Of course, that has a great deal to do with the amount of business which would otherwise go to the men who have received the concession, because they get little or no benefit from that class of travel.

For instance, private automobiles entering the Yellowstone National Park in 1916 were 3,445 in number; that is from all over the United States. In 1917 there were 5,703; in 1918, 4,734; in 1919, 10,737; in 1920, 13,586; in 1921, 15,726; in 1922, for just a part of the season, 18,253. I also have the figures as to all of the parks. For instance, the total as to all parks in 1916 was 29,000 private automobiles, and in 1922, for part of the season, 197,000. Those figures relate to the private cars.

Mr. HARRELD. I merely wanted to know if there had been any investigation to see if they were keeping pace with the general traffic.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am in agreement with the statement just made by the senior Senator from Montana relative to the advantages to be derived from the establishment of a reasonable number of national parks and maintaining them in a suitable and proper condition. The questions which I have propounded with respect to a number of the items over which we have just passed, carrying appropriations for national parks, and the observations submitted were the result of various criticisms which have been brought to my attention by individuals who claim that there was discrimination in favor of certain parks, and that the overhead expense—that is, the expense of administration—has been entirely too great. Complaints have been made to me that there were too many employees in some of the parks and that too much of the moneys appropriated by Congress for the maintenance of parks was spent in administration and too little devoted to legitimate and permanent road building. One gentleman who called upon me complained that some of the moneys expended did not produce adequate results; that there was too much theory and red tape and inefficiency, particularly with the employees and administrative forces operating within the parks.

I promised to make inquiry when the bill came up on the floor of the Senate in regard to a number of these items with a view to determining whether there was any basis for these criticisms. It has been my personal opinion that Mr. Mather, head of the national parks, has been exceedingly energetic in the performance of the work which devolves upon him and that he has devoted himself with intelligence and ability to the great work of developing our national parks and bringing them to the attention of the American people.

Mr. SMOOT. He has spent a great deal of his own money, too.

Mr. KING. My information is to the same effect as that of my colleague. Mr. Mather has believed that our country was rich in scenic beauties and that the Government should create a number of national parks and maintain them for the benefit of the people. In my opinion, it is a proper function of the Federal Government to utilize some of its domain for this purpose. Even from a utilitarian standpoint such a course would be justified; but other reasons not only justify but require the creation of national parks. The educational benefits resulting therefrom can not be measured, and the advantages which accrue to the people from having suitable places for recreation are beyond computation. In these parks, nature is exhibited in her power, and beauty, and grandeur.

Contact by the people with lofty mountains and transcendently beautiful geological formations, and lakes, and streams, and geysers, and myriad forms of animal and vegetable life, not only develop the artistic, moral, and religious spirit of the people, but it strengthens their love and devotion to country and in many ways equips them for higher and better service in life.

Criticism has often been made that the American people had been so absorbed in material things, and in the accumulation of wealth, that they have been blind to the physical and scenic beauties of their country and have been irresponsive to forces that make for spiritual and æsthetic development. Whether these criticisms are warranted, I shall not pause to examine. Undoubtedly, it is true that many of the people of our country have not become acquainted with the resources and beauties and with the physical and geographical conditions of the United States. Many have been denied opportunities to become acquainted with our country and it is not uncommon to find persons who have visited but a limited part of continental United States. Upon the other hand, there have been those who have been more interested in seeing Europe than in becoming acquainted with their own country. Tens of thousands of Americans have annually visited Europe during the past 50 years. They have spent their holidays and recreative periods not in their own land but beyond the seas. Many have treated with disdain the suggestion that they visit the West, or traverse the imperial domain stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Canadian border to the Rio Grande.

A number of years ago there came to the State of Utah a brilliant young Virginian, Fisher S. Harris. He was a worthy son of the Old Dominion State. He became one of the leading figures in my State, and for many years, indeed until his untimely death, he was a leader in all movements looking to the development of Utah and the West. He was a true American, and sought the unification of all sections and elements in our country. He gave to the American people the slogan "See America first," and inaugurated a campaign to compel a realization of the import and spirit of that slogan. He visited various States of the Union, and before thousands of their people raised his eloquent voice in behalf of a deeper and truer patriotism and a greater appreciation of our country and its institutions. He painted pictures—which have not faded from the minds of his auditors—of the physical beauties of our country; and the lofty mountains became silent sentinels guarding this Republic and pointing the way of the people to nobler resolves and to higher things. Under the spell of his inspiring words the very deserts became beautiful and the purple hues of the fading day and the overarching vault of the night filled with celestial orbs carried revelations to the souls of those who heard. It was as if a vision had been opened to their view, and to many came the resolve that in the future they would exhibit greater devotion to their country and that before seeking foreign shores they would "See America first."

Mr. President, I avail myself of this opportunity to commend the splendid work accomplished by the commercial organizations of my State, and particularly the Salt Lake Commercial Club, which has so consistently and earnestly labored for a quarter of a century to bring to the attention of the American people the great resources of the West and the unparalleled beauties of nature which in such a great profusion exist in Utah and other States of the intermountain region.

Mr. President, I regret that this bill does not carry an adequate appropriation for Zion Park, but I am assured that a later bill will provide for the construction of imperatively needed roads therein. In view of the promised legislation I shall not offer an amendment to the pending bill, although I appreciate that if I did it would be subject to a point of order.

Concerning the criticisms to which I referred in the beginning of these observations, permit me to say that I do not think they are supported by the facts, although it is quite likely that there have been some inefficient employees and perhaps too many persons in the service in some parks and at some periods. Unfortunately, most Government agencies suffer from overadministration and create too much machinery for the work to be done. I have felt that in many Federal agencies costs of administration were entirely too great. It is to be hoped that the National Park Service will practice the most rigid economy and secure the highest stage of efficiency. My own opinion is that the work of the park officials has been of a very high order, and Mr. Mather has exhibited a desire to accomplish the highest and best results.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 101, line 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 102, line 23, to increase the appropriation for construction of physical improvements at the Sequoia National Park, Calif., from "$80,000" to "$85,000," and on page 103, at the end of line 2, to increase the total appropriation for the Sequoia National Park, Calif., from "$115,000" to "$120,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 24, after the word "without," to strike out "contract or bond," and insert

"compliance with sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States"; so as to make the paragraph read:

Hereafter the purchase of supplies or the procurement of services by the National Park Service outside the District of Columbia may be made in open market without compliance with sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in the manner common among business men, when the aggregate amount of the purchase or service does not exceed $50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This concludes the amendments of the committee appearing in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a few more committee amendments to offer. On page 29, line 8, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I offer the amendment on behalf of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. It is a committee amendment. The junior Senator from Missouri is chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the committee were instructed to offer it. That Senator is now in the chair and I offer the amendment in his behalf.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 29, line 8, after the colon insert:

Provided further, That hereafter upon a determination of the heirs to any trust or restricted Indian property of the value of $250 or more, or to any allotment, or, after approval by the Secretary of the Interior, of any will covering such trust or restricted property, there shall be paid by such heirs, or by the beneficiaries under such will, or from the estate of the decedent, or from the proceeds of sale of the allotment, or from any trust funds belonging to the estate of the decedent, the sum of $20 where the appraised value of the estate of the decedent is $250 or more and does not exceed $1,000. Where the appraised value of the estate of the decedent is more than $1,000 and less than $2,000, $25; where the appraised value of the estate of the decedent is $2,000 or more and does not exceed $3,000, $30; where the appraised value of the estate of the decedent is more than $3,000 but does not exceed $5,000, $50; where the appraised value of the estate of the decedent is more than $5,000 but does not exceed $7,500, $65; and where the appraised value of the estate of the decedent is more than $7,500, $75; which amount shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States, and a report shall be made annually to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior on or before the first Monday in December of all moneys collected and deposited as herein provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRELD. May I ask what the fees are for?

Mr. SPENCER. The amendment is one that comes from the department, and I will state the purpose. In ascertaining the heirship of Indians, when the heirship is ascertained and as the result thereof the Indian whose heirship is thus ascertained gets a part of the Indian funds, out of that which he gets there is a small fee in connection with the expense of the ascertainment of his heirship that goes to provide for the expense of making the examination. The fee is comparatively small and is not assessed unless the Indian actually reaps benefits from the examination.

Mr. HARRELD. Who makes the examination?

Mr. SPENCER. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARRELD. For what Indian tribe has he the right to determine such matters?

Mr. SPENCER. In any matter where that duty is given to him by Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. It only applies when the question is to be handled by the office here.

Mr. HARRELD. It applies to cases handled by the Indian Office here in Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the junior Senator from Missouri, why this should not apply to the Osage Indians?

Mr. SPENCER. Did the Senator from Montana ask me a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to know why the Osage Indians as well are not required to contribute?

Mr. SPENCER. The proposed amendment does not mention any particular tribe, and I presume it is applicable to all tribes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But there is a proviso here which reads:

Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the Osage Indians nor to the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma.

As I understand, the Government of the United States, through the Indian Bureau, undertakes to prosecute the proceedings for the determination of the heirs of deceased Indians and provides attorneys for that work. It is very just that in case of estates of any consequence there should be turned into the Treasury a certain amount to reimburse the Government for that expenditure. A great many of these Indians are very wealthy and there is good reason why the Government should interest itself in the determination of heirship, but the estates of the Indians ought to contribute to the expense. What I wish to know is why we should thus favor the Osage Indians and the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma, while we impose this burden upon other Indians?

Mr. SPENCER. I can not say to the Senator from Montana with absolute accuracy, but my recollection is that there was a treaty agreement with those Indians by which the ascertainment of the question of heirship should be determined without cost to them. That, however, is only a general impression, and I can not vouch for its correctness; but there was a reason why those two tribes were omitted.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Perhaps the Senator from Oklahoma can give me the information I desire.

Mr. HARRELD. Perhaps I can explain the matter. The Osage Tribe of Indians, of whom there are only 2,200 members, who are all enrolled, own the whole of their property in common. It has never been segregated or separated or allotted in severalty. In administering that estate it is perfectly natural and perfectly proper for the Government to see that the proper record is kept as to the heirs of deceased Indians. I think that is the reason those Indians are excepted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But it would seem to me, then, Mr. President, that the Government ought to be reimbursed for the work from the community fund.

Mr. HARRELD. All the expenses of administering the fund are paid by the tribe; therefore, it is covered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If that it the case, of course, it is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 82, line 18, after the figures $140,000, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That repayment of the construction cost of the project may be made through a division by the Secretary of the Interior of such cost into a primary construction charge and a supplemental construction charge of approximate equality, the former payable according to section 2 and the latter payable according to section 4 of the extension act of August 13, 1914 (38 Stat. 686).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Milk River project is in Montana. The net construction cost to date of that project is $6,559,896. There has not been a cent of reimbursement paid on the project, and it is frankly admitted by the Director of the Reclamation Service, Mr. Davis, that the project itself, as a whole, is going to be a failure. It would be too long a story to recite. However, the owners of a portion of the lands included in the project can pay a reasonable amount for the water that is furnished from the project. Such lands are limited in area. The amendment provides that wherever there are lands of that character which are really agricultural lands and are susceptible of cultivation by irrigation, and the water is brought to them according to the original contract, no matter how small in quantity such lands may be, they may pay their part of the contract but not be liable for all of the cost of construction; in other words, unless Congress adopts this amendment the Government can collect nothing from the few who can successfully use the water under the project. I do not think there will be any objection to the proposal on the part of the people who get the water and whose land is susceptible of cultivation by irrigation.

I think both Senators from Montana know that a great deal of that land has what, I think, is called gumbo under it, and it is virtually impossible of successful irrigation. Therefore I have not any doubt, nor has the Director of the Reclamation Service any doubt, that the Government of the United States will never get back the cost of the project, but what little we can get back through the amendment the Director of the Reclamation Service thinks we ought to recover.

Mr. McKELLAR. How many people are now located on this project?

Mr. SMOOT. How much money have we spent on it?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator stated that we have spent $6,000,000 on it. How long has the project been in existence? When was the project started?

Mr. WALSH of Montana rose.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps the Senator from Montana can answer the question of the Senator from Tennessee. I do not know the date when the project was begun, and have not the information relative to the matter now before me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me, I feel that I ought to say something in this connection, and I am glad to reply to the question which has been addressed to the Senator from Utah by the Senator from Tennessee. This was the first reclamation project ever started.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the entire West?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Anywhere. It was started or at least investigation of it was begun even before the reclamation act was passed. It was begun under the direction of the Geological Survey in the year 1890. Some expenses were incurred in that connection even before the reclamation act was passed; but as speedily after the reclamation act was passed as possible work was begun upon the project, because it obtains its supply of water from two rivers—the St. Mary and the Milk River—both of which have their source in the Glacier National Park. The St. Mary River flows due north into Canada and never comes back, its waters finding their way into Hudson Bay through the Saskatchewan. The other, the Milk River, flows off into Canada, remains there for a distance of about 150 miles, and then comes back into Montana. The area to be irrigated by the project is in the Milk River Valley.

At that time reclamation projects were about to be started in Canada, and it was feared that if work were not instituted in this country before work was begun in Canada Canadian settlers would be able to claim priority in the waters which thus had their origin in the State of Montana. So the work was begun and, at great expense, a very considerable amount of work was done, though not directly for the benefit of the project, in order to forestall any such claims as might be made by the Canadian Government with reference to it.

The Senator from Utah has referred to the threatened failure of this project. It has dragged along during all these years and still remains far from completion. Much of the extraordinary delay that has ensued, resulting in the enormous increase in the cost of the project, was due to the controversy which thus arose between this country and Canada concerning the utilization of the waters of these two rivers.

Among the works to which I have referred was an extremely expensive canal by which the water was taken from the St. Mary River, which never comes back into Montana, and carried over into the Milk River, the water eventually coming back into Montana.

The controversy raged for many years between this country and Canada over the division of the waters of these two rivers, resulting in the year 1909 in the negotiation of a treaty with Great Britain under which the waters of these two rivers were to be divided. Then, unfortunately, a controversy as serious as the original controversy arose in relation to the construction which was to be given to the treaty thus negotiated, those interested in the State of Montana contending that if the contention of the Canadian Government with respect to the meaning of the treaty should be maintained the expenditure which the Government of the United States had then made, amounting to several million dollars, would be absolutely wasted and Montana would never get enough of the water of these rivers to irrigate the land within her borders. That controversy was pending for a number of years before the International Joint Commission created by virtue of the treaty of 1909, to which I have adverted. The controversy was heard by the commission three separate times, once at St. Paul in 1915, again at Detroit in 1917, and lastly at Ottawa, Canada, in the spring of 1921. It dragged its course before that commission until last spring, when it was determined in favor of the contention made by the United States.

These and many other obstacles have intervened, so that it now appears under the most careful estimate that the cost of this project will not be less than $83 per acre. The estimate originally made when the project was undertaken, upon which the people of the community were induced to go into it, was not more than $25 per acre. The report of the Reclamation Service discloses that the annual return per acre from the land up to the present time—it is hoped that it will be very greatly increased as cultivation proceeds—is $8.30 per acre. So it will be perceived that with a construction cost of $83 per acre and a maintenance cost of $1.50 per acre per annum where we stand on the project.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how many acres are under cultivation now and how many people are located on the project?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can not give the Senator the figures as to the number of people, but this is the information given in the report for the current year:

Areas and crops:
Irrigable acreage when project is complete, 160,208.

One hundred and sixty thousand acres are to be irrigated.

Public land entered to June 30, 1922, 31,590.
Public land withdrawn on June 30, 1922, 19,603.
State land unsold on June 30, 1922, 6,795.
Private land, June 30, 1922, 102,220.
Acreage service could supply, season of 1921, 94,100 acres.
Acreage irrigated, season of 1921, 42,400 acres.
Acreage cropped under irrigation, season of 1921, 39,910 acres.
Value of irrigated crops, season of 1921, $358,080.
Value of irrigated crops per acre cropped, $8.98.

I might say in this connection that, as will be perceived, a very considerable acreage of the area under the ditch is held in private ownership. Many of those tracts are held in areas of very considerable extent. An effort is now being made to colonize those lands; and it is a part of the plan which this amendment is to make feasible that before the Secretary shall order the distribution which is contemplated here funds shall be secured from the owners of the larger tracts of land for a limited sum which will justify an attempt to colonize the lands, so that the settlers will go upon the lands and take them in restricted areas, and thus the Government eventually, it is hoped, will come out. I do not think the statement is quite justified that it is a failure and that the Government must lose; but there is no doubt in the world that, with respect to a considerable portion of the land referred to by the Senator from Utah, it will be necessary to give very much more liberal terms than are accorded under the present act.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the statement I made was simply repeating exactly what the Director of the Reclamation Service states.

Mr. McKELLAR. It never has paid at all?

Mr. SMOOT. Not a cent.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That might be misleading, Mr. President. Under the reclamation act payments are not made at all on construction charges until the work is completed and the total amount expended is determined and thus apportioned between the acreage to be irrigated. That is arrived at when notice of completion of construction is given by the Secretary of the Interior. The project not having been completed, and no notice of completion of construction having been given, no payments, of course, have been made.

Mr. McKELLAR. When is it proposed that the construction will be completed?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, that depends upon how rapidly the work goes on. I have stood here ever since I have been in the Senate pleading and pleading with the Senate to make adequate appropriations for these reclamation projects, so that they could go on with some reasonable degree of rapidity and not consume themselves by overhead charges.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it cost more to have piecemeal appropriations?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Unquestionably.

Mr. McKELLAR. It costs a great deal more?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Unquestionably.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should imagine that it would.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. You see, this has been going on now for 20 years, and so the overhead charges are very considerable. This $83 an acre has come about very largely by reason of the overhead charges.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has any estimate ever been made by the Director of the Reclamation Service as to how much it would cost to complete the project?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is that?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the figures before me here tell the proportion of completion. I thought I had them here; but it could be figured out easily enough, because the figures are $83 per acre and the area is 160,000 acres.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether any part of that 160,000 acres may resort to any other source of water supply than this irrigation project?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the Milk River and its tributaries are the sole source of water supply for this region.

Mr. KING. Are the private lands to which the Senator referred—and I think he said there were approximately 100,000 acres—required to go to this reclamation project for their water supply?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They are within the reclamation project; and in order to lessen the cost of the public lands, of course, as the Senator understands, the private lands were taken in, the private owners agreeing to pay the same amount as would be paid by the adjacent public lands.

Mr. KING. And they have made no payments whatever yet?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As I have explained, there has been no occasion to make any payments, because the amount to which they are obligated can not possibly be determined until the notice of completion is given.

Mr. SMOOT. Were they dry farming in that section?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes. That is another thing. During the years 1915 and 1916 there was a great abundance of moisture all over our State, and crops of very great value were raised. Indeed, for several years prior to that time the precipitation was relatively abundant and it was difficult to get settlers to take land under the irrigation projects, they all going for the region above the ditch; but our experience for the last four or five years has been exceedingly disappointing in that respect, and we now hope to induce immigration to the lands that are thus insured by the reclamation project. We are hoping to bring that about.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the figures that the Senator gave a few moments ago would make $13,280,000 for the completed project, and, as I understood the Senator from Utah a while ago, about $6,000,000 has been expended; so that over $7,000,000 more would be needed to complete the project.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is practically half completed, then. Just about half the amount has been expended.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the appropriation in this bill is only $140,000.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the trouble.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will take a long time to finish it at that rate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have stood here on this floor session after session calling attention to these facts. We have got this money in, and we are just putting in little driblets that barely cover the overhead charges and maintenance.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator claim that all of the land under the project is irrigable land?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; unfortunately, that is not so. At the present time there is a very considerable area of the land under the project that can not be profitably tilled.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the Director of the Reclamation Service advised the Senate committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. About how much of the land will be good land if the project is completed?

Mr. SMOOT. The director did not say to the committee what proportion of it, but I am quite sure that it is quite a large proportion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think they have not yet gone far enough to furnish the information asked by the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. A portion of the land, as I understand, will not be good even if they have the water?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Except by very high cultivation. Those of us from the West who know about these matters know that often these gumbo lands, after undergoing a number of years' cultivation, become highly productive; but they are very refractory, and it takes years to bring them under cultivation.

I should like to conclude what I have to say by reading from the statement made by Mr. Davis, the Director of the Reclamation Service, before the House committee, as follows:

> The continued advance of construction costs and the long drawn-out delays due to international difficulties have increased the cost above reasonable expectations, and it has been found that a large portion of the land has a very heavy gumbo soil difficult to reclaim and incapable of repaying the construction cost under present laws.
> The adoption of this project was ordered after deliberate decision that it was justified at a considerable sacrifice of the reclamation fund to preserve this water from foreign appropriation. The project is not yet finished, and, in my judgment, it will not be possible to collect from the irrigable lands the construction charges on the basis of the present laws without some amelioration of the terms of collection. It is possible, however, to segregate these costs into two portions—first, those of the completed works, and, second, those of works not built or but partially built which are necessary for the success of the project—and if we can have authority to divide these charges into two parts and consider one part a supplemental charge, such as contemplated in section 4 of the extension act, there will be a chance to recover investments that can not be otherwise recovered. For this purpose I recommend the following language be incorporated in the appropriation act.

Being the language tendered by the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield again, I notice that the bill speaks of several other reclamation projects in Montana. I believe the last one is the Montana-North Dakota project.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state how these projects are developing? A great deal of work has been done on them, I believe.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the situation in reference to the other projects in Montana?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Huntley project has been completed, and it has been a very marked success, very largely due to the fact that it is in the immediate vicinity of Billings, where there is a large sugar factory; and the culture of sugar beets is carried on extensively on the Huntley project. The Senator will understand that by reason of that situation the yield per acre on the Huntley project is very high as compared with the Milk River project, for instance. It is hoped that in time we shall be able to get a sugar factory located on the Milk River project, and that will help very materially.

Mr. McKELLAR. What sums have been paid back to the Government under the Huntley project? Has the Government been reimbursed?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My recollection is that there are practically no deficiencies on the Huntley project.

Mr. McKELLAR. No deficiencies at all? It has been, then, an abundant success?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It has.

Mr. SMOOT. In the Huntley project there has been repaid to the Government $345,647 out of a net construction cost of $1,467,685.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not all been paid, has it, by any means?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will understand that it is to be paid in 20 years. Everything that is due, I am quite sure, has been paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; so that it will pay out entirely?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no doubt.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator information in regard to the Sun River and Lower Yellowstone projects?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Sun River project is still in the same state of incompletion as the Milk River project, but I have never heard it suggested that there is any doubt about the Sun River project.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about the Sun River project.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will pay, just as the Huntley project will?

Mr. SMOOT. That will pay out. It has already paid $135,863.

Mr. McKELLAR. Those amounts when they are paid in are covered into the Treasury; are they?

Mr. SMOOT. They are covered into the Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are not used to maintain the project? The cost of maintenance is appropriated for here?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is separate. The cost of maintenance and operation is separate from the construction charge. The Senator is giving the construction charge.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice here, in the case of the Huntley project, that $115,000 is appropriated for continuation of construction and incidental operations.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not in the construction charge, I will say to the Senator. As the Senator says, that is entirely a different item.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will observe that it says "continuation."

Mr. McKELLAR. "Continuation of construction"; yes. It provides for it in the bill. I was just wondering how long the appropriations would have to be continued for these projects—I mean where they are practically completed, as the Huntley project seems to be.

The questions that I am asking are not in opposition to the appropriations at all. I just want to find out what the situation is about these matters. I take it that these appropriations for reclamation do an immense amount of good out in your country. I think so, and I sincerely hope so; but I just wanted the information in reference to this point.

Mr. SMOOT. One-twentieth of the total construction cost is to be paid each year after the declaration that the construction is completed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then what about the operation cost? The Government continues to operate, does it?

Mr. SMOOT. The operation cost is charged to the project—that is, to the users of the water—each year.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, all of this appropriation that we now make for construction and incidental operation will be paid back?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the operation cost.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to say to the Senator with respect to that that this "continuation of construction" has reference, I take it, to the act recently passed.

It has been found that after these projects are completed, as it is understood at the time, some supplementary work is necessary. Frequently there is no water on the land, and it is necessary to set up some drainage system. The Reclamation Service is so situated that it can conduct that work, and it is very desirable that it should do so. The act referred to makes provision for the payment of this supplemental charge over a period of years, so that, so far as the continuation of construction is concerned, it will all be paid, but will be paid only in installments, the same as the original cost.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the committee any further amendments?

Mr. SMOOT. On page 75, line 10, after the word "papers," I move to insert a comma and the following words:

Such papers when reproduced for sale to be sold at not less than cost plus 10 per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 96, line 13, after the word "building," I move to strike out "$33,000" and to insert the words "and surrounding the mine, $75,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 103, after line 19, I move to insert the following new paragraph:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, and under regulations to be prescribed by him, to give surplus elk, buffalo, bear, beaver, and predatory animals inhabiting the Yellowstone National Park to Federal, State, county, and municipal authorities for preserves, zoos, zoological gardens, and parks: Provided, That the said Secretary may sell or otherwise dispose of the surplus buffalo of the Yellowstone National Park herd, and all moneys received from the sale of any such surplus buffalo shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. President, just a word of explanation: The first part of the amendment is existing law, but the proviso is new. It is recommended by the department for this reason, that the buffalo in the Yellowstone Park are growing in numbers so rapidly that they are becoming a perfect nuisance. We have had to purchase hay to keep them alive. They are a nuisance to people outside of the park, and the park service is asking for this authority to either sell or to give to the States the extra buffalo, which are to-day an expense on the Government. That is all there is to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 106, line 13, I move to strike out "$95,000" and to insert "$100,000," and in line 16 to strike out "$9,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$10,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment proposed by the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state the reason for that? Is it above the Budget estimate?

Mr. SMOOT. It is just the Budget estimate. The House cut the Budget estimate, giving them $95,000 for the support of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf. The Budget had estimated a hundred thousand dollars. For the repairs to the building of the institution, including plumbing and steam fitting, the Budget estimate was for $10,000, and the House cut it to $9,000.

I have a letter here from the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, addressed to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], in which they say that it is absolutely impossible for them to get along in the school unless they have what the Budget granted them, and this is simply to carry out that desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 106, line 13, strike out "$95,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000," and on line 16 strike out "$9,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000," so as to read:

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF.

For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, books and illustrative apparatus, and general repairs and improvements, $100,000.

For repairs to buildings of the institution, including plumbing and steam fitting, and for repairs to pavements within the grounds, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment. I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 34, after line 14, insert the following separate paragraph:

The sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated from any tribal funds on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians of the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., to be immediately available, to pay one-half the cost of constructing a wagon road, within said reservation, between Cooley and the northeast boundary of said reservation: Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein authorized shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the county of Apache, Ariz., satisfactory guarantees of the payment by said county of one-half of the cost of the construction of said road.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a few words in explaining the amendment. Apache County is the northeastern county of the State of Arizona. It will be observed from this map [exhibiting] that the red lines are the boundary lines of Apache County. The yellow on the map indicates an Indian reservation, and it will be perceived that about one-half of that county is within an Indian reservation and, of course, the lands therein not taxed and not subject to settlement. The population of that county is smaller than that of any of the other counties of our State, and the taxable property is also smaller than that of any of the other counties of that State. Nevertheless, that county has recently issued bonds in the sum of $375,000 to build roads in that county.

The town of Cooley is in Apache County and is within Fort Apache Indian Reservation. There is no suitable road leading from Cooley, in the reservation, to St. Johns, the county seat of the county, and to the town of Springerville, some 40 miles from Cooley; but the board of supervisors of the county have set apart the sum of $15,000 out of this sum of $375,000 avails of bond sales for the construction of a road in the Indian reservation from the town of Cooley to the reservation line, and are simply asking that the United States Government meet that sum of $15,000 with a like sum for the following reasons:

First, the grazing fees paid into the tribal funds amount annually to $50,000. At the town of Cooley is a large sawmill, sawing matured timber on that Indian reservation. The amounts paid for stumpage have been $100,000 annually until within the past year and a half, when a slump in the market shut down the mill; but the mill resumed operation last July, and the stumpage avails for 1922 will be $40,000 and for many years to come will be $100,000 annually.

It is but just that where the county expends such a sum as $375,000 to build roads and sets aside $15,000 thereof to build a road on an Indian reservation the Federal Government should pay at least half of the expenses of constructing the road. It will be perceived that no part of the appropriation shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of Apache County satisfactory guaranties of the payment of one-half the cost of the road, or $15,000. The revenues accruing in that corner of the reservation will amount to $150,000 a year, to go into the Treasury to the credit of that tribe.

The Indians are in favor of this. The citizens of the county have shown their good faith by their willingness to pay one-half of the expense of the road. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SPENCER. I understand from the Senator from Arizona that the Indians on the reservation and the tribe to which they belong are in favor of the use of their money in this way?

Mr. ASHURST. They are; and this prompts me to say that Mr. HAYDEN, Representative in Congress from Arizona, has introduced a bill looking to this end, of which my amendment is a rescript. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has directed a favorable report on Mr. HAYDEN's bill, but owing to the cluttered condition of the calendars, it may be difficult for the bill to pass, hence I have availed myself of the opportunity to propose this amendment to the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will be compelled to make a point of order against the amendment. It has not been estimated for, and it is new legislation.

Mr. ASHURST. Before the Senator makes his point of order, I must say that he was out of the Chamber during my argument. I am sure that if the Senator had heard me, he would not make his point of order. Therefore, I am driven to the unfortunate necessity of repeating what I have already said, because I know after the Senator has heard what I have to say he would never think of making a point of order, because he is a progressive statesman, seeking to do substantial justice. If the Senator will give me his attention, I will repeat what I have heretofore said.

Mr. SMOOT. Nothing would please me better than to accommodate the Senator at this time, but I know that if the committee approve of this amendment, there are at least a dozen or 15 more, running all the way up to a hundred thousand dollars, which would be offered; and if I allow one to go in, I am barred from objecting to the others from going in. I do not think the Senator wants to put me and the committee in that position.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I will support his measure as separate legislation, but we are up against a proposition here of keeping this bill within reason, and I would not want to hold out hope to the Senator and say that it can go in, and then have it go out in conference, with all the expense and time wasted in both the House and the Senate. I must make a point of order against the amendment, although I dislike to do it. I am compelled to do it.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the situation practically is this: Even if the Senator should hear my argument, he would be obliged to make a point of order?

Mr. SMOOT. I would be obliged to make it.

Mr. ASHURST. Therefore, there would be no use of my detaining the Senate further at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order made by the Senator from Utah is sustained.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 60, after line 13, insert the following new paragraph:

That the time for the reimbursement of the sums appropriated for the benefit of the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon, under the authority of the last paragraph of section 19 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for various other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved May 25, 1918, is extended until December 31, 1924.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no appropriation involved in the amendment. I think it is necessary, and I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 47, after line 11, insert the following as a new paragraph:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, by agreement or otherwise, to bring 4,887 acres of Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the provisions and benefits of a drainage district, organized pursuant to the laws of said State, for the purpose of draining the lands within the Newlands irrigation project; and there is hereby appropriated the sum of $2,500, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the first installment assessable against said Indian lands: Provided, however, That the total amount of the charges assessed against said Indian lands shall not exceed $49,603.05, and shall be payable in 20 annual installments: Provided further, That the Indian lands so drained by said district shall not be amenable to any lien which is subject to foreclosure created by the laws of said State for failure to pay charges when due: And provided further, That the money herein appropriated shall be reimbursed in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the amendment is identical with that which was incorporated in the Interior Department appropriation bill last year. The amendment was agreed to in the Senate and was lost in conference. The failure of the amendment in conference was made the basis of a protest by my colleague [Mr. PITTMAN], who, in view of an understanding secured on the floor of the Senate that the Indian Affairs Committee would act promptly on a bill if introduced by him covering the same matter, withdrew his opposition to the adoption of the conference report and permitted action on it to be taken. The Committee on Indian Affairs, in complying with this understanding, favorably reported the bill which was introduced by my colleague, with several amendments. They cut out a small acreage and reduced the appropriation proportionately. The bill then was placed on the calendar, where it now is.

I would like to have printed in the RECORD the report of the committee containing a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], by the Acting Secretary of the Interior, Judge Finney.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 714, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, Calendar No. 709.]

DRAINAGE SYSTEM FOR PAIUTE INDIANS IN THE STATE OF NEVADA.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 3384:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3384) authorizing an appropriation to meet proportionate expenses of providing a drainage system for Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the Newlands reclamation project of the Reclamation Service, having considered the same, report favorably thereon, with the recommendation that the bill do pass with the following amendments:

On page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "eight hundred and eighty-seven" and insert in lieu thereof "and forty-seven."

On page 1, line 9, strike out the figures "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,100."

On page 1, line 13, strike out the figures "$49,603.05" and insert in lieu thereof "$41,077.05."

The facts relating to the bill are fully set forth in the following letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, under date of April 15, 1922, which is appended hereto and made a part hereof:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 14, 1922.

Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Further reference is made to your letter of April 4, 1922, inclosing for report a copy of S. 3384, providing for inclusion of certain Paiute Indian lands in a drainage district in Nevada and for the payment of the proportionate cost of draining such lands. The necessity of including the Indian lands in the drainage district is apparent and the purpose of the proposed legislation meets with my approval.

In regard to this matter I may say that a recent report, based on an investigation made by the assistant chief engineer of the Indian irrigation service, shows that practically all lands in the Newlands irrigation project except the Indian lands have been included in a State drainage district organized for the purpose of providing adequate drainage facilities for the lands within the Newlands project. The Paiute Indian lands within said project for which water rights have been acquired approximate 4,047 acres. Of this area some 1,200 acres are now waterlogged, which renders the land unfit for cultivation. This condition seems to clearly indicate the necessity for drainage. The Indian lands have not been included within the drainage district, due to the fact that it would require specific action on the part of Congress authorizing their inclusion.

It is my understanding that the drainage project proposed by the district will cost approximately $700,000. By dividing the acreage including the Indian lands into that cost will place the per acre cost or assessment at $10.15.

The records show that the charge for acquiring water rights for the Paiute Indian lands was $97,848 and that $47,293.20 has been expended on account of maintenance and operation. The construction cost on a per acre basis is about $20 and the annual operation and maintenance assessment for a 10-year period about $1 per acre. Both these charges, as compared with similar charges on other projects, are quite reasonable. In view of these facts the Indian lands can readily stand an additional charge of $10.15 per acre for drainage purposes.

In view of this situation and of the fact that the Indian lands will of necessity have to be drained, the only reasonable deduction is that provision should be made to include them within the State drainage district and make provision for the payment of their proportionate part of the expense entailed.

The bill as introduced provides for the drainage of 4,887 acres. This area is in excess of the actual amount for which water rights have been acquired. The irrigable area of Indian lands, as above set forth, is 4,047 acres. This reduction in the area naturally reduces the total proportionate share of the cost of the drainage. The total amount for this work appearing in line 13 should be therefore changed to $41,077.05 and the annual installment should be reduced to $2,100 instead of $2,500, as appears in line 9. The area appearing in lines 4 and 5, page 1, should also be changed to 4,047 acres instead of 4,887. With these changes I shall be pleased to see the bill enacted into law, providing it meets with the approval of your committee and the Congress.

Sincerely,

E. C. FINNEY, Acting Secretary.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I believe that a point of order should not lie against the amendment, because under the substitute for clause 1, Rule XVI, applying to amendments to appropriation bills, it is stated:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it may be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

The amendment is in pursuance of existing law, the reclamation act, under which the Newlands reclamation project has been carried out. My amendment was agreed to by the Senate last year in identically the words of the amendment which I have just offered, and I feel that the Senate in showing good faith will allow the amendment to be agreed to. When my colleague's bill was introduced, it was passed on by a committee of the Senate and by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which shows that the department approved it. The provisions contained in this amendment are perfectly legitimate and very necessary to the Newlands reclamation project. The people on that project have suffered severely from conditions for which they were not responsible. I ask that the amendment may be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was before the committee and this particular amendment was under consideration, asked the commissioner:

Is it desirable to include these Indian lands?
Commissioner BURKE. We do not ask for it.
Senator SPENCER. You do not think it is advisable?
Commissioner BURKE. I do not know anything about it. I know we are not asking for it.
Senator SPENCER. Is it estimated for?
Commissioner BURKE. No.

It has not been estimated for. The Budget did not recommend it. For that reason I make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What does the Senator from Utah say with reference to the contention of the Senator from Nevada that the amendment is for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of an existing law?

Mr. SMOOT. It provides for an appropriation for a certain purpose that may have been caused by the construction of an irrigation project under the Newlands law, but it has nothing whatever to do with the original law. More than likely the lands that are to be drained were caused to be flooded by the construction of an irrigation project, but it had nothing whatever to do with the law itself.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Utah that a matter of this kind should be looked at in a broad way. This condition was brought about by water being placed on certain lands under the Newlands irrigation project, which caused certain other lands to be flooded. It is necessary that this drainage project be installed for the drainage of certain lands, including these Indian lands which receive the benefit of that drainage project and should pay their proportionate share of the cost.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question but what the Senator could introduce a bill appropriating the amount. Then, if Congress sees fit to appropriate the money for the purpose of assisting the individuals who were damaged by the construction of the Newlands project in the State of Nevada, well and good. Let it be done by the introduction of a bill for that specific purpose. But this is a direct appropriation which has not been estimated for, and under the rule it can not be put upon an appropriation bill when an objection is made to it. I am in sympathy with the Senator's object. I will say to the Senator that I will vote for his bill when it comes before the Senate, if he will introduce it. But if this amendment is put on here, every other claim would have to be allowed. It is nothing more nor less than a claim against the Government of the United States.

Mr. ODDIE. I will state to the Senator from Utah that the Senate passed the appropriation bill last year, containing exactly the same amendment that I have introduced again.

Mr. SMOOT. And the House ought to have passed it and that would have settled it. If the House would pass it and the Senator would bring it here, I would vote for it and support it and help the Senator to get it through. There is no question but what the work ought to be done. I know what these lands are that are made wet by irrigation, I know what it means to the land, and I know that the lands are not going to be good for agricultural purposes until they are drained. But this is asking for an appropriation to enable that to be done, and if I let this amendment be attached to the appropriation bill I do not see how I could make objection to other similar amendments.

Mr. ODDIE. It seems to me such a clear case of justice, because the people in the district under the law are constructing the drainage system which is a very necessary part of the irrigation project. The Indian lands are receiving the benefit from it and it is only fair and just that they should pay their share. I believe this amendment is germane to the bill. I will say further to the Senator from Utah that there is now on the Senate Calendar the bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. PITTMAN] to which I have referred, making it unnecessary for me to introduce a similar bill.

The fact is that the Senate passed a measure last year in identical terms, and it does not seem as if it were fair to my colleague or to me if it does not allow the amendment to go in this year. He tried to get it through last year after the conference committee threw it out. I feel that it is only just to our project that the amendment should be agreed to. I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I would do so if I could, but I can not do it. As I said, I am in sympathy with the object of the Senator, but let the matter be presented in the proper way. The amendment which he now offers provides for a straight appropriation for which no estimate has been made at all. Therefore, I am compelled to make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 39, after line 19, insert:

To pay the sum of $17,471.25 to the Allied Contractors (Inc.), of Omaha, Nebr., as additional compensation for the construction of a bridge across the Little Colorado River near the Leupp Indian Agency, Ariz., under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior on November 10, 1919, funds for said bridge having been appropriated by the acts of March 2, 1917, May 25, 1918, and June 30, 1919, and the cost thereof to the contractors having exceeded the contract price by said sum: Provided, That said amount shall be reimbursable to the United States from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Navajo Indians in Arizona, to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of said tribe of Indians until paid.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the bridge referred to in the amendment was built on the Navajo Indian Reservation, I think, in Arizona. It was an absolutely necessary piece of work. The bridge was built under the authority of the acts which are cited in the amendment. When the time for the construction arrived and the materials had been shipped to the place the contractor found that the engineer of the department had made a mistake in his soundings as to the depth necessary to go in order to reach bedrock. He refused to go on with the work, and was summoned to Washington and made what might be called a supplemental agreement with the department as to the construction. The memorandum which was sent to me by the assistant commissioner is dated April 29, 1920, and reads as follows:

LEUPP BRIDGE CONTRACT WITH ALLIED CONTRACTORS (INC.).

APRIL 29, 1920.

PURCHASE DIVISION:

At a conference held on this date by Assistant Secretary Hopkins, Mr. Meritt, Mr. Towles (representing the contractors), Judge Pollock, and Mr. Middleton it was agreed that the contract for the bridge should stand as approved, and that the bridge should be constructed in accordance with the requirements of the specifications prepared in this office, which accompanied the advertisement for bids. It was also agreed that the office would give consideration to any claims for additional compensation presented by the company and supported by sufficient justifiable facts upon the completion of their contract.

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Mr. President, under that agreement the contractors went on with their work. After it was finished they presented claims amounting to $21,045.92. At a conference held at the department the amount was adjusted, in June, 1921, to $17,471.25. This year, on the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, the Senate of the United States passed a bill providing for the payment of that amount. The bill went to the House of Representatives; it has been favorably reported there; and I am asking now to have the item inserted in the pending measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no doubt that the claim ought to be paid and no doubt that the House of Representatives will pass the separate bill providing for its payment, but it is a private claim proposed to be placed upon an appropriation bill; it has not been estimated for; and I am compelled to make a point of order against it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before the point of order is ruled on, I should like to read the provision of the amended rule on that question. In the light of the rule the objection, I think, is certainly a very technical one. Here is a case of emergency work which had to be done. The contractor, acting under an act of Congress, made his bid; and the construction of the bridge was a matter of urgent necessity. Until the bridge was built, the Indians were compelled to make a detour of something like 100 miles to go to their market and even to their school. In that situation, the supplemental contract was made by the authority of the Interior Department.

Now I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the language of the rule as it has been amended. It reads:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

Mr. President, I am aware that the bill covering this claim to which I have referred is not an act which has previously been passed during this session, but I do not believe it was the intention to limit the rule to the particular session, a matter of a few days. I believe the intention of the rule was to limit it to the Congress then in existence, because Congress has not any right and the Senate has not any right to divide the rights of bills according to the session of a Congress in which it was passed. A bill introduced in any session of a Congress remains pending throughout that Congress and may be acted on at any time during that Congress. That was evidently the contemplation of this rule.

Mr. President, all rules ought to be interpreted with reason. What possible reason could there be for saying that my amendment would have been in order in November but not in order in December or January? The bill to which I have referred was passed during the session which closed only a few days ago. As the Senator from Utah has stated, there is no question about the justice of the claim; and there is also no doubt the contractor has been kept out of his money now for three or four years by technicalities and delays. Of course, the House of Representatives may pass the separate measure embracing this claim; but what reason is there why the Senator from Utah, in charge of the pending bill, should enforce a technicality which has not any logic or any reason in this case?

Mr. SMOOT. I call the Senator's attention to paragraph 4 of the same rule from which he has read, which reads:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. President, this is a private claim; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The requirement of the rule has been complied with in this case.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The amendment which I presented has cited the existing law, to wit, the law directing the construction of the bridge.

Mr. SMOOT. But the claim is not covered by existing law, and it is not a treaty stipulation. We might just as well, Mr. President, take any other claim and put it upon an appropriation bill as to insert the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. Even as provided by the new rule, the bill has not passed at this session. There was a reason for providing that it should be "the session" and not "the Congress."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What was the reason?

Mr. SMOOT. The very fact that a measure could be passed at one session, followed by an adjournment, we will say, for several months, and then when the appropriation bill for the next year came up for consideration at the next session it could be offered again, which would not be right.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What possible reason could there be for that when the bill in this instance has passed during the existing Congress? A Congress is an entity. The fact that it divides itself into sessions has not any particular significance. The fact that it was this Senate during the present Congress that did this thing should be controlling.

Mr. SMOOT. That, however, is not what the rules of the Senate provide. I shall have to insist upon the point of order, Mr. President, not only upon the first ground but also upon paragraph 4 of the rule as well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that, under the fourth section of Rule XVI, irrespective of the first section, the point of order made by the Senator from Utah is well taken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think that such technical objections go far to destroy the value of the rules, and I think, furthermore, that the Senator in charge of this measure is standing in his own light in insisting on such objections. The Senate has been complying with the desires of those in charge of legislation by facilitating the passage of appropriation bills; but if the Senator proposes to take the position that he is going to enforce strict technicalities against claims which are admitted to be just and upon which the Senate has already acted, he will have to expect a little more trouble in getting through some of these measures.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that the Senator from Nebraska is a reasonable man and I believe he knows that if I should allow one claim to be attached to this bill there would be no limit to the claims which might be presented. If in the enactment of the appropriation bills we are going to live up to our Budget law there is only one way to do it.

It does not give me any pleasure, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, to object to any claim that he may present; I do not like to take such action; but I have got to treat my friend from Nebraska—and he is my friend—the same as I would treat any other Senator. I can not do otherwise than I have done.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I do not see how the Senator can contend that the amendment I have proposed will have any effect on the Budget one way or the other. The Senate has passed a bill providing for the payment of the claim and the Senator himself suggests that the House ought to pass that bill, whether it will or not. If the House shall pass the bill it will be at some later date, and the Budget will be effected in exactly the same way as if the Senator allows this item to be incorporated in the pending bill. I believe the Senator ought to do so as a matter of facilitating business, inasmuch as this side of the Chamber is cooperating in facilitating business, and if another claim shall be presented the equities of which are equal to those of the claim I have presented, I do not think he ought to enforce the rule. The rules of the Senate are not like the laws of the Medes and Persians; they are to be relaxed when there is reason for relaxing them, and in the case of reasonable and just claims there is no fair objection that can be urged to their going into the bill.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, on page 21, line 14, I move to strike out the words "including peyote."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 21, line 14, after the word "drugs" it is proposed to strike out the words "including peyote." so as to make the clause read:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors and deleterious drugs among Indians, $25,000.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I think the words covered by the amendment ought to be stricken out for two reasons. Last year when the bill making appropriations for the Interior Department was under consideration the same provision was in the bill, but it was stricken out on a point of order. I expected to make a point of order against it in this instance, but find that I can not do so, because the item was passed by the House without a point of order being made, and, therefore, it is not subject to a point of order here. However, it passed the House under a misapprehension. A member of the Oklahoma delegation, Mr. MCCLINTIC, who is present, expected to have made the point of order in that body, but was prevented from doing so because a member of the committee told him the words were not in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me, if that be the case, the easiest course to pursue in this instance is to accept the amendment striking out the words and let it go to conference, and then the House Members may decide the question whether there was any misunderstanding about it.

Mr. HARRELD. I will call attention to the record in the case if the Senator desires me to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. No; if the Senator says that such a state of facts exists, I have every confidence in his statement, and I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to accept the amendment of the Senator and let it go to conference, where the question may be thrashed out with the House conferees.

Mr. HARRELD. That will be satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, two days ago I presented an amendment to the pending bill proposing an addition of $100,000 in the item for land surveys, for the express purposes of surveying and resurveying oil and oil-shale lands. The necessity for the amendment is supported by a statement from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who describes the need for that work at the present time. However, the committee has granted an increase of $49,600 in the item for surveys and resurveys of public lands over the amount approved by the House; so that, instead of pressing for action on my original amendment, I now offer a substitute amendment which I should like to have read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, line 6, after the word "lands," it is proposed to strike out the period and insert the following:

: Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation shall be used for surveys and resurveys under the rectangular system provided by law, of public lands deemed to be valuable for oil and oil shale, including office work in offices of surveyors general.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SPENCER. On what page is that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Page 17.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is wrong in the page. I think it should come in on page 16, line 18.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Is not that subject to a point of order as general legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. PHIPPS. No; it is not.

Mr. MCKELLAR. It says "including office work in offices of surveyors general."

Mr. PHIPPS. I will say to the Senator that it leaves it in the discretion of the department to use up to that amount for that express purpose. It does not state that so much must be used for that purpose and no other. It gives them the opportunity to do that work. Without that, there is a question as to whether or not they could do any of that particular character of work out of this appropriation. It is merely to clarify the language. It does not involve any increase in the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Manifestly, if it changes the law, it is objectionable as being general legislation on an appropriation bill. I will say to the Senator that I am not going to make the point of order; but it does seem to me that if other items are kept out by reason of points of order, all ought to be treated alike.

Mr. SMOOT. If it made an appropriation of a dollar, I would make a point of order immediately; and the question for the Chair to decide is as to whether it is not new legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I am not making the point of order. According to the statement of the Senator from Colorado, though, it is clearly subject to a point of order, because he says that under existing law it can not be done.

Mr. PHIPPS. No; I did not mean to convey that impression.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understood the Senator to say that.

Mr. PHIPPS. I mean, it is to clarify the purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Under existing law, there is not any question but that it can be done. The only object of the amendment is to direct them to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment read again. I think it is entirely new legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Unquestionably it is new legislation; there is no doubt in the world about it; but I am not going to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator read it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator read it aloud again?

Mr. SPENCER. I make the point of order that the proposed amendment is new legislation and objectionable to Rule XVI.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I desire to state my understanding of the situation.

The general item in the bill for survey and resurvey of lands, approved in the House to the amount of $650,000, and raised by the Senate committee, and now by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, to the amount of $699,600, permits the General Land Office to survey all character of public lands, whether they be oil-shale lands or oil lands or agricultural lands.

The purpose of this proviso is simply to indicate to the department the desire that the approximately $50,000 additional voted on by the Senate may be devoted to the purpose of examining the oil-shale and oil lands. Where to-day we are endeavoring to have the oil-shale property developed, people going on that land and expending their money may find that they are half a mile away from the proper line, and that the property on which they are working belongs to some one else, instead of being covered under the patent which they have paid for. It is very important to have errors made in the original surveys corrected without delay, and I do not believe that a point of order will lie against the amendment in the form in which it is written.

Mr. KING. Let the amendment be stated. Some of us have come into the Chamber since it was stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, line 6, after the word "lands" and before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation shall be used for surveys and resurveys, under the rectangular system provided by law, of public lands deemed to be valuable for oil and oil shale, including office work in offices of surveyors general.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, my understanding is that the oil-shale lands have been pretty well delimited. Their physical boundaries are easily ascertainable, and I can not quite understand the object of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. PHIPPS. The resurveys are necessary by reason of the fact that that territory was platted years ago under a contract system, where as a matter of fact the work was probably done in the office of the surveyor instead of on the ground itself, so that to-day when you go to look for corners and monuments or other land markings it is impossible to locate them. They do not exist. The probability is that they were never put in position on the property, although the land is supposed to have been surveyed.

Now money is being expended, experimental plants are being erected on this property, and the owners who have expended their money in doing their assessment work year by year and have acquired their patents and are acquiring them are not assured that they are working on the property that is designated in the patent which they hold, and they may find that they are as much as half a mile off the line of the property that they should be working on. Not only that, but under the oil-leasing bill it is now possible to take up these lands, and in a short time they should be bringing revenue to the Government by way of royalties; and it is necessary to have these surveys corrected up to date, so that the people going on the lands and acquiring title to them will have the right land and not be trespassers on the land of some one else.

Mr. KING. I confess that the situation described by the Senator is entirely new to me. We have in my State and in Nevada upon the west perhaps the largest deposits of oil shale that exist in the world. I have heard no complaint as to the accuracy of the surveys wherever those lands have been surveyed, and I can not conceive of any greater inaccuracies with respect to the oil-shale lands than with respect to any part of the public domain. If you are to resurvey all of the lands which are now denominated oil-shale lands, it would seem to me that you would be compelled to survey all of the public domain, particularly that which is known as mineral land; and if the Senator seeks to discredit or challenge the accuracy of the surveys of the United States with respect to oil-shale lands, it does seem to me that his challenge would extend necessarily to surveys with respect to all mineral lands and with respect to agricultural lands.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I have not wanted to consume the time of the Senate in reading the statement to which I referred when I opened my remarks. Now I think it proper to do so.

This communication is from the General Land Office. It is a memorandum on resurvey of oil lands, and it states:

Activities under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), have brought to the attention of this office the fact that many original surveys executed under the old abandoned contract system over regions where the value of the lands from an oil-producing standpoint was unrecognized are so grossly defective, fraudulent, or obliterated as to render it impossible for claimants now to comply with the requirements of law that all oil-prospecting units be made to conform to the subdivisions of the public lands surveys. In some localities the discovery of oil and producing shale has made the lands exceptionally valuable, and under such conditions the necessity for definite land boundaries is particularly emphasized. The failure on the part of the Government to respond to meritorious requests for resurveys in such cases is at the risk of interfering with the proper and efficient development of these natural resources. Instances are being brought to the attention of this office where the original surveys, made over 40 years ago, over lands now found to contain oil-producing shale, are almost totally obliterated, and where corners were found on the outskirts, they were so discordantly related in position as to render it impossible, without resorting to extensive resurvey work covering blocks of townships of considerable size, to recover any of the intervening lost or obliterated corners to their most probable original position.

The demands for the resurvey of single townships or a small number of townships in oil fields of known value can usually be met through the administration of the provisions of the resurvey acts of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. 271), and September 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 965), but the apportionments made to the various surveying districts from the annual appropriation for surveying the public lands are substantially absorbed by demands for surveys and resurveys from actual settlers, and the apportionment to one district can not be increased without detriment to the demands arising in another district. The result is that the larger areas standing in need of resurvey, particularly in the oil fields, must be left without relief. Furthermore, by the terms of the act of March 3, 1909, as amended by the act of June 25, 1910, the amount of the general appropriation for surveying the public lands that can be devoted to resurvey work is limited to 20 per cent of the total appropriation. This limit has been substantially reached in each of the past 10 years in the making of resurveys applied for by settlers.

To attempt to place any reliance in the making of oil developments upon surveys shown by competent evidence to be grossly erroneous, fraudulent, or obliterated will only result in confusion, disorder, and discouragement. A resurvey is the only solution, as definite boundaries must necessarily attend developments of a valuable and permanent character.

Already there have been crystallized the necessities for resurvey relief in several surveying districts, notably in Colorado, New Mexico, and Utah. To meet these and other demands that might reasonably be anticipated during the ensuing fiscal year, it is estimated that an appropriation of $100,000 will be required.

May we have a ruling on the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Utah to say that the work that is proposed to be done under the amendment can be done without the amendment being made.

Mr. SMOOT. It can be, I will say to the Chair, for surveys and resurveys. This amendment directs that it shall be done. That is the only change that is made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why is it not in the nature of a limitation on the proposed appropriation and not in the nature of new legislation?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a limitation on the appropriation. The appropriation remains just as it is, but it says to the commissioner that out of this amount he shall expend $50,000 for this purpose.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. PHIPPS. It does not say that he shall spend that amount but that he may spend up to $50,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator as to the object of it.

Mr. KING. I think it uses the word "shall."

Mr. SMOOT. I think it says "shall," or else it will do no good. If the amendment simply says "may," there is no need of it at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reads:

Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation shall be used for surveys and resurveys——

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I understood it was—mandatory.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I beg to differ. I drew the amendment, not that $50,000 shall be expended, but——

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator want to change the word "shall" to "may"?

Mr. PHIPPS. Yes; I am willing to change it to "may be used." I desire to modify the amendment by making it read "may be."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation may be used for surveys and resurveys, under the rectangular system provided by law, of public lands deemed to be valuable for oil and oil shale, including office work in offices of surveyors general.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if the statement of the Senator from Utah is correct, and the money can be used for that purpose now, what does this proviso add?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the amendment as it is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This would use the whole six hundred and odd thousand dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. I was calling attention to this particular class of survey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule that the proposed amendment, in its present form, is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

ROADS IN NATIONAL PARKS.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, "See America First" is a slogan which has met with general approval. Deservedly so! Some of us, however, have been a little slow in viewing the wonders of our own country, while in the case of many a World War was required to change the trend of travel. Americans who spent those dark days in Europe were mostly engaged in business, a grim but necessary business; and our citizens on this side who sought wholesome recreation or recuperation in travel were well-nigh compelled to "see America first."

Hence, in the short space of seven years the number of annual visitors to our national parks, which boast of some of the finest scenic treasures to be found anywhere in the world, has quadrupled. In 1921, for instance, more than 1,200,000 people came to the parks from all parts of the country, and one of them alone, the Rocky Mountain National Park, furnished pleasure and relaxation to 219,164 visitors in a single year.

Two-thirds of these travel by automobile, bringing their own equipment. Then what about the roads—that prime necessity of the motorist? It is well-nigh unbelievable that they have been woefully neglected, and that to date no program of any magnitude has been approved by the Congress for the construction, improvement, and maintenance of highways in our national parks. In the Rocky Mountain Park, which had the maximum number of visitors during the past year, Congress has only authorized the expenditure of $35,000 for road improvement since its establishment. In other words, the State and the counties of Colorado have constructed all of its present highways, and the meager sum mentioned was spent in widening narrow sections of roads constructed with other than Federal funds.

Director Stephen Mather, of the park service, stated in his 1921 annual report, "We have not a single paved road in the national park system at this time." There are now, I understand, 5 miles of oiled macadam in Yellowstone and a short stretch of pavement in Grand Canyon, built by a railroad company without Government aid.

These are facts which challenge the attention. At that, they are merely illustrative of the existing deplorable situation.

Mr. President, in only two national parks, Yellowstone and Crater Lake, has the United States Government constructed road systems for present needs, and even these highways have had no surface improvement. The first national park, Yellowstone, was established in 1872, since which time 18 other parks and 24 national monuments have been added to the system. These are located from Maine to the Hawaiian Islands and from Arkansas to Alaska. During this half century of park history less than $3,250,000 has been expended in road and bridge construction, of which $1,265,000 was appropriated for special road projects. I should add that the pending Interior Department bill contains approximately $200,000 for the construction of roads in Sequoia, Mount Rainier, Glacier, and Grand Canyon Parks. Not a mile of road has been built by the United States in Mount McKinley, Hawaii, Wind Cave, General Grant, Lafayette, and other parks.

Bear in mind also that in recent years road building has been under way all around these parks. Splendid highways have been constructed with Federal, State, and county money right up to the park boundaries, where the tourist has met with unimproved roads or roads with but a semblance of improvement. Illustrations are legion. Mount Rainier National Park, in Washington, contains 324 square miles, with only 36½ miles of roadway. An autoist who remains in the park for three days can only cover 5 per cent of its area.

Against this lack of service to its citizens in the matter of providing safe and comfortable roads may be set the fact that license fees are charged by the Government at the gates of Yellowstone, Yosemite, Mount Rainier, Sequoia, and a few others. The excellent highways outside are, of course, free. During the past 10 years $1,138,200 has been collected in such automobile fees, all of which has been turned into the Federal Treasury, while only about $1,500,000 has been spent in road construction in the same period of time. As already pointed out, most of these roads, such as they are, the Federal Government never built, so that we have the picture of Uncle Sam charging a fee for the use of something he never paid for himself.

In Yosemite Park there are 138 miles of roads, only 8 of which were built by the Government. The other 130 miles were constructed by toll-road companies or by the State for wagon travel and have never been reconstructed for automobiles. Motorists drive free of charge to the gates of the park over roads built by the State, and then are charged a license fee of $5 to ride over dusty, narrow roads which the Government inherited but does not even keep in proper repair. At the gates of Yosemite over $310,000 has been collected in license fees for the use of these privately built roads.

These are days when the Federal Government must conserve its revenues at every turn; hence I do not advocate the abolition of these charges. I believe, too, that the average American citizen would pay the money quite cheerfully if the roads were in good condition. But it is manifestly unfair and unjust to charge the public for the privilege of traveling over highways which are unimproved or badly in need of repair. Such conditions as those described at Yosemite can not endure.

Give the parks money for road construction so as to make them reasonably accessible and perfectly safe. Then the license fees can be better justified, and the total income from that source, if continued, will increase greatly, probably to $600,000 or $800,000 annually, yielding 8 to 10 per cent interest on the investment.

Early in 1922 park officials, at Secretary Fall's direction, prepared a road program calling for $7,500,000 to be expended over a three-year period, $2,500,000 each year, beginning July 1, 1923. General Dawes, then Director of the Budget, favored this appropriation, and the data for the estimates were carefully compiled. Later on, however, the Budget Bureau eliminated the item on the ground that the road work in the parks should be delayed until the Treasury was in better condition. While I do not advocate the inclusion of this program in the present bill, I do feel that it should have favorable consideration in the near future.

None of us want the parks overdeveloped with expensive roads. Parts of these great wilderness regions should never have roads, but some of the parks now have practically no roads at all.

Glacier Park has only a few miles of road along her east and west boundaries and no road across the Continental Divide. Automobiles must be shipped 68 miles across the mountains by rail. A scenic highway connecting the two sides has been authorized, but with funds now being made available it will be years before it is finished.

In Rocky Mountain Park the roads built by the State and counties for wagons must be widened and improved to accommodate the heavy motor traffic of to-day. And new roads should be built to beauty spots now inaccessible but which should be opened up to give more camping room for the tens of thousands who are coming to this park from all parts of the United States.

In Mesa Verde Park, which is also in Colorado and which contains some of the most valuable relics of early Indian life on this continent, roads must be improved and an outlet to the south built.

In the Grand Canon Park, which the people visit all year around, the old roads built by private enterprise or by the State must be improved for automobile tourists and reconstructed and extended so as to give winter visitors an opportunity to see the canon from more than one point of view.

In California, General Grant and Sequoia Parks should be connected by a mountain road in order to open new camping areas and provide better circulation of traffic. Yosemite's old wagon roads must all be rebuilt, and where traffic is heaviest the roads should be paved.

Mount Rainier Park should have the little stretches of roads in the northwest and southwest corners connected by a road around the west side and later through to the east boundary.

In Mount McKinley Park a few miles of road would be a very valuable asset to the Alaska railroad, which needs highway connections very badly. There is a strong demand for opportunity to see something of this Alaska park, but it is utterly inaccessible now.

Also in Zion, Lafayette, Hawaii, and other parks, carefully developed plans for road construction have been made with the idea of making these parks only reasonably accessible. In all parks the work can be done within the $7,500,000 estimate for a three-year program.

I submit that program to the thoughtful and favorable consideration of the Senate, and now ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, as well as tables showing that, while other necessary appropriations have been made for highway construction throughout the country, the national parks have been sadly neglected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair.) Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PHIPPS. I have introduced two amendments to H. R. 13559, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which I trust will be approved at this time. These provide for an appropriation of $50,000 each for the construction and improvement of roads in Rocky Mountain and the Yosemite. The Acting Director of the National Park Service informs me that the need is greatest at those points, and that these amounts, while grossly inadequate, will nevertheless afford some relief from existing conditions.

I would also call attention to a committee amendment, which provides for the restoration of a sum approved by the Budget Bureau, namely, $38,000, for completing the widening of the Nisqually Glacier to Paradise Valley Road, in the Mount Rainier Park.

Mr. President, I wish I could impress upon Senators not only the importance of the park work but also the zeal and enthusiasm of thoughtful men who are most familiar with the wonderful opportunities for observation, health, and pleasure afforded by these Government reservations. Down in Mesa Verde, the present superintendent, Mr. Jesse Nesbaum, made his home in the park all last winter. He and his wife were snowed in all winter long, completing their home, a stone structure built by themselves in the Pueblo style, and making their own furniture. Except for the telephone, he was shut off from outside contact with the world for five and a half months, and his wife for nearly eight months.

Senators, this matter of adequate roads for the parks is not a selfish, a local, or solely a western issue. The parks are widely scattered and the number of visitors affects travel in every State of the Union. But that, possibly, is incidental. The proposition is this: The Congress, representing the will of the Nation, has created these parks for the use, enjoyment, and benefit of all its people. This was extremely wise, as no investment could yield better returns in improving the health and quality of our citizenship, in promoting that unity of national feeling, that love of country, called patriotism. Having already taken this step, will the Congress now deny, to a large extent, the means whereby the parks may be used and enjoyed?

We have given deserved recognition to the importance of other road work in all parts of the country. We have provided liberal Federal contributions for post roads, for farm-to-market roads, and for connecting links in a comprehensive program, national in its scope. We have also constructed needed highways in our national forests. That these appropriations were prudent and that the work should continue, experience has already demonstrated. Now, Mr. President, there is one thing lacking. One well-nigh forgotten class of Government reservations should be connected up with the other highway chains already authorized. We must remember our national parks.

APPENDIX.

ROAD CONSTRUCTION.

For construction, reconstruction, widening, and surfacing of highways, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks and monuments, and for similar improvement of approach roads connecting directly with such park and monument roads, provided such improvements are within 5 miles of a park or monument boundary, $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924; $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925; and $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926: Provided, however, That all appropriations for road projects herein authorized shall remain available until expended: And provided further, That the sum of $6,000 annually of the appropriations herein made shall be available for the employment of accounting and clerical help in the District of Columbia, available until expended.

The Secretary of the Interior shall submit with his annual estimate of expenditures a report showing the various classes of road construction work accomplished and the locations, together with a statement of expenditures made from these funds.

Mr. President, the amendment I have prepared and which is on the desk appropriates the sum of $5,000 for roads in each of the two parks mentioned. I understand from the statement of the Senator in charge of the bill and the ruling of the Chair in other cases that it would be subject to a point of order, and therefore I shall refrain from presenting it at this time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 51, line 22, insert the following:

For the purchase of additional land for the Wahpeton Indian School, $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available.

[1] Making allowance of $200,000 for possible small items not isolated in the records, the total expenditure for road construction and improvement in the national parks in 50 years would not exceed $3,250,000. There has been no funds authorized for the fiscal years 1924–1926, inclusive, as in the case of the Forest Service.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am fully aware of the fact that the amendment is subject to the point of order that it has not been estimated for. I have attempted to use all of the powers of persuasion that I have to get the Senator in charge of the bill to agree not to raise the point of order, but I find that he is as obdurate as ever in that respect, and that it would be useless for me to go into a statement of the details to show the propriety and the necessity for the amendment. The Senator would not listen to that part of it. He simply takes the position that it would create a precedent whereby any matter could come in, and he is afraid of those precedents.

So instead of taking up any time in the discussion at this time of the merits of the case I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the superintendent in charge of that school in reply to a question of mine. I ask this simply that it may be useful to those who may have the matter before them again, as it certainly will come up again at the next session. I simply ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD and then the Senator from Utah can make his usual objection.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN FIELD SERVICE,
WAHPETON INDIAN SCHOOL,
Wahpeton, N. Dak., December 12, 1922.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Receipt is acknowledged of your communication of November 28, 1922, relative to the introduction of Senate bill No. 4055, to provide for the purchase of additional land for this school.

I am pleased to have you take the initiative in this matter, as there is no doubt of the need for some additional land for the use of the school. We have been renting land from the Commercial Club of this place for several years past, and while this has been an aid it has not provided a sufficient acreage by any means.

We have had to purchase hay for our live stock each year in addition to what little we can spare acreage for, and we are unable to produce a sufficient amount of grain for the live stock, all due to the limited acreage now owned by the school.

The requirements of the school naturally demand that we produce as much grain and forage as is consumed each year for the upkeep of the dairy herd, the horses necessary for successful operation of the farm, and other school work, and we should be able, with sufficient acreage, to produce as much wheat each year as will be required to furnish flour. It is conservatively estimated that we should be able to do this excepting in case of a general failure of the wheat crop in this section if we had the required additional acreage.

Our school is largely interested in training the students in agriculture for the reason that they all come from the agricultural regions of the different States from which we procure our enrollment, and they will go back to live among their people, who are engaged in agricultural pursuits.

The dairy herd is wholly inadequate for the needs of the school, but is being enlarged by retention of the female offspring from the present herd, with the idea that we shall eventually have enough cows for the production of milk and butter to meet the needs of the school. We can not maintain a larger herd with our present acreage, as we can not spare land for pasturage, nor can we produced the required amount of silage, hay, and grain for feed.

It is not anticipated that we might make the school self-supporting, yet we could add very materially to necessities and aid generally in maintenance.

There is no doubt but that all farming land in this section will require well-planned rotation of crops to make it again as productive as it once was, and this will require the use of additional acreage, for the reason that the clovers will only furnish forage for live stock, thus reducing the production of grain for a few years.

Our total acreage available for agricultural purposes does not exceed 130 acres, and a good deal of this is unfit for crops from year to year on account of lack of drainage. If your bill was amended to provide for the purchase of additional land, farm equipment, and for drainage purposes, it would meet the most urgent needs of the school.

If I have not given you the information you desire in detail, I shall be glad to write you further and take up any particular feature that you may have in mind, it being my intention now to give you a general justification.

Thanking you for the interest manifested in behalf of this institution and for all past favors, I am,

Very truly yours,

JESSE W. SMITH, Superintendent.

Mr. SMOOT. I am compelled to make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to strike out, commencing on page 94, line 11, all of the rest of that page, all of page 95, and down to and including the word "yard" in line 8, on page 96. It is a provision embarking the Federal Government upon the purchase of lands and the purchase of coal and the distribution of the same. There is a question of fact involved that ought to be fully considered and it ought to go to conference in any event.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a question of fact connected with the amendment. So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment and let it go to conference where it can be thrashed out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, at the last session the Senate passed a joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to make a survey of Columbia Basin irrigation project in the State of Washington and authorized an appropriation of $100,000 for that purpose. On yesterday the House Committee on Irrigation reported that measure back practically approving the Senate bill, but adding two or three amendments covering some other projects. In order to carry out the purpose of that joint resolution I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 84, after line 21, insert the following:

For investigating the feasibility of irrigation, water storage, water sources, and related problems on the Columbia River and its tributaries, including Columbia River Basin, $100,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I am compelled to make the point of order against the amendment, because it has not been estimated for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KENDRICK. I offer the following amendment, and ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 70, line 2, after the word "law," insert:

Of which amount $35,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment ought to be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 45, line 11, at the end thereof insert the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to require the owners of irrigable land within the Flathead Indian Reservation reclamation project to which water for irrigation purposes can be delivered to pay a minmum water rental charge, whether water is used or not, at such times and in such amounts as he may deem best, and such charges, when collected, may be used for construction or maintenance of the systems through which such water has been made available.

Mr. SMOOT. I am compelled to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to say that I join my colleague in urging the amendment offered by him, and I hope it may be agreed to. I think it is very essential. It is of the highest importance to the welfare of the Flathead reclamation project and the settlers on the project. I sincerely hope no point of order will be urged against the amendment, and I ask the Senator from Utah to withdraw his objection. When the need for the amendment may be explained, I am sure he will see it.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree that the Senator's provision is all right, but——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that the provision is applicable to the reclamation projects generally, but there has been some special legislation with respect to the Flathead Reservation project and it is not applicable there. I did not imagine there could be any objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CAPT. MURRAY A. COBB.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4030) for the relief of Capt. Murray A. Cobb, which is a bill that I think can be disposed of without any debate.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is unusual at this time in the evening to take up the calendar or any matter on the calendar. However, I shall make no objection if it is a very urgent measure.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is an urgent matter. The bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims with the statement that it would be a gross and unjustifiable injustice if it failed to pass. It is a bill for the relief of the last American soldier out of France. He was detained in a private hospital, and the War Department, because of a technicality only, states that it is unable to pay for his hospitalization there. The Committee on Claims have audited the amount and unanimously recommended the passage of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Murray A. Cobb, captain in the United States Army, the sum of $15,747.63, to reimburse him for medical and hospital treatment for tuberculosis of the thoracic vertebræ (Pott's disease) with pulmonary complications, said officer having been gassed in October, 1918, while serving in the American Expeditionary Forces in France, said treatment covering the period from May, 1919, to March 25, 1922, and having been rendered at Leysin, Switzerland, where Captain Cobb was taken with the approval of the medical officers of the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on January 5, 1923, the President approved and signed the act (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce.

EXCESS RAILWAY OPERATING INCOME.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document a report received a few days ago from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in response to Senate Resolution 357, as to the excess railway operating income under section 15a of the Cummins-Esch Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hearing none, it is so ordered.

THE COTTON FUTURES SITUATION.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and a letter from the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to Mr. Lanoux, editor of the Gonzales Weekly, in my State, on the cotton futures situation, and brief replies to those letters by the editor of that paper. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

LETTERS FROM UNITED STATES SENATORS E. D. SMITH AND N. B. DIAL STATE THEY WILL STAND BY THE FARMERS.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION OF NATIONAL RESOURCES,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1922.

Mr. J. F. LANOUX,
Editor Gonzales Weekly, Gonzales, La.

MY DEAR SIR: I have received a copy of the December 2 edition of your publication, wherein is carried an article entitled "Threatened new and dangerous legislation on cotton." This article is entirely erroneous in so far as it refers to my attitude to the cotton futures act. I am writing you in order that the matter might be clarified in your mind.

I introduced the present cotton futures act in the Senate and pressed it to its passage. It went to the House and there was amended in some particulars, but remained principally as it had passed the Senate. It is referred to as the Smith Cotton Futures Act or the Smith-Lever Cotton Futures Act. I merely mention this to show that the attitude alleged to have been taken by me in regard to this measure is erroneous. I subsequently introduced an amendment, which was adopted, limiting the grades that could be delivered to the 10 now in the act, obviating the differences which formerly existed and which has been of great benefit to the producers and the trade.

It is possible that at some time after due investigation I might introduce some amendment to the cotton futures act. So far I have not introduced any such amendment, except as indicated above. If it can be shown that the act needs amendment, or I come to that opinion after my own process, I will endeavor to amend it. But I can not have imputed to me in advance something that I do not contemplate. My name is connected in your article with that of my colleague, Senator DIAL. He has introduced an amendment in the Senate to amend the cotton futures act. It is, roughly, the Comer amendment introduced by Senator Comer when he was a Member of the Senate. I am not supporting this amendment, but on the contrary am opposed to it. I think it will tend to fix an arbitrary value on the different grades of cotton that do not exist in reality. I secured an appropriation for the investigation of the different grades some years ago, and the results showed that the differences in value of the grades was very small and could be arrived at by calculation.

I think, if you will consult the record, that you will find that the bitterest criticisms of me have been because I looked too much after the side of the producers and not the manufacturers. I believe in fairness for both sides, but my whole contention in the cotton question has been that the manufacturers in the nature of things were better able to look after themselves than was the producer, and my whole legislative career has been along this line. It was with this thought in view that I introduced the present cotton futures act.

I am sure that you would not willfully misrepresent me in your publication, and that what was inferred in your article was entirely unintentional, and it is for this reason that I write you.

Yours very truly,

E. D. SMITH.

GONZALES, LA., December 18, 1922.

U. S. SENATOR E. D. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: We have your letter of the 12th, and wish to say we have no desire to do an injustice to anybody, and we received a newspaper published in Alabama, which stated that you and Senator DIAL and Senator HEFLIN intended to introduce more laws on cotton sales. We know the cotton farmers have been up against it in more ways than one, and they are up against it yet, and we again know that no law can find a market for cotton and no law can make any buyer of cotton pay a certain price, and we also know that when cotton is made dingy by rain and dust that it is not the farmers' fault, and that any law that keeps such cotton from being contracted is a bad law for the farmer who raises the cotton, and we further know that the greater market there is for cotton and the greater number of buyers the farmers can reach it is that much better for the farmers.

We heard that you was the main one who had lower grades of cotton tested and in this way proved that rain and dust did not hurt cotton for spinning purposes, and we surely think you did a big thing for the cotton farmers when you did this, and we are proud to read in your letter that you oppose any law which will have the effect of keeping the farmers' cotton called low grades from being placed on a contract for future sales.

The farmers' union has done a big thing for the cotton farmers, and we heard from some of its members that you and Mr. Lever were the head of the present cotton law, and we are opposed to any more changes in it, and you can depend on us standing by you and helping head off any change in this law, for we have too many laws already, and if Congress would quit passing laws for 10 years off we would all be better off. We want markets for cotton, rice, live stock, and sugar and wheat, and laws can't give these to us. Don't you think we are right about this? We would be glad to hear from you any time. We inclose our last issue and hope you will help demand that France take those black troops out of Germany, as no white person can stand to have the black race over white race.

Yours very truly,

J. F. LANOUX.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS,
December 12, 1922.

The GONZALES WEEKLY, Gonzales, La.

GENTLEMEN: Your issue of the 2d has just been brought to my attention, in which you speak of my proposed cotton futures contract amendment.

You do me an injustice. I was raised on a farm, have owned farms all my life, and while I am not magnifying myself, am the owner of many hundreds of acres of farms to-day.

I inclose herewith a copy of a speech which I made on this subject, and I would like for you to study it carefully and then write me your views as to whether or not I am right or wrong?

Yours truly,

N. B. DIAL.

(Gonzales Weekly, Printers and Publishers: A newspaper published every Saturday by three veterans of the World War. Every issue is a boost for the Parish of Ascension, town of Gonzales.)

GONZALES, LA., December 18, 1922.

United States Senator N. B. DIAL,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR DIAL: We have your letter of the 12th and thank you for the boll weevil paper and your speech on cotton exchanges. I have only had time to glance over your speech, and you make some good points in it, and while we do not claim to be experts, still we can not see how a farmer can be helped by a law that holds back from a free market and free sale any cotton they raise.

We are not an authority on cotton exchanges, but we do know that when the cotton exchanges were closed in 1914 that the price of cotton went all to pieces, and Congress had a chance then to keep up the price of cotton, if it could be done by law, but Congress did nothing to help keep up the price of cotton in 1914 when the cotton exchanges were closed, and we do not see how any law can get a price for cotton.

We know that the farmers want all the markets they can reach and all the buyers they can reach. You are correct when you say that the farmer is forced to sell their cotton in three or four months to pay for supplies, but if the farmers could pay for the supplies they use in one year to raise cotton the next year following, then they would not be forced to sell their cotton.

I notice that you say, if it were not for the cotton exchanges, "The users of cotton might combine and the producers would be at their mercy." This is what Mr. Lever said in his report when the present cotton law was passed, and this is why we are afraid of any more changes. And, again, farmers can not prevent rain and dust from getting in cotton, but it has been proven by the United States Government that such cotton is as good as ever for spinning purposes, has it not?

We have too many laws, anyhow, and we believe farmers who raise cotton and live stock and other farm products should be helped to find markets, and laws can not do this, and we note that you are a friend of the farmers, as you say that you will help to prevent any more laws.

Yours very truly,

GONZALES WEEKLY,
J. F. LANOUX, Editor.

The Weekly is proud to get above letters from Senators E. D. SMITH and N. B. DIAL stating that they will be on the farmers' side on all legislation for cotton, and Senator SMITH says plainly that he opposes any legislation which will have the effect of denying the delivery on contracts of grades of cotton just because they happen to be soiled by dust and rain, something which the farmers are powerless to prevent, and already the cotton producers have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars on account of spinners and big cotton buyers throwing cotton out of contracts just because it happened to be soiled by dust and rain although experiments by the Government have proven that such cotton is perfectly good for spinning purposes.

The farmers' union have always given Senator E. D. SMITH credit for having those tests made on low-grade cottons by the Government. It will be seen by Senator SMITH's letter that he is proud he introduced the present United States cotton futures law. We are glad to learn from his letter that he is opposed to proposed changes in it, which changes the farmer opposes also. Senator RANSDELL is with the cotton producers, and with him and Senator E. D. SMITH standing with the farmers they should win, and the farmers can now feel safe, and Senator DIAL says he is with the farmers.

The Weekly has no desire to do injustice to anyone, and gladly gives space to the Senators' letters and the Weekly's replies which explain the situation so well.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a proposed unanimous-consent agreement which I expect to submit to-morrow. I merely want to have it read at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be read for the information of the Senate.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On to-morrow the Senator from Washington will propose the following unanimous-consent agreement:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on and after the calendar day of Monday, January 22, 1923, in the consideration of H. R. 12817, the shipping bill, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 60 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 30 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto, and that on and after the calendar day of Thursday, February 1, if said bill is not sooner disposed of, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment then pending or thereafter offered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I had intended to ask that the Senate recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, but I understand arrangements have bene made under which it has been agreed that the Senate would adjourn. So I shall not submit the request. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

EXTRADITION WITH VENEZUELA.

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, to the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to their ratification, an extradition treaty between the United States and Venezuela, signed at Caracas on January 19, 1922, and an additional article thereto which, as is explained in the accompanying report of the Secretary of State, was signed at Caracas on January 21, 1922, in order to meet a requirement of the Venezuelan constitution.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 28, 1922.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to their transmission to the Senate, if the President approve thereof, to receive the advice and consent of that body to their ratification, an extradition treaty between the United States and Venezuela, signed at Caracas on January 19, 1922, and an additional article to the treaty which, at the request of the Venezuelan Government, was signed at Caracas on January 21, 1922, in order to meet the requirement of article 120 of the constitution of Venezuela that in international treaties there shall be a provision that "All differences between contracting parties relating to the interpretation or execution of this treaty shall be decided by arbitration."

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 26, 1922.

The United States of America and the United States of Venezuela, desiring to strengthen their reciprocal relations, to facilitate the course of punitive justice and to limit the crimes which may be committed in their respective territories; to prevent the impunity which would result from the escape of guilty persons and of their asylum in the territory of one or the other nation, have resolved to conclude a treaty for the extradition of the accused as well as of those who have been sentenced, and have appointed for that purpose the following plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, John Campbell White, chargé d'affaires ad interim of the United States of America to Venezuela, and

The Provisional President of the United States of Venezuela, Dr. Pedro Itriago Chacin, minister of foreign affairs of the United States of Venezuela;

Who, after having exchanged their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United States of Venezuela agree to deliver up to justice, by means of requisition duly made as herein provided, any person who may be charged with or may have been convicted of any of the crimes committed within the jurisdiction of one of the contracting parties and specified in Article II of this convention, while said person was actually within such jurisdiction when the crime was committed, and who shall seek an asylum or who shall be found within the territories of the other. Such surrender shall take place only upon such evidence of guilt as, according to the laws of the country in which the fugitive or accused shall be found, would justify his detention and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had been committed there.

ARTICLE II.

In accordance with the provisions of this convention, the persons shall be delivered who shall have been charged with or convicted of any of the following crimes:

1. Murder, comprehending the crimes designated by the terms of parricide, assassination, manslaughter, when voluntary; poisoning, or infanticide.
2. The attempt to commit murder.
3. Rape, abortion, carnal knowledge of children under the age of 12 years.
4. Bigamy.
5. Arson.
6. Willful and unlawful destruction or obstruction of railroads, which endangers human life
7. Crimes committed at sea:

(a) Piracy, as commonly known and defined by the law of nations, or by statute;

(b) Wrongfully sinking or destroying a vessel at sea or attempting to do so;

(c) Mutiny or conspiracy by two or more members of the crew or other persons on board of a vessel on the high seas, for the purpose of rebelling against the authority of the captain or commander of such vessel or by fraud or violence taking possession of such vessel;

(d) Assault on board ships upon the high seas with intent to do bodily harm.

8. Burglary, defined to be the act of breaking into and entering the house of another in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony therein.
9. The act of breaking into and entering into the offices of the Government and public authorities, or the offices of banks, banking houses, saving banks, trust companies, insurance companies, or other buildings not dwellings with intent to commit a felony therein.
10. Robbery, defined to be the act of feloniously and forcibly taking from the person of another, goods or money by violence or by putting him in fear.
11. Forgery or the utterance of forged papers, or illegal sale of documents belonging to the national archives.
12. The forgery or falsification of the official acts of the Government or public authority, including courts of justice, or the uttering or fraudulent use of the same.
13. The fabrication of counterfeit money, whether coin or paper, counterfeit titles or coupons of public debt, created by National, State, provincial, territorial, local, or municipal Governments, bank notes or other instruments of public credit, counterfeit seals, stamps, dies, and marks of State or public administrations, and the utterance, circulation, or fraudulent use of the above-mentioned objects.
14. Embezzlement or criminal malversation committed within the jurisdiction of one of the parties by public officers of de-positaries, where the amount embezzled exceeds $200 in the United States of America or B. 1.000 in the United States of Venezuela.

15. Embezzlement by any person or persons hired, salaried, or employed, to the detriment of their employers or principals, when the crime or offense is punishable by imprisonment or other corporal punishment by the laws of both countries, and where the amount embezzled exceeds $200 in the United States of America or B. 1.000 in the United States of Venezuela.

16. Kidnapping of minors or adults, defined to be the abduction or detention of a person or persons, in order to exact money from them or their families or for any other unlawful end.

17. Larceny, defined to be the theft of effects, personal property, or money of the value of $50 or B. 250 or more, accordingly.

18. Obtaining money, valuable securities, or other property by false pretenses or receiving any money, valuable securities, or other property knowing the same to have been unlawfully obtained, where the amount of money or the value of the property so obtained or received exceeds $200 in the United States of America or B. 1.000 in the United States of Venezuela.

19. Perjury or subornation of perjury.

20. Fraud or breach of trust by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, executor, administrator, guardian, director, or officer of any company or corporation, or by anyone in any fiduciary position, where the amount of money or the value of the property misappropriated exceeds $200 in the United States of America or B. 1.000 in the United States of Venezuela.

21. The extradition is also to take place for participation in any of the aforesaid crimes as an accessory before or after the fact, provided such participation be punishable by imprisonment by the laws of both contracting parties.

ARTICLE III.

The provisions of this convention shall not import claim of extradition for any crime or offense of a political character, nor for acts connected with such crimes or offenses; and no person surrendered by or to either of the contracting parties in virtue of this convention shall be tried or punished for a political crime or offense. When the offense charged comprises the act either of murder or assassination or of poisoning, either consummated or attempted, the fact that the offense was committed or attempted against the life of the sovereign or head of a foreign State or against the life of any member of his family, shall not be deemed sufficient to sustain that such a crime or offense was of a political character, or was an act connected with crimes or offenses of a political character.

ARTICLE IV.

In view of the abolition of capital punishment and of imprisonment for life by constitutional provision in Venezuela, the contracting parties reserve the right to decline to grant extradition for crimes punishable by death and life imprisonment. Nevertheless the executive authority of each of the contracting parties shall have the power to grant extradition for such crimes upon the receipt of satisfactory assurances that in case of conviction the death penalty or imprisonment for life will not be inflicted.

ARTICLE V.

A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered under the provisions hereof, when, from lapse of time or other lawful cause, according to the laws of the country within the jurisdiction of which the crime was committed, the criminal is exempt from prosecution or punishment for the offense for which the surrender is asked.

ARTICLE VI.

If a fugitive criminal whose surrender may be claimed pursuant to the stipulations hereof shall be at the time of the request for the extradition under prosecution, either at liberty, out on bail, or in custody, for any crime or offense committed in the country where he has sought asylum, or shall have been convicted thereof, his extradition may be deferred until such proceedings be determined, and until he shall have been set at liberty in due course of law.

ARTICLE VII.

If a fugitive criminal claimed by one of the parties hereto shall be also claimed by one or more powers pursuant to treaty provisions, on account of crimes committed within their jurisdiction, such criminal shall be delivered to that State whose demand is first received.

ARTICLE VIII.

Under the stipulations of this convention, neither of the contracting parties shall be bound to deliver up its own citizens.

ARTICLE IX.

The expense of the arrest, detention, examination, and transportation of the accused shall be paid by the Government which has preferred the demand for extradition.

ARTICLE X.

Everything found in the possession of the fugitive criminal at the time of his arrest, whether being the proceeds of the crime or offense, or which may be material as evidence in making proof of the crime, shall, so far as practicable according to the laws of either of the contracting parties be delivered up with his prisoner at the time of the surrender. Nevertheless, the rights of a third party with regard to the article aforesaid shall be duly respected.

ARTICLE XI.

The stipulations of this convention shall be applicable to all territories wherever situated, belonging to either of the contracting parties or under the jurisdiction or control of either of them.

Applications for the surrender of fugitives shall be made by the respective diplomatic agents of the contracting parties. In case of the absence of such agents from the country or its seat of government, or where extradition is sought from territory included in the preceding paragraph other than the United States, application may be made by superior consular officers.

It shall be competent for such diplomatic or superior consular officers to ask and obtain the preliminary arrest of the person whose surrender is requested before the government of whom such request is made. The judicial functionaries shall prescribe the method of complying with the legal formalities of the country of which the extradition is requested.

If the fugitive criminal shall have been convicted of the crime for which his surrender is asked, a copy of the sentence of the court before which such conviction took place, duly authenticated, shall be produced. If, however, the fugitive is merely charged with crime, a duly authenticated copy of the warrant of arrest in the country where the crime was committed, and of the depositions upon which such warrant may have been issued, shall be produced, with such other evidence or proof as may be deemed competent in the case.

ARTICLE XII.

If when a person accused shall have been arrested in virtue of the mandate or preliminary warrant of arrest, issued by the competent authority as provided in Article XI hereof, and been brought before a judge or a magistrate to the end that the evidence of his or her guilt may be heard and examined as hereinbefore provided, it shall appear that the mandate or preliminary warrant of arrest has been issued in pursuance of a request or declaration received by telegraph from the government asking for the extradition, it shall be competent to hold the accused for a period not exceeding two months, so that the demanding government may have opportunity to lay before such judge or magistrate legal evidence of the guilt of the accused, and if at the expiration of said period of two months such legal evidence shall not have been produced before such judge or magistrate, the person arrested shall be released, provided that the examination of the charges preferred against such accused person shall not be actually going on.

ARTICLE XIII.

In every case of a request made by either of the two contracting parties for the arrest, detention, or extradition of fugitive criminals, the legal officers or fiscal ministry of the country where the proceedings of extradition are had, shall assist the officers of the government demanding the extradition before the respective judges and magistrates by every legal means within their or its power; and no claim whatsoever for compensation for any of the services so rendered shall be made against the government demanding the extradition: Provided, however, That any officer or officers of the surrendering government so giving assistance who shall, in the usual course of their duty, receive no salary or compensation other than specific fees for services performed, shall be entitled to receive from the government demanding the extradition the customary fees for the acts or services performed by them, in the same manner and to the same amount as though such acts or services had been performed in ordinary criminal proceedings under the laws of the country of which they are officers.

ARTICLE XIV.

No person shall be tried for any crime or offense other than that for which he was surrendered.

ARTICLE XV.

This convention shall take effect from the day of the exchange of the ratifications thereof; but either contracting party may at any time terminate the same on giving to the other six months' notice of its intention to do so.

The ratifications of the present convention shall be exchanged at Caracas as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the above articles, and hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate, in Caracas, this 19th day of January, 1922.

JOHN CAMPBELL WHITE.
P. ITRIAGO CHACÍN.

The undersigned, John Campbell White, chargé d'affaires ad interim of the United States of America to Venezuela, and Dr. Pedro Itriago Chacín, minister of foreign affairs of the United States of Venezuela, have agreed upon the following additional article to the treaty of extradition signed by the aforesaid on the 19th instant:

It is agreed that all differences between the contracting parties relating to the interpretation or execution of this treaty shall be decided by arbitration.

In witness whereof they have signed the above article, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate, in Caracas, this 21st day of January, 1922.

CONVENTION WITH COLOMBIA TO FACILITATE WORK OF TRAVELING SALESMEN.

In executive session this day the following convention was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, I transmit herewith a convention signed at Bogota on August 4, 1922, between the United States and the Republic of Colombia, to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
September 14, 1922.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Acting Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approve thereof, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention signed at Bogota on August 4, 1922, between the United States and the Republic of Colombia, to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted. WILLIAM PHILLIPS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 13, 1922.

The United States of America and the Republic of Colombia, being desirous to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen, have agreed to conclude a Convention for that purpose and have to that end appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Samuel H. Piles, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Government of the Republic of Colombia; and the President of the Republic of Colombia, Doctor Antonio Gómez Restrepo, Secretary in charge of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs; who having communicated to each other their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Manufacturers, merchants and traders domiciled within the jurisdiction of one of the high contracting parties may operate as commercial travelers either personally or by means of agents or employees within the jurisdiction of the other high contracting party on obtaining from the latter, upon payment of a single fee, a license which shall be valid throughout its entire territorial jurisdiction.

In case either of the high contracting parties shall be engaged in war, it reserves to itself the right to prevent from operating within its jurisdiction under the provisions of this convention, or otherwise, enemy nationals or other aliens whose presence it may consider prejudicial to public order and national safety.

ARTICLE II.

In order to secure the license above mentioned the applicant must obtain from the country of domicile of the manufacturers, merchants and traders represented a certificate attesting his character as a commercial traveler. This certificate, which shall be issued by the authority to be designated in each country for the purpose, shall be visèed by the consul of the country in which the applicant proposes to operate, and the authorities of the latter shall, upon the presentation of such certificate, issue to the applicant the national license as provided in Article I.

ARTICLE III.

A commercial traveler may sell his samples without obtaining a special license as an importer.

ARTICLE IV.

Samples without commercial value shall be admitted to entry free of duty.

Samples marked, stamped, or defaced in such manner that they can not be put to other uses shall be considered as objects without commercial value.

ARTICLE V.

Samples having commercial value shall be provisionally admitted upon giving bond for the payment of lawful duties if they shall not have been withdrawn from the country within a period of six months.

Duties shall be paid on such portion of the samples as shall not have been so withdrawn.

ARTICLE VI.

All customs formalities shall be simplified as much as possible with a view to avoid delay in the dispatch of samples.

ARTICLE VII.

Peddlers and other salesmen who vend directly to the consumer, even though they have not an established place of business in the country in which they operate, shall not be considered as commercial travelers, but shall be subject to the license fees levied on business of the kind which they carry on.

ARTICLE VIII.

No license shall be required of:

(a) Persons traveling only to study trade and its needs, even though they initiate commercial relations, provided they do not make sales of merchandise.

(b) Persons operating through local agencies which pay the license fee or other imposts to which their business is subject.

(c) Travelers who are exclusively buyers.

ARTICLE IX.

Any concessions affecting any of the provisions of the present convention that may hereafter be granted by either high contracting party, either by law or by treaty or convention, shall immediately be extended to the other party.

ARTICLE X.

This convention shall be ratified; and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington or at Bogota within two years, or sooner if possible.

The present convention shall remain in force until the end of six months after either of the high contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, each of them reserving to itself the right of giving such notice to the other at any time. And it is hereby agreed between the parties that, on the expiration of six months after such notice shall have been received by either of them from the other party as above mentioned, this convention shall altogether cease and terminate.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these articles and have thereunder affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate, at Bogota, in the English and the Spanish languages, on the fourth day of August, nineteen hundred and twenty-two.

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION RELATING TO WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

In executive session this day the following convention was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, I transmit an authenticated copy of an international convention signed at Sevres, France, in one original on October 6, 1921, amending the convention relating to weights and measures, signed at Paris on May 20, 1875, and the regulations annexed to the said convention.

The attention of the Senate is invited to the accompanying report from the Secretary of State and to the copy of a letter to him from the Secretary of Commerce therewith inclosed, stating the reasons why, in the opinion of the Director of the Bureau of Standards, the modifying convention is necessary.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 16, 1922.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a translation, a duly authenticated copy of an international convention signed at Sevres, France, on October 6, 1921, amending the convention relating to weights and measures, signed at Paris on May 20, 1875, and the regulations annexed to the said convention.

For convenience of comparison by the Senate there is also inclosed a copy of the said convention of May 20, 1875, and the regulations annexed thereto.

The modifying convention of October 6, 1921, was signed on the part of the United States by Dr. Samuel W. Stratton, Director of the Bureau of Standards, and Mr. Sheldon Whitehouse, counselor of the American Embassy at Paris, in virtue of full power issued to them by the President.

For the further information of the Senate I inclose a letter from the Secretary of Commerce stating the objects which the proposed modifications have in view and which, it is stated, are necessary owing to changes in conditions since the original convention was agreed to.

Respectfully submitted.

(Signed) CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR THE AMENDMENT.

1st. Of the Convention signed at Paris, May 20, 1875, to insure the international unification and improvement of the metric system;

2nd. Of the regulations annexed to the said convention;

Concluded between: Germany, Argentine Republic, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Spain, the United States of America, Finland, France, Great Britain, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Norway, Peru, Portugal, Rumania, The Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes State, Siam, Sweden, Switzerland, and Uruguay.

The undersigned plenipotentiaries of the countries hereinafter enumerated having met in conference in Paris, have agreed on the following:

ARTICLE 1.

Articles 7 and 8 of the Convention of May 20, 1875, are superseded by the following provisions:

ARTICLE 7. After the Committee shall have proceeded with the work of coordinating the measures relative to electric units and when the general conference shall have so decided by a unanimous vote, the Bureau will have charge of the establishment and keeping of the standards of the electric units and their test copies and also of comparing with those standards the national or other standards of precision.

The Bureau is also charged with the duty of making the determinations relative to physical constants, a more accurate knowledge of which may be useful in increasing precision and further insuring uniformity in the provinces to which the abovementioned units belong (Article 6 and 1st paragraph of Article 7).

It is finally charged with the duty of coordinating similar determinations effected in other institutions.

ARTICLE 8. The international prototypes and standards and also their test copies shall be deposited in the Bureau; access to the deposit shall be solely reserved for the international committee.

ARTICLE 2.

Articles 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 17, 18 and 20, of the regulations annexed to the Convention of May 20, 1875, are superseded by the following provisions.

ARTICLE 6. The annual appropriation for the international bureau consists of two parts, one of which is fixed, the other complementary.

The fixed part is, in principle, 250,000 francs, but on the unanimous vote of the Committee may be raised to 300,000 francs. It is borne by all the states and autonomous colonies that adhered to the meter convention before the sixth General Conference.

The complementary part is made up of contributions from the states and autonomous colonies that joined the Convention after the aforesaid General Conference. The Committee is charged with the duty of drawing upon the motion of the Director the annual budget, but without exceeding the amount computed in accordance with the provisions of the two paragraphs above. The budget is made known every year by means of a special financial report to the governments of the high contracting parties.

If the committee find it necessary either to increase beyond 300,000 francs, the fixed part of the annual appropriation or to modify the computation of the contributions as determined by Article 20, of these regulations, it should lay the matter before the governments so as to enable them to issue in good time the needed instructions to their delegates to the next General Conference in order that the said conference may deliberate to good purpose. The decision will stand only in the case that no opposition shall have been expressed before or in the conference by any of the contracting states.

If the state should let three years go without paying its contribution, that contribution shall be divided among the other states proportionally to their own contribution. The additional sum thus paid by the states to make up the whole of the appropriation of the Bureau shall be regarded as an advance to the delinquent state and shall be reimbursed to them if that state should make good its arrears. The advantages and prerogatives conferred by adhering to the Meter Convention are suspended in the case of states that have been delinquent three years.

After three more years the delinquent state shall be expelled from the Convention and the reckoning of the contributions restored in accordance with the provisions of Article 20, of these regulations.

ARTICLE 8. The International Committee mentioned at Article 3 of the Convention shall be composed of 18 members all from different states.

At the time of the renewal by halves of the international committee, the outgoing members shall be first those who may have been provisionally elected to fill vacancies between two sessions of the conference; the others will be drawn by lot. Outgoing members may be reelected.

ARTICLE 9. The International Committee organizes itself by electing by its own secret vote its Chairman and Secretary. Those appointments are notified to the governments of the high contracting parties.

The chairman and the secretary of the Committee and the Director of the Bureau must belong to different countries.

Once organized, the Committee cannot hold other elections or make other appointments except before three months shall have elapsed after the notice of a vacancy calling for a vote shall have been given to all the members.

ARTICLE 10. The International Committee directs all the metrological works that the high contracting parties shall decide to have carried on jointly.

It is also charged with the duty of seeing to the conservation of the international prototypes and standards.

It may, lastly, institute the cooperation of specialists in questions of metrology and coordinate the results of their work.

ARTICLE 11. The committee shall meet at least once in two years.

ARTICLE 12. The ballotting in the committee is by a majority vote; in case of a tie vote the chairman has the casting vote. Decisions are only valid if the members present are at least one-half of the elected members forming the committee.

Subject to that condition absent members have a right to delegate their votes to present members who must prove that they have been so delegated. This also applies to appointments by secret ballot.

The Director of the Bureau is a nonvoting member of the Committee.

ARTICLE 15. The International Committee will draw up a detailed set of regulations for the organization and work of the Bureau and will fix the dues to be paid for the extraordinary works provided by Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention.

Those dues will be applied to improving the scientific equipment of the Bureau. A certain amount may be drawn annually for the retirement fund from the total dues collected by the Bureau.

ARTICLE 17. A regulation drawn up by the Committee will determine the maximum staff for each category of the personnel of the Bureau. The Director and his assistants shall be elected by secret ballot by the International Committee. Other appointments shall be notified to the governments of the high contracting parties. The Director will appoint the other members of the personnel within the bounds laid by the regulation mentioned in the first paragraph above.

ARTICLE 18. The Director of the Bureau shall have access to the place where the international prototypes are deposited only in pursuance of a resolution of the Committee and in the presence of at least one of its members. The place of deposit of the prototypes shall be opened only by means of three keys, one of which shall be in the possession of the Director of Archives of France, the second in that of the Chairman of the Committee and the third in that of the Director of the Bureau.

The standards of the class of national prototypes alone shall be used for the ordinary comparing work of the Bureau.

ARTICLE 20. The scale of contributions spoken of in Article 9 of the Convention is established for its fixed part on the basis of the appropriation referred to in Article 6 of the present regulations and of the population; the normal contribution of each state cannot be less than 5 to a thousand nor more than 15% of the whole appropriation, regardless of the population. In order to establish that scale, it shall first be found which are the states that are in the conditions required for the minimum and maximum and the remainder of the quota shall be distributed among the other states in the direct ratio of their population.

The quota thus reckoned stands for the whole time included between two consecutive General Conferences and can only be modified in the meanwhile in the following cases:

(a) When, on the contrary, a state which had been previously delinquent for more than three years pays up its arrears, and the occasion arises to return to the other governments the advances made by them.

The complementary contribution is computed on the same basis of population and is like that which the states that have long belonged to the Convention pay under the same conditions.

If after adhering to the convention a state declares it would like to extend the benefits thereof to one or more of its colonies that are not autonomous, the number of the population of the said colonies would be added to that of the state in reckoning the scale of contributions.

When a colony that is recognized as autonomous shall desire to adhere to the convention, it will be regarded with respect to its admission into the Convention and as the mother country may decide, either as a dependency of that mother country or as a contracting state.

ARTICLE 3.

Any state may adhere to this Convention by giving notice thereof to the French Government which shall notify all the participant states and the Chairman of the International Committee of Weights and Measures.

Any new accession to the Convention of May 20, 1875, will necessarily involve adhesion to this Convention.

ARTICLE 4.

The present Convention shall be ratified. Each power shall within the shortest possible time send its ratification to the French Government which will see to its being notified to the other signatory countries. The ratifications shall remain in deposit in the archives of the French Government. The present Convention will go into effect for each signatory country on the very date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

Done at Sevres, October 6, 1921, in one copy that will be deposited in the Archives of the French Government and of which certified copies shall be forwarded to every one of the signatory countries.

This copy, dated as above, may be signed until March 31, 1922.

In witness whereof the plenipotentiaries hereinbelow named, whose powers have been found to be in good and due form, have signed the present Convention.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 24, 1922.

The SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of July 12 (SYS 592.51 A 4/76), requesting an opinion concerning the international convention signed at Paris on March 31, 1922, amending the convention relating to weights and measures signed at Paris on May 20, 1875. In reply, I would state that I have been informed by the Director of the Bureau of Standards that the changes proposed in the above-mentioned treaty have four objects in view, each of which is necessary owing to changes in conditions since the original convention was agreed to.

First. The total amount of funds subscribed by the various countries for the support of the International Bureau of Weights and Measures was wholly insufficient. The amendment provides for an increase from one hundred to two hundred and fifty thousand francs.

Second. The functions of the international bureau have heretofore included only the standards of length and mass, whereas there are other standards which should be deposited at a central source in order that the subscribing countries may have the benefit of them, as, for example, the standard of electrical resistance. Provision is made for this additional standard in the convention as amended.

Third. In view of the wider range of standards to be handled by the international bureau the personnel of the administrative committee, known as the International Committee on Weights and Measures, has been increased from 14 to 18 members.

Fourth. The international bureau has been authorized to investigate and coordinate the values of the physical constants connected with the standards taken up by that bureau.

The necessity for these changes is evident, and there is no objection on the part of this department to the transmission of the amended convention to the United States Senate in the usual form.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 6, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 5, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Father of us all. We thank Thee for the vision of the one perfect life; ever lead us toward its purity and beauty. Endow us with determined wills that we may be true to every trust and faithful to every obligation. By faith and by love may we always be bound to them. Help us to wear worthily the badge of mature years and to be earnest and brave these vital days in the service of our Republic. Ever give us the outlook of life and light and be as near us as our conscience. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, the bill (H. R. 12473) granting the consent of Congress to the Wynco Block Coal Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va.; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 12170) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa.," approved August 11, 1916.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PAGE, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. HALE, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4116. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Missouri, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Francis River, in the State of Missouri.

S. 4187. An act to extend the time for payment of charges due on reclamation projects, and for other purposes.

S. 4096. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine.

S. 214. An act to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

S. 1467. An act to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased.

S. 4122. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Interstate Toll Bridge Co. for construction of a bridge across Red River between Montague County, Tex., and Jefferson County, Okla.

SUGAR EQUALIZATION BOARD.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up privileged House Resolution 475.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up House Resolution 475, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 475.

Resolved, That the President be requested to transmit to the House of Representatives the facts in his possession concerning the following, if not incompatible with the public interest:

First. What activities the United States Sugar Equalization Board, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, is now engaged in.

Second. What salaries, if any, are being paid by such board to its officials or employees and what salaries have been paid during the last two years.

Third. What other expenses are being incurred and have been incurred since December 31, 1920, by said board.

Fourth. What money or property is now owned or controlled by such board.

Fifth. Where such funds, if any, are now deposited and what, if any, interest has been drawn on same since December 31, 1920.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, this is simply to call for information on behalf of my colleagues. I report this by instruction from the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of what value will this information be to the House if it is furnished by the President?

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, it is information that the House is entitled to. The Government has $5,000,000 invested in this organization, and the profits of the organization were about $39,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Could not this information be obtained by addressing a letter to the Sugar Equalization Board?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will say to the gentleman that a letter was addressed to the commission, and the information was promised, but evidently it was overlooked.

Mr. STAFFORD. When was the letter addressed to this board?

Mr. HAUGEN. On April 17, 1920.

Mr. STAFFORD. No effort has been made since April 17, 1920, to get this information from the Sugar Equalization Board?

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, it would be rather presumptuous, would it not, to ask a $5,000,000 corporation for information the second time?

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman acquainted with the fact that the board is not of the same personnel as it was in 1920? I differ with the gentleman in saying it would be presumptuous.

Mr. HAUGEN. It would be presumptuous for the chairman of the committee to ask a second time for information which had already been promised, but not furnished.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Who is to have the first opportunity for respect, this Congress or some corporation from which it seeks information? You would represent Congress in that request, would you not?

Mr. HAUGEN. The request was made on the 17th day of April, 1920, and the reply is dated——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Do you not put yourself in the attitude of one who is afraid of making a second request for fear it will be answered?

Mr. STAFFORD. This is two years afterwards, and you are calling upon the President of the United States for that information which might be obtained by addressing a letter to the board.

Mr. HAUGEN. On April 19, 1922, they said they would send the information in a few days.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Would it not be the same courtesy as is known among business men to write again for data which were supposed to have been prepared and might have been intrusted to the mail and might have been miscarried? Might you not make some such call as that, so as to give them an opportunity to answer gracefully?

Mr. JONES of Texas. They had the opportunity when they were on the stand.

Mr. TINCHER. The attorney for the board was on the stand before our committee, and some of us tried to elicit that information from him so as to be able to put it in the record.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long ago has it been since that representative was before the committee?

Mr. JONES of Texas. It was in January, 1921.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was on January 18, 1921.

Mr. STAFFORD. Two years ago the attorney was on the firing line before the committee and was asked for the information, and now, two years afterwards, you want the President of the United States to require them to furnish the information.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman knows that the information was requested of the President by reason of the fact that he will undoubtedly request the board to furnish it. This information ought to be available.

Mr. STAFFORD. It will be available only in the closing hours of a Congress, when there is no opportunity to utilize it.

Mr. TINCHER. There may be times here when we shall want information of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. You may want the information in the next Congress, but I shall not.

Mr. TINCHER. We want information of this kind.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill H. R. 13660, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. And pending that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] if we can make an agreement as to the extent of general debate? For that purpose, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on the bill be limited to one hour and a half, 45 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky and 45 minutes by myself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will state to the gentleman from Michigan that the requests for time which have been made, added to the time I myself desire to use, will make more than 45 minutes. Will not the gentleman agree to a longer time than that?

Mr. CRAMTON. What would the gentleman think should be the minimum? The gentleman, of course, realizes that we must spend the necessary time in the consideration of the bill and yet proceed as rapidly as convenient.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have three requests for time in addition to what I myself wish to use, and that would require that I should cut myself off to a shorter time than I would really like to have. I think we could get along with an hour.

Mr. CRAMTON. Could the gentleman on his side get along with an hour?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think it possible.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill may be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] and one hour by myself.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill carries $22,624,895.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; it appropriates as much as some single items in the Army and Navy bills.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but some of these millions are to pay for civic improvements in Washington that are local in their nature, that mostly concern residents of the city of Washington but have no connection whatever with the Government. There are many such projects in this bill, running away up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

I think the gentleman ought to be a little more liberal in allowing time, especially when there are matters in the District appropriation bill which should have legislative consideration.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows that usually the longer the general debate the less attention is given to the bill under consideration.

Mr. BLANTON. There will be very little chance to discuss these propositions under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CRAMTON. We hope to be generous in the five-minute debate.

Mr. BLANTON. I know, but after we get through with the general debate the bill is rushed through and the time is limited by motions to cut off debate.

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume the gentleman wants to discuss the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to discuss the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope he may have the time to do so and I hope we can get it all in an hour on a side.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know what arrangements the gentleman from Kentucky has made, but I would like to have 20 minutes on some propositions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I doubt if I will be able to give myself 20 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why the hurry? We have already passed the majority of the supply bills, and it is only the 5th of January. We will get through with them by the 15th of January, and then we will sit here with folded hands waiting on the Senate.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows there are Members who would be very glad to see the appropriation bills out of the way in order to give an opportunity to consider the farm credit legislation and other important matters.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, but the propositions contained in this bill are some of the matters in which the people of the United States are vitally interested.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know what time the gentleman desires. I will let the gentleman have five minutes out of my hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Good. I will make no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, may I suggest that we are now getting into the habit of considering appropriation bills immediately after they are printed, and immediately after the hearings are printed and made available to the Members.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is a habit which has existed for the 10 years that I have been in Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have never before observed anything like the extent to which that has been carried this session.

Mr. CRAMTON. It has been done all the past 10 years.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I suggest to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. MADDEN] that he might save several thousand dollars by not printing the hearings, if the hearings are not going to be useful, and certainly they are not useful if forthwith after they are printed the bills are brought to the House for consideration. Who has had an opportunity to study this bill in the light of the hearings? Why spend the money to print the hearings if no time is given to read them?

Mr. CRAMTON. The committee endeavored to keep out extraneous matter, and the hearings are not very voluminous. They can be read in a reasonable length of time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one hour by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair to notify me when I have consumed 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do so.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we take up now the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the maintenance of the government of the District of Columbia. I am sure that every member of the committee shares in the regret which I feel that our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], is not in a condition of health to permit him to bring this bill before the Congress to-day. It was my good fortune to serve on the subcommittee under the chairmanship of Mr. DAVIS in the preparation of three annual appropriation bills for the District of Columbia, and I know, as do the Members of the House generally, the great ability and the conscientious manner with which he has always discharged his duties. I know that not only do we regret that we have not the benefit of his wisdom and advice in the consideration of this bill, but every Member of the House will join in the hope that he may speedily be restored to health and return to service with us. [Applause.]

In the preparation of this bill the committee have given as careful consideration as a committee can give to the problems intrusted to them. They have held hearings for longer hours than any other committee with which I have ever served in Congress, and have held very numerous conferences with officials, organizations, and individuals interested in District affairs.

The bill which we bring before you to-day carries appropriations amounting to $22,624,895. The appropriation for the current year amounted to $22,851,609.80.

Here follows a summary of the regular annual appropriations for 1923, the estimates for 1924, and the amounts proposed in this bill:

Appropriations, 1923		$22,851,609.80
Estimates, 1924:
Original	$23,531,130.00
Supplemental	20,000.00
		23,551,130.00
Increase of estimates over 1923 appropriations		699,520.20
Appropriations proposed in this bill for 1923		22,624,895.00
Decrease of proposed 1924 appropriations under 1923 appropriations		226,714.00
Decrease of proposed 1924 appropriations under 1924 estimates		926,235.00

In this connection it is to be remembered that there are numerous items in the appropriation bill for the current year in which decreases were desired and recommended by the District authorities. One item alone, for the completion of the Georgetown Bridge, $250,000, of course, is not necessary to be repeated this year, and more than accounts for the decrease of this bill below that for 1923.

In addition to the amounts carried in this bill for 1924, there will be permanent and indefinite appropriations which occur automatically without action of Congress, amounting to $1,512,843. Of the $22,624,895 carried in this bill, only $8,552,137.20 of that sum will constitute a charge upon the Federal Treasury. The entire sum on account of the water service, exclusive of appropriations for the increase of water supply, is chargeable to the water revenues. This bill provides that certain small items including the minimum wage board, the public employment service, playgrounds, a part of the appropriations on account of the parks that shall make the parks available for outdoor sports, all amounting to $203,532, shall be paid entirely out of the revenues of the District. There remains, as a divisible expense, $21,380,343, of which 40 per cent, or $8,552,137.20 is chargeable to the Federal Treasury.

In connection with that it should be noted that in the current year 1922 there came back to the Federal Treasury certain income in the way of receipts from fees, and so forth, amounting to $412,464.89. It seems that about a half million may be expected to be returned in 1924, so that approximately $8,000,000 is the total charge on the Federal Treasury in this bill.

Notwithstanding the committee has not seen its way clear to give all that the Budget estimates carried in every case, in the main we have not exceeded their estimates, although in exceptional cases we have done so to a small amount. Although we have not been able to give all that the Budget estimates in every case, we are satisfied that the bill will better provide for the needs of the District of Columbia than any appropriation bill for the District that has ever heretofore been brought to Congress. I think we may be fortified in that belief by the reception which the bill has received from the newspapers of Washington, particularly from the Washington Post and the Evening Star. The Post this morning heads the article reviewing the bill "Greet the $22,000,000 city bill with hope," saying "on the whole the bill reported to the House is satisfactory to the commissioners."

Everyone knows that the Evening Star has given a closer study and attention to the needs of the District government that any other Washington newspaper. That paper last night, in an interesting and dispassionate editorial discussion of this bill, stated, after having criticized the reduction of some items concerning schools, that—

> Had the school-improvement program recommended by the committee gone beyond the Budget Bureau, as in some other particulars of District maintenance, and approximated the provisions carried by the current law, the new bill would have been the most satisfactory yet reported to the House for the District.

Thereby the Star commends the bill as the most satisfactory that has been brought to the Congress except as to the item of schools. I hope to touch upon the provision for the schools before I conclude. Now, what I desire this morning, and I think what the House will desire, is not so much that I shall engage in any controversial discussion but that I should give the House in the time I may be privileged to take now as complete a picture of the bill as possible of what the bill proposes to do for the District of Columbia. Therefore I am going to ask Members of the House not to interrupt me by questions, because I think I can give them a more connected description and more interesting to the Members generally if I am not unduly interrupted. I will ask that I be not interrupted unless some statement I make is not understood or is felt to be directly incorrect.

I will first touch on the subject of sewers. One of the great problems in any city that is rapidly growing, as is the city of Washington, or any great city, is its problem of keeping up with the new developments—sewers, schools, streets, and all those things which must necessarily be somewhat behind the new development. For sewer repair for the current year there was $80,000. For 1924 we give $105,000, and we are assured by the authorities that the $105,000 will take care of their repair work, and that they will be enabled to bring all repair work for sewers to a higher standard than heretofore. In fact, the engineer characterizes it as fourteen-sixteenths perfect as to the standard of sewer care. They will provide new equipment, $8,000, and repair of scows, $3,000, and put their whole service in a greatly improved condition. There was appropriated for the pumping station in 1923, $80,000, and we are giving them $120,000. We have gone into these items carefully. We are assured that it will take care of the operation and the maintenance of the station. It also gives $7,500 to start replacements, and it will enable them to inaugurate a six-day week for these employees in the pumping station. These employees heretofore in the service have worked seven days every week in the year, which is an undesirable condition for any class of people to work. This gives them $7,800 to inaugurate the six-day week. There is a small increase of salary—$100—in one case.

For main and pipe sewers, new construction, work on sewers, the current year there was allowed $125,000, and we gave the same amount, the amount of the estimate. For suburban sewers, taking the big sewers out into the new sections that are being so rapidly developed, for the current year there was appropriated $125,000, and for the year 1924 we give $300,000. For assessment and permit work the current year the appropriation is $100,000 and the estimate is $150,000, which we give in full. For the Rock Creek intercepter, a new item, we allowed $20,000, and $20,000 more to continue the construction of the upper Potomac intercepter, the amount of the estimate.

Now take up the question of streets and roads. Nothing has been brought more frequently to the attention of the Congress than the streets and roads, and I know there are sometimes hasty statements made in the Congress and out of it. I have driven by automobile through many of the cities of the United States, and I say without fear of successful contradiction that the streets, pavements, and roads of the District of Columbia, as a whole, are the best of any city in the United States. In the average city one will find a limited number of streets that are paved suitably for automobile traffic, but also you will find that many of the business streets of the cities are paved with old rough blocks or are otherwise unsatisfactory. There is less of that in Washington than in any other large city in the country. Nevertheless, there is a need in this growing city for improvement, and we have tried to meet that need. For assessment and permit work for the current year, $250,000, and we have given them $285,000, the full amount estimated. For street improvements the current year appropriation was $233,500. The Budget recommended $730,000 for 1924, better than 300 per cent raise, and we have gone above the Budget estimate to the extent of $44,700 and have recommended in this bill for 1924, $774,700. We ask further that that money be made immediately available, which is a departure. The idea of that is that more economical construction of street improvements can be secured if it is done each year in accordance with the calendar season instead of having the season chopped in two with the fiscal year, dividing in that way some of their program. We are assured that they can accomplish more with the same amount of money, under that change of authorization. In giving those street improvements we have given everything that the Budget recommended and that the commissioners recommended as the most urgent items except two.

The program of the Budget and of the commissioners was to give emphasis entirely, first, to those main arteries coming into the city that are used by the greatest number of people, and there were items for a number of improved streets. Of those streets we take out the item for Massachusetts Avenue, that portion from S Street to Wisconsin Avenue. That street is in very good condition at the present time, although the gutters and the curbing need to be installed and there could be some improvement in the surface; but it is in pretty satisfactory condition. We take out $80,000 there. Then there is the Rock Creek Church Road on the west side of the Soldiers' Home. That did not appeal to us as being used to any very great extent, not so great in extent as the main arteries, and it is also in pretty satisfactory condition. Thirty thousand dollars was taken out there, a total in those two items of $110,000. There were many small items that the Budget did not recommend that are for residential streets in these new neighborhoods that are building up, with new home owners on both sides of the streets—a street connecting with an existing good pavement, a street at present consisting only of the natural clay, with possibly a slight mixture of cinders, but built up 100 per cent on each side. It appealed to the committee that in that kind of a street, with the adjacent two property owners paying one-half of the cost, we ought to give that class of home owners a decent pavement in front of their homes. Therefore we inserted many new residential items, to the extent in full of $154,700, which were not in the Budget at all. Those are items which run from five to six to ten and eleven thousand dollars each, a great number of urgent items, all cared for in that $154,700. I want to emphasize that we have taken care of many of those cases, while, in addition, we have indorsed the action of the Budget as to those main arteries. Canal Street, from the Georgetown bridge to the Conduit Road, Connecticut Avenue, running out toward Chevy Chase and Maryland, will be thoroughly taken care of; the amount of money granted in the bill will complete the improvements on that street within the District.

The same is true of Georgia Avenue running out into Maryland, and of Rhode Island Avenue going out to the northeast. This amount of money granted in the bill will complete the repaving of those two streets, of Georgia Avenue to the District line, and of Rhode Island Avenue from Sixteenth Street to the District line. Then there is Bladensburg Road running out from Fifteenth and H Streets toward Baltimore, commonly known as the Baltimore Pike, now having a line of poles down the center, and it is said that this is one place where more bootleggers and patrons of bootleggers are killed off than in any other section around here. We propose to improve that street through a removal of the poles from the center of the street, and I am sure that all will agree that that is a very desirable reform. Then in the southeast there is Nichols Road and Good Hope Road, both leading to the country, and both to receive repaving. We are in this way reaching out on the main arteries in every direction, improving roads, and at the same time this bill takes care of a great number of residential streets.

One place, perhaps, in which we have not given the full amount asked by the Budget in respect to streets is in the item of trees and parkings; $50,000 is carried for the current year and the Budget recommended $60,000. It seemed to us that this increase might be deferred for the present.

Then there is the item of refuse from the streets and homes of the city. For street cleaning the current year there is carried $385,000 and we give the estimate, $400,000. In the matter of garbage disposal, $750,000 is carried for the current year, and we increase that to $825,000. That, to be sure, is below the Budget estimate, but in that respect there is now an increased demand for the things which can be salvaged out of that refuse—paper and other materials, and the prices are going up. The receipts, no doubt, will be greater than in the past, and we are hoping that the $825,000 will prove to be sufficient.

Charities and prisons. At Occoquan we have given everything asked for in their new construction and maintenance program. At the tuberculosis hospital, where they asked a nurses' home, we have allowed $35,000, not the full amount, but it seemed to us sufficient to take care of 10 or 12 nurses and 2 or 3 other persons. It will make available the construction of that nurses' home and provide a greater capacity for patients in the institution.

At the industrial home for colored children heretofore they have had an appropriation for an additional boys' cottage, but the money was not sufficient to permit its construction. We have given the additional amount of money necessary. The industrial home for white children has been closed during the current year, and the bill carries an amount that will insure the reopening and the proper functioning of that institution. At the home for the aged and infirm we extend the water mains and give them considerable equipment—in fact, all of the new equipment that was asked.

We are placing fire-alarm boxes at all the institutions. We restored $7,500 for aid to the ex-Confederate veterans who are in need in the city, and as I myself am the son of a Union veteran it was a particular pleasure to restore that particular item that had not been included in the estimate that came to the Congress. For the militia we increased the fund available for pay because of the increased enrollment of militia. The Anacostia River improvement, $150,000 is appropriated for the continuance of that work. This appropriation, it is expected, will provide $30,000 to complete the drainage this side of Bennings Bridge, and the balance will be used for the building of a sea wall in the development of that area. For the public grounds and parks of the city, under Colonel Sherrill, we give more to maintain these parks for outdoor sports, believing that the use is very desirable and beneficial. We reappropriate the amount for the construction and maintenance of the colored bathing beach. Then we appropriate $50,000, the amount estimated, for the development of section D in Anacostia Park. For the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway we cut out those appropriations estimated for acquiring Klingle Valley and for Piney Branch Valley, believing those extensions can wait a more favorable financial condition; but we give the changes that Colonel Sherrill and the commission asked as to the boundaries of the parkway in bringing into the park some small areas and excluding from the parkway other small areas. That was in the direction of working out a more desirable boundary for the parkway. We gave the full estimates for the parkway outside the two items I have mentioned—Klingle Valley and Piney Branch Valley. From the heading of some of the papers it might be thought that we had seriously cut into some of these appropriations, where it is not the case. We have increased the offices where the work is largely increased, as the assessor, collector, license bureau, and elsewhere. Under the head of libraries we provide for a Mount Pleasant branch to be established in the Northwest, being the third branch library.

Under public playgrounds we give two new sites and increase the amount for the maintenance of public playgrounds and summer-school playgrounds under Mrs. Rhodes. For the electrical department, general supplies, we give a small increase. Under the estimate for lighting the city the increase is from $430,000 to $450,000. For the police we give them an increase of 5 in their force following the increase of 33 of the current year resulting from the transfer of the White House police to a different jurisdiction. The House will be interested to know that the bill carries an amount that will result in completely arming the police force of Washington with modern revolvers. The firemen, we increased the force by 26. And then we go a little above the Budget, the item carried $2,300, I think, in order to equip the fire fighters with gas masks and oxygen helmets. We have increased the amount to $7,300 carried in the bill, believing we should at once fully equip the fire force with this very essential equipment in order to make more safe the work of the fire fighters and extend their usefulness. We gave all that was asked for hose, increasing it from $12,000 to $20,000, believing in the program Chief Watson announced that we should have only the best hose. We gave all the new motor equipment asked for the fire department, and we are getting to the point where some of the motor equipment goes into the reserve force.

One item carried in this bill is for reserve purposes. The only thing cut out of the bill for new equipment for the fire force is their drill tower and smoke-testing building.

In the health department the most significant thing is perhaps the creation of a new hygiene service, which is to take the place of the work done by the Child Welfare Society. It is a transfer that follows the desires of that organization, and the health officers assure us the cooperation of the Child Welfare Society will be continued in the work of this child hygiene service, which is to give attention to the physical needs of children 6 years old and under.

The item as to schools has been one that has had particular attention in the public press and elsewhere, and some of the newspapers have been even so unkind as to intimate that because this subcommittee happened to be presided over by a Member of Congress who, when at home, lives in a town of less than 5,000 population, the committee was not fit to handle it, and its conclusions should not have any particular weight in Congress.

I am glad I do live in a small town where men can preserve their confidence in their fellows and can know people in all walks of life and have friendly relations with all. I am glad, however, in this case that I do not have to ask Congress entirely to take my judgment as a resident in a small town, or even the judgment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who may live in a town no larger than my home town. We have worked on these items in close cooperation with the Budget Bureau, and the Budget Bureau was created as the agency of Congress to accomplish certain things, and it is the duty of Congress, so long as that office properly performs its functions, to support and sustain it. Our effort has been to sustain it in this drive that must be on now to reduce expenditures until we bring them within the receipts of the Government, and if we can supplement the work of the Budget we are very glad to do so, but we have tried not to defeat the good work they have done. As to the work by the Budget on this item of schools and the investigations that were made and the decisions that were arrived at, I want to say, respecting the decisions of the Budget as to the new school program and new lines of building, that that part of the program of the Budget was indorsed by the subcommittee and comes before you with the approval of the full committee.

Let me read to you what the Budget officer says about Captain Stephens, so that, if there is any suspicion in your minds that there is anything wrong in this bill because it comes from a committee headed by a man who comes from a small town, I hope the impression will be removed by remembering that the bill also represents the views of Captain Stephens. Concerning Captain Stephens, General Lord says:

> Captain Stephens served in my office during the war when I was officiating as Chief of Finance, handling finance matters of the most extraordinary importance—matters that required great administrative ability and great legal and financial training. His qualifications were so unusual and his services so signal that before becoming Director of the Bureau of the Budget, after being informed by the President that he intended to appoint me, I got in touch with Captain Stephens to see if I might not secure his services as an assistant. He at that time was a member of the well-known law firm of Scott, Bancroft, Marshall & Stephens, of Chicago. He is a man of means, and consented, after a conference with me, to devote at least six months to the Budget work, his interest in the National Budget and his desire of having a part in its creation inducing him to make what was really a great financial sacrifice in accepting the position offered him.

He is a Chicago man, and it is my understanding that Chicago is at least as large as Washington, and so Captain Stephens does not labor under the handicap that I do of coming from a small town. I read further:

> He is, as stated, a Chicago man, graduate of Harvard University, taking his legal degree from Northwestern University. He at the present time is a director of the Glenwood Manual Training School and a director of the Chicago Museum of Art. All during his life he has been connected with and interested in educational matters, and has made a study of civics, with especial reference to city affairs. He devoted a great deal of time to the District estimates, making a study of the schools, streets, and other interests in person.

I happen to know that he visited all the schools and examined into all the propositions in company with Doctor Ballou, and the school authorities had every opportunity to put everything before him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has reached the limit of time that he allotted to himself.

Mr. CRAMTON. I thank the Chair. I will take five minutes more.

So much for the personnel that supports this program before you. Now, as to the program itself, I shall not now take much time on it, but I just want to bring before you this important fact, that they urge that the crying need in the District of Columbia, the thing that you hear the most about, is that the schools do not have enough seats for those who would attend the schools. This program which is now brought to you with the recommendation of the Budget and the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations gives everything, every item, that the Board of Education asked this year that had anything to do with seats in the schools at any early date. We give them everything that the Board of Education says they need, and it is my observation that Doctor Ballou and his associates will ask at least for everything they need. We give them, as the Budget gave them, every item that has anything to do with providing additional seats at any early time in the schools.

Following is a list of school projects for the fiscal year 1924, as submitted by the Board of Education, approvals by the commissioners, and approvals by the Budget:

	Board of Education.		Commissioners.		Budget.
	Number of projects.	Total estimate.	Number of projects.	Total estimate.	Number of projects.	Total estimate.
New buildings or additions to existing buildings	10	$1,125,000	8	$1,005,000	6	$750,000
New sites or additions to existing sites	[1] 35	1,314,500	33	1,127,000	6	450,000
Assembly halls and gymnasiums for existing buildings	2	65,000	2	65,000	.....	.....
Total	47	2,504,500	43	2,197,000	12	1,200,000

[1] Eighteen of these sites are for playgrounds and one for an athletic field.

The commissioners modified the school board's estimates on building projects as follows:

Eliminated:
New McKinley High involving reappropriation of an unexpended balance and authority to enter into contracts for $1,500,000 for new building. The bill carries $215,000 for a new site for this project.
Addition to MacFarland Junior High	$100,000
Reductions in project estimates approved:
Eight-room building, Georgia Avenue and Sixteenth Street, north of Park Road, reduced from $150,000 to $130,000	20,000
Eight-room building to relieve Tenley School, reduced from $175,000 to $160,000	15,000
Addition to Thomson School, reduced from $175,000 to $135,000	40,000
	175,000
Addition to project estimates approved:
Remodeling of Garnett Patterson School, increased from $25,000 to $80,000	55,000
Board's estimates for buildings	1,125,000
Commissioner's approvals	1,105,000
Net reduction	20,000

The Budget modified the school board's estimates on building projects as follows:

Eliminated:
New Junior High, Twentieth Street and Rock Creek, K and O	$100,000
New McKinley High, as above.
Addition to MacFarland Junior High, as above	100,000
Garnett Patterson remodeling (Board of Education wanted $25,000; commissioners revised to $80,000)	25,000
Approved reductions by commissioners:
Tenley School	15,000
Eight-room building, Georgia Avenue and Sixteenth Street	20,000
Made further reductions:
Thomson School addition, reduced from $175,000 to $60,000	115,000
	375,000
Board of Education estimates for building projects	1,125,000
Budget recommendations for building projects	750,000
Net reduction	375,000

You will notice that the Budget gives every item that means new seats. But a long list of real-estate ventures—small areas scattered all over the city, either for some remote building program or some extension for playground purposes or otherwise for existing schools—are not approved by the Budget and are not included in this program. Other items for the construction of gymnasiums and assembly halls are not included; but every item that the Board of Education asked that meant new seats and provided for new construction of classrooms is granted with one exception: $100,000 for work on an addition, as I recall, to one of the junior high schools. That was not given because the school authorities said if they were given the $100,000 this year it would not be an amount sufficient to justify construction, and they would hold that $100,000 until they got $200,000 more a year hence to put with it, and the Budget felt—and we thought that they were right—that they might as well wait and get their entire $300,000 a year later.

The Board of Education have listed their needs. So far as seating capacity goes, we are giving them everything they ask for. We are giving them $1,200,000, and there have been only one or two years in our history when any larger amount than that has been given. More than that, I will make this statement, which will be elaborated later under the five-minute rule, perhaps, that the amount we gave last year and the amount we are giving this year is more than equal to the increased enrollment in the schools. We are building classrooms now faster than the enrollment is increasing. Let me remind you further that the figures as to enrollment are the ones you hear about. The figures as to attendance do not begin to keep up with the figures as to enrollment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 30 minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will take five minutes more.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. Some time back there was a good deal said in the press of the District relative to the sale of bonds for the improvement of schools, the building of more buildings, and for the improvement of streets and roads, as is done throughout the country.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is nothing in the bill as to that.

Mr. LAZARO. I merely wanted the gentleman's opinion on that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it would be quite useless for me to give an opinion. That program, if considered at all, would come properly from the legislative committee. It is outside of the functions of our committee.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to ask the gentleman about one of the very small items in this bill. Has the gentleman investigated the question of the wages of the janitors of the various schools?

Mr. CRAMTON. Not this year; but I was on the committee when that was gone into before.

Mr. SNYDER. Does the gentleman know that janitors of schools in this city are paid $60, $80, and $100 a month?

Mr. CRAMTON. The wages of janitors are low, as are the wages of many other employees of the Government; but as the gentleman knows we are trying to refrain from any wage-raising program until the condition of the Treasury is more satisfactory.

Mr. SNYDER. There should be reason in all things. A man called on me yesterday who is a janitor in the Franklin School, a man who worked for me four or five years ago, who has a family of five children, the oldest only 10 years of age, and he is getting the munificent sum of $80 a month. Now, I do not believe a janitor in the town that the gentleman lives in, no matter what the size of his family, could work and live on $80 a month.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a very low salary I admit. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. SNYDER. I wondered if the gentleman's committee had considered those things, and if the gentleman thinks that is a fair remuneration?

Mr. CRAMTON. It has had consideration, but it was not possible for this committee to do anything about it. If this committee had entered upon a salary-raising program as to janitors we would have had demands as to others, and if we had raised the salaries of District officials, then every department of the Government would have been upon us, and the gentleman knows we are not yet ready for that program.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not think it is a fair proposition for the committee to pay salaries on a basis so small that people can not live decently upon the salaries they receive.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows that there is a salary bill pending before the legislative committee which deals with the salaries of teachers. I am not informed whether that includes janitors also, but I assume that it does.

Mr. SNYDER. I was talking with the superintendent of schools about this matter, and he admits that there is no possible way by which he can advance the man from one place to another.

I wish the gentleman and his committee would consider this matter, as one of simple justice to these hard-worked employees.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question before he leaves the subject of the schools?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What becomes of the Western High School?

Mr. CRAMTON. This bill provides an appropriation for an addition to the Western High School. We provide everything that the board of education asked that gave an increased number of classrooms.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not see any appropriation for the principal. In appropriating for the principals of the high schools I did not see the Western High School mentioned.

Mr. CRAMTON. However that may be, if we did not give it then it did not come to us from the board of education. I am speaking of the building program. This addition to the building will not be ready for classroom use for 1924.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am talking about the continuation of the school, not the building program.

Mr. CRAMTON. Nothing of that kind was stricken out of current law that the Board of Education asked for. I have not that item before me. I do not know how they took care of it. We gave everything that the Board of Education asked for as to that item.

The water department carries $1,500,000 for continued work on the increased water supply. That is the program initiated a year ago, with which the House is familiar, and the estimate is given in full. For the distribution system of the water department the appropriation for the current year was $420,000, and the estimate of $450,000 for the coming year is allowed in this bill. For extension of the water distribution system there is an increase allowed from $100,000 to $150,000. A new reservoir site at Georgetown is provided for and the construction of 6,200 feet of 30-inch mains at $96,000 is granted.

I trust that this liberal treatment of District needs upon a well-balanced program that gives due consideration to every department will be duly appreciated. To the person in touch with schools that seems the place where we should spend millions; to another we should plunge on street improvement or lighting or parks or libraries. This bill is well balanced. Consideration has been given the needs of every branch of the service and more betterment will result to the District Government as a whole than if extremists were given their way as to any items. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has dealt so thoroughly with the bill that I feel that I shall be required to be very limited in what I shall have to say about it. There is one feature of the bill to which the gentleman from Michigan has just alluded which I wish to impress upon you, and that is that every request made by the school board which will give a seat to a child in the schoolhouses has been granted by this bill. I wish further to impress upon you the fact that previous Congresses have appropriated more money for school buildings than has been used.

When it comes to a question of furnishing money for the erection of a classroom or a theater room or an assembly hall, as they call it, I think preference had better be given to the classroom rather than to the palatial theaters which are being built in connection with the public schools of the District of Columbia. If some gentleman from any of the States wishes the erection of a public building for the transaction of Government affairs, the Washington papers immediately call that "pork"; but if a million or two million dollars is wanted in the District of Columbia for the erection of theater buildings called schoolhouses, then that is patriotism or good common sense. But to ask for the building out in the States anywhere, a building in which the Government may transact its business, that is immediately pounced upon here in the District by the local papers, by civic organizations, and even by individuals as being "pork" and ought therefore to be defeated.

The gentleman from Michigan has so completely explained the bill that I feel, at least for the present moment, I shall confine my further remarks to a provision which was in last year's bill, now in the current law, and one which is renewed in the present bill. That is relative to the payment of jurors' fees in the local courts.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Before the gentleman leaves the question of schools, a resident of the District of Columbia told me the other day that some schools were running only a part of the time by reason of a lack of capacity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I understand that is true. I will say further that it is true if it is possible for the school officials to do so. The school officials, in my honest judgment, would like to do that very thing for the purpose of emphasizing not that they so much need but that they desire more schools. But the gentleman will bear in mind that the gentleman from Michigan stated that allowance has been made for schoolrooms sufficient to seat every child in the District.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. How many children are there outside of the District now being schooled in the District buildings?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That question was asked of the superintendent of schools, and he said he would supply it. If he has done so up to this time, I do not know of it.

Mr. FOCHT. Let me say to the gentleman that there are nearly 3,000.

Mr. SNELL. If there are 3,000 pupils outside of the District, why are we under obligation to furnish seats for them? Why should they be allowed to go to school in the District when the children of the District have not seats?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That has been a much mooted question, but one the Committee on Appropriations can not deal with.

Mr. FOCHT. That is a question that embarrasses every municipality in the country—the question whether you are going to educate the children who come in and pay tuition. It is true that they get the benefit of the overhead. It is so in my town, and it is a question everywhere. If some one can answer it, I think these communities would be very happy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I was saying when interrupted, I wish to say something about the pay of jurors in the District of Columbia.

The language of the limitation in this bill has been changed somewhat because of a most remarkable ruling made by the Comptroller General.

The Comptroller General has held that the language, "None of the money appropriated by this act," which appears in the current law, would have been broad enough to include money appropriated for jurors' fees in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia except for the fact that the location of the limitation immediately followed the $10,000 appropriated for jurors' fees in the police court. He therefore held on submission of the question to him that because of the location of the limitation it did not apply to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

If the limitation had not used the words "this act," then the decision of the comptroller might have been a correct interpretation of the limitation. But the use of the words "this act" instead of "this appropriation" or "this item" or "this paragraph" was deemed by the committee and Congress to be applicable to all appropriations in the act for the payment of jurors' fees.

In one part of the act an appropriation of $10,000 was made for the payment of jurors' fees in the police court, and in another part of the act an appropriation of $60,000 was made for the payment of like fees in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

If special findings had been asked of the comptroller, he could not possibly have found that any money was appropriated for the payment of jurors' fees in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia except that appropriated by the act submitted to him.

However, he has found the anomalous situation of money having been appropriated by the District of Columbia appropriation act for the payment of jurors' fees in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and at the same time also has found that the limitation, "None of the money appropriated by this act shall be available for the payment of jurors' fees unless * * *," does not apply to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

In effect he has not only held that the word "act" does not mean "act" but he also has unequivocally held that the language "none of the money" means some of the money.

Since a total of $70,000 was appropriated (subject to the limitation) for the payment of jurors' fees in both the police court and the Supreme Court—$10,000 for the former and $60,000 for the latter—he has held that "none of the money" means most of the money.

And as he suffers even the money appropriated (subject to the limitation) for the police court to be used without the limitation being complied with, he construes "none of the money" to mean all of the money.

The committee has changed the language of the limitation in this act with the hope that even the comptroller may be able to hold that the words "none of the money" do not mean either "some" of the money or "all" of the money.

It has been suggested that the limitation as to the jury fee to be taxed as costs is uncertain or not fixed in amount, and therefore that it is impossible to be carried into effect.

It is quite easy of execution where there is willingness on the part of the court.

A jury is composed of 12 persons. The daily compensation of each is fixed by law. If that amount be multiplied by 12, the total cost of the jury for one day is the result. Can it be that any of our local judges is unable to so multiply?

Then the question was asked the committee, "Suppose the trial should continue longer than one day?" The answer is: Add the cost of each succeeding day and the answer is obtained. Is it to be contended that there are any of our local judges who can not make so simple an addition?

Then, again, the committee was asked: "Suppose the same jury tries three cases on the same day?" In that event the judge would merely have to divide by three the cost of the jury for one day.

"But," said one of the witnesses before the committee, "suppose the panel consisted of 36 men and the jury of 12 were drawn from the 36; would the one upon whom the cost fell have to pay the 36?" Certainly not, because the limitation provides only for the cost of the "trial jury," not of the panel, to be taxed as costs.

The language of the limitation is now plain that the court shall ascertain the cost of the trial jury and render judgment for that amount against the unsuccessful litigant.

If we have a local judge who can neither multiply by 12 nor add one day's costs to another nor divide a day's costs by three, please stand up and say so.

Then somebody said something before the committee about the limitation being unconstitutional; that it might deprive somebody of the right of trial by jury. Whoever offered the suggestion must have been unmindful of the fact that the defendant who demands a jury can not be asked to pay the costs until after both his trial and conviction. If he should be acquitted, he has had a trial by jury. If he should be convicted, again, he has had a trial by jury. There is no more reason why he should go free of the cost of the jury trial which he has demanded than there is that he should not pay such fine as may be assessed against him. No one under the terms of this limitation can be imprisoned for the nonpayment of costs. Costs are to be collected only where the convicted one has property subject to execution.

What reason can there be why the bootlegger or the traffic violator, for instance, or any other rich or even solvent offender should not pay the costs of the trial for his offense against the law? Why should the expense be saddled on the innocent taxpayers of the community?

Jury trials have multiplied over and over again, because bootleggers are demanding juries not for the purpose of getting justice but in order to defeat it by succeeding in getting some similar offender on the jury, thereby corruptly defeating justice.

The suggestion was also offered the committee that to compel a defendant to pay the cost of a jury which he has demanded rather than be tried by the judge seemed like "buying" a jury for his trial.

The one who made the suggestion has lost sight of the fact that this limitation has to do only with compensating the jury for the day's service, and in no wise undertakes to change the law which gives the right of trial by jury. Neither does this limitation in the least respect change the law which compels the court to provide a jury when one is demanded by the defendant, nor does it excuse anyone from jury service who heretofore was subject to such service. It must be borne in mind all the while that a defendant, with this limitation made a part of the law, has the same right to be tried by jury that he always has had.

When this limitation becomes operative and a defendant is brought into court he may demand a jury trial; the court can not deny it; the jury is there ready to try him, and he is tried by the jury. Those statements being true, has he been deprived of the constitutional right of trial by jury? Certainly not. If the jury return a verdict of "not guilty," then the defendant walks out free, even of all costs. By this limitation he must pay the actual cost of the jury only in event he be convicted. In either event, guilty or innocent, the jury trial is behind him. There is positively nothing in this proviso which creates any condition precedent to a trial by jury. That right, as has been said already, is left wholly unimpaired by this proviso. The only new or altered condition is that a convicted defendant must pay the jury for which he has asked. And he must do that only if he be solvent. Against the collection of such costs he would be entitled to all legal exemptions. Again I ask, Why should not a convicted man with plenty of property be compelled to pay costs instead of saddling the expense upon the innocent and unoffending members of society?

The Comptroller General, in a recent opinion given the United States marshal of the District of Columbia, stated that a similar limitation which is now in the current law applied only to the police court, because, with other reasons, a Member while discussing the original proviso said the limitation might apply only to the police court. I trust that official will not hold that this limitation applies only to a particular court or cause because I am discussing some of its features and not all of them. I am now dealing only with the objections to the limitation, frail though they be, and not with those provisions which are unchallenged.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is the uniform custom in my State when a defendant is sentenced to add, as an addition to his fine or other penalty, a requirement that he pay the costs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Many jurisdictions throughout the country are doing exactly what is contemplated to be done by the limitation on this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], who has charge of the bill, stated that provision had been made to allow certain of the employees of the District of Columbia, to wit, those in the pumping plant, one day out of seven in lieu of Sunday. I am wondering, and would like the attention of the gentleman from Michigan, if I may have it, why, if it is right to do this for the employees in the pumping plant—and it is right—if it is right to do this for the other clerical employees of the District, why the gentleman should leave out the firemen and the policemen in the District? They get no day in lieu of Sunday.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, there were two reasons for that. First, the only question brought to the attention of the committee was as to the particular force that I have mentioned. Then, so far as the firemen and the policemen are concerned, their case was not brought to the attention of the committee; and, not to be evasive, if it had been brought to the attention of the committee I fear—and this is only an assumption—that we would not have granted it, because in respect to the one which we did grant there is a lump-sum appropriation, where there is no parliamentary difficulty, and in respect to the policemen and firemen it is a matter that would be beyond our jurisdiction; it would be a legislative proposition which would have to come from another committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, it is a case of hiding. If the committee can seek to hide the one provision in a lump-sum appropriation, that provision in a lump-sum appropriation is just as much subject to a point of order as if it were out in the open in the bill, and the distinguished gentleman knows that, but I will tell you one thing that is the matter, I presume. Congress saw fit to take away from the policemen and the firemen by legislative enactment the right to strike when they felt that they were not accorded fair treatment. They have no such right in this District now. They have to take what the Congress gives them, and I would be the last man on earth to disarm a man and then take advantage of him. The policemen of this District and the firemen here are entitled to one day a week off in lieu of Sunday, just as all other employees of the Government now enjoy.

I would like also to have the chairman of the committee explain, if he can, why it is that he will not equip the policemen and firemen with their uniforms, and with all of the equipment that is made necessary for them to possess in order to hold their jobs? We now equip the new police force at the White House, involving quite a number of officers, with uniforms, and we give them everything else in the way of necessary equipment. We ought to give it to the policemen and firemen of the District.

The chairman says that we have made provision in the bill to equip the police with new pistols, to bring the firearms up to date. Why have we not done that before? There is hardly a day but when a loyal, patriotic policeman leaves his home that he does not know whether he is going to see his wife and children again. He has been armed with a little .32 caliber pistol, and he has to meet the thugs and the bootleggers of the country that center in the Nation's Capital, who are armed with the very latest .45's that can shoot twice as far and twice as accurately as the little .32's. That is the treatment that we have been according them. Then there is another thing. We have not yet accorded to the police the right to receive their pay during the time they serve as witnesses. They are forced to go down here to these courts day by day as witnesses against lawbreakers and put in much time without pay, in addition to the regular time they put in on their beats. They go down and put in hour after hour as witnesses in these police courts for which they never get one single penny. That time is taken from them. That is just as arduous a duty as the duty on their beats, and I think this committee ought to grant them relief along that line and provide that when forced to attend these courts as witnesses that that time should be paid for just the same as the regular time on their beats.

But I have not time to discuss further that question. I want to call attention to some other matters. I want to see Washington one of the most beautiful cities not only of the United States but of the world. Everything that is connected with the public business of the country that affects this city, the Government of the United States ought to pay for, and I will vote with my colleagues to vote out of the Treasury every single dollar that is necessary along that line, but I think that the time ought to come when we should quit voting the public money out of the people's Treasury to spend it in beautifying and furnishing conveniences of a local nature to help build up these fine residential sections for the tax dodgers of the Nation who have come here to live and who have no connection whatever with the Government business of the United States. Why should the people of the United States, the taxpaying people at home, pay 40 per cent of the expenses of conducting the public schools in Washington? We who send our children to school here, we who receive the benefit of the public-school system, ought to pay for it, and not call upon the people back home to pay 40 per cent of it. I would like to see the teachers of this District have their salaries doubled if it came from the proper source of payment. I think all teachers in the District are entitled to have their salaries doubled, so far as that is concerned; those who stay in the schoolroom day by day and teach. They are entitled to have their salaries doubled, but it ought to come from the pepole who receive the benefit of it. We ought not to continue paying 40 per cent out of the Public Treasury. I would like to see every street and every alley in the city of Washington and the District of Columbia, and all of the avenues that approach the District of Coumbia by State roads, paved with the very finest pavement in the world, but it ought to come from the proper source of payment, and the people of America, the taxpayers at home, ought not to be called upon annually to pay 40 per cent of the paving of these residential additions, out 5 or 6 or 7 miles from this Capitol, that have been built up by ambitious millionaire real estate owners and real estate promoters.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. Under the present law when a street in Washington that is 40 feet wide is paved, the abutting property owners are called upon to pay half the expense under the Borland Act, and the other half is paid by the District of Columbia and the Government out of funds jointly—60-40, 60 per cent by the District and 40 per cent by the Nation's taxpayers at home.

If that street is 60 feet wide the abutting property owners pay the expense of only one half of 40 feet; and the other half of that 40 feet and all of the 20 feet extra is paid 60 per cent by the District and 40 per cent by the Nation's taxpayers at home. I do not know how your taxpayers at home feel about that matter, but the 314,000 people in my district do not like it. They are not satisfied with it. They have to pay for their own paving down there. They are willing to pave the main streets here of this Nation's Capital that have to do with the Nation's business, but they are not willing to continue to make millionaires and multimillionaires out of suburban property owners who put in these additions way out here—miles from the Nation's Capital.

Mr. KETCHAM. Does not the abutting property owner pay anything, if the gentleman will permit?

Mr. BLANTON. I have already said that they pay one half where the street is not over 40 feet wide, as I fully explained a minute ago. The other half is paid 60 per cent by the District of Columbia and 40 per cent by the whole people, and where the street is 60 feet wide the abutting property owners pay only one-half of 40 feet.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Is it the gentleman's idea that the taxation here should all be put on the District of Columbia, or is he merely dissatisfied with the proportion made?

Mr. BLANTON. I think that so far as schools and paving in residential sections are concerned, the people of the District should pay it all. The people back in Indiana ought not to be called upon to pay one single dollar here to educate the children of Washington, I do not care if some of them are the children of Congressmen, Senators, or Cabinet officers. They ought to be paid for here, and we ought not to call upon the people back home. Year before last when we had nine new school buildings to erect, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, nothwithstanding that we maintain a District architect with an office of employees under him, when the plans and specifications for those nine new buildings were to be prepared, instead of having our District architect prepare them, they employed nine outside private architects, one for each one of the new buildings, and paid each one of them a 3 per cent commission, and we took that money out of the Treasury of the United States, 60 per cent from the District and 40 per cent from the whole taxpayers of this Nation.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. There are a few things which I would be glad to state if I could have just a few minutes to discuss them, but this bill is being rushed through here. There are lots of questions Members of the House would have liked to have asked the distinguished gentleman from Michigan if he had permitted them, but he did not have the time. We are in a rush to get these hundreds of millions of dollars passed in a few days here in the Congress. We can not have any time to consider and discuss them and reach an intelligent conclusion on the facts from the standpoint of the taxpayers of this Nation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There will be any amount of time for debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows what the five-minute rule means.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky give me five minutes additional?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am very sorry, but I have not got it.

Mr. BLANTON. Could the gentleman from Michigan give me three minutes more?

Mr. CRAMTON. My time has been all taken, I am sorry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time remains as follows: The gentleman from Kentucky has 37 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Michigan has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLANTON. I will get a little more time, I presume, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Michigan use some of his time now?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a week or so ago when the constitutional amendment in reference to tax-exempt securities was being considered by the House and discussion not being completed on account of the necessity of taking up appropriation bills, some of the Members of the House were somewhat disturbed on account of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the necessity of which did not at all appeal to me, and for that reason I addressed the Secretary of the Treasury a letter as to the effect of this amendment. I now send the answer to my letter to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be read in my time, and printed in the regular 8-point type.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that a certain letter be read from the desk in his time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, December 21, 1922.

DEAR Mr. GREEN: I received your letter of December 20, 1922, with respect to House Joint Resolution 314, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to restrict further issues of tax-exempt securities, and note your statement that an amendment has been proposed by Mr. GARNER, of Texas, which would strike out in section 1, after the word "income," the following words: "derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States or any other State," and in section 2, after the word "income," the words "derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of such State." For the words thus stricken out the Garner amendment would, I understand, substitute the words "from any source" in both sections. I note further that in support of his proposed amendment Mr. GARNER has stated that under the resolution as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means the United States might discriminate against the bonds of a State and in favor of the bonds of a railroad or industrial corporation, and that his amendment is proposed in order to prevent such a result. I am glad to be able to write you, first, that in the judgment of the Treasury the resolution in the form reported by the committee would of itself prevent discrimination of this character, so that the amendment proposed by Mr. GARNER is unnecessary, and, second, that to adopt the amendment proposed by Mr. GARNER would probably nullify both sections and make the whole constitutional amendment ineffective.

Whatever opposition there is to the proposed amendment to restrict further issues of tax-exempt securities rests, I think, upon a misunderstanding of the object and effect of the amendment, and this, in turn, harks back to the old controversies about State rights and the powers of the Federal Government. I can say without hesitation that, separated from these old prejudices and taken from the point of view of the facts as we have to face them to-day, the proposed constitutional amendment involves no question whatever of State rights and makes no attack whatever on the credit or borrowing power of the States or their political subdivisions. The amendment would apply with absolute equality to the Federal Government, on the one hand, and the States and their political subdivisions on the other, and in the interests of the general welfare would put exactly the same restrictions upon future borrowings by the Federal Government as upon future borrowings by the States and their political subdivisions. The constantly growing mass of tax-exempt securities threatens the public revenues, not only of the Federal Government, but of the States as well, and it is reaching such proportions as to undermine the development of business and industry.

The Federal Government, for the most part, has refused to have recourse to tax-exempt issues in financing its own operations, but the volume of tax-exempt securities of the States and their political subdivisions, and of other agencies, already outstanding and currently issued, is so large that the value of the exemption to the borrower issuing the securities has become relatively insignificant. Even now the States and their political subdivisions, notwithstanding the full tax exemptions on their securities, are obliged to pay substantially the same rates on their tax-exempt borrowings as the Federal Government pays on securities without exemption from Federal income surtaxes.

The facts are that under our system of graduated Federal income surtaxes the issue of tax-exempt securities, while of constantly diminishing advantage to the borrowing State or city, provides a perfect refuge for wealthy investors, being most valuable to the wealthiest taxpayer. The actuarial figures show that to taxpayers paying surtaxes in the highest brackets securities subject to Federal income surtaxes would have to yield about 10.4 per cent in order to be as attractive as a 5 per cent tax-exempt security. For this great advantage the State which issues the securities gets but very little compensating return, and certainly no greater return from the wealthiest investor than from the smallest investor—to whom the exemption is relatively worthless—while the United States, which imposes the surtaxes, loses its revenue without any compensating advantage whatever. It is the graduated surtax, of course, that gives the greatest value to the tax exemption, and viewed from this aspect the tax exemption in substance constitutes a subsidy from the Federal Government, the cost of which in the long run must fall on those taxpayers who do not or can not take refuge in tax-exempt securities. Even from the point of view of the States themselves, I believe it is clear that the continued issuance of tax-exempt securities saves nothing to the taxpayers in the States and that in the long run it brings heavier taxes. The tax-exempt privilege, with the facility that it gives to borrowing, leads in many cases to unnecessary or wasteful public expenditure, and this in turn is bringing about a menacing increase in the debts of States and cities.

These debts constitute a constantly growing charge upon the taxpayers in the several States, and will ultimately have to be paid, principal and interest, through tax levies upon these very taxpayers. It is easy to overlook this when the debts are incurred, but it is none the less impossible to escape the facts when the time comes for payment. It is also necessary to bear in mind that in the long run all of these public debts, whether the debts of States and their political subdivisions or of the Federal Government itself, as well as the taxes which must be imposed to meet them, fall upon but one body of taxpayers, and that the apparent advantage of borrowing by States and cities at the expense of the Federal revenues is illusory, since any temporary advantages thus obtained will have to be paid for by the Federal Government at the expense ultimately of the great body of taxpayers. This is particularly true of tax-exempt securities, for their effect is to provide a refuge from taxation for certain classes of taxpayers, with correspondingly higher taxes on all the rest in order to make up the resulting deficiency in the revenues.

Once it is understood, I think no one can raise any valid objection to the proposed constitutional amendment restricting further issues of tax-exempt securities. As a matter of fact, it is almost grotesque to permit the present anomalous situation to continue, for as things now stand we have on the one hand a system of highly graduated Federal income surtaxes and on the other a constantly growing volume of securities issued by States and cities which are fully exempt from these surtaxes, so that taxpayers have only to buy tax-exempt securities to make the surtaxes ineffective. The only way to correct this condition is by constitutional amendment, accompanied, if possible, by a reduction in the rates.

To take up the Garner amendment more specifically, I believe that the changes it would make are very clearly unnecessary. The resolution reported by the Committee on Ways and Means expressly provides in section 1 that Federal taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of the article, by or under the authority of any State, must be without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of the article by or under the authority of the United States or any other State. The same protection for the Federal Government is accorded by the second section, conferring power on the States to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of the article by or under the authority of the United States. Under section 1 as it stands it would be impossible for the Federal Government to impose an income tax on income from future issues of State or municipal bonds without imposing the same tax on income derived from future issues of its own bonds, and as a practical matter it is almost inconceivable that Congress would be willing to impose such a tax upon the income from both State and Federal securities and at the same time exempt from the tax income derived from securities issued by private corporations. Such a course would be repugnant to every constitutional principle. Entirely apart from the practical impossibility of such a situation, however, I think it clear that the amendment in its present form would prohibit discrimination against the bonds of a State and in favor of a railroad or industrial corporation.

All corporations in this country are organized under either State or Federal law and derive their powers, including the power to borrow money, from charters issued by the State or Federal Governments, as the case may be. Securities issued by private corporations, therefore, may be said to be issued "under the authority of" the United States in the case of a Federal corporation, or the State of incorporation, in the case of a State corporation. Section 1 of the constitutional amendment as reported by the committee expressly prohibits discrimination in favor of securities issued after ratification of the article under the authority of the United States or any other State. This in terms would prevent discrimination in favor of any bonds issued by a railroad or industrial corporation incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any other State, and likewise, it seems to me, by a corporation organized under the laws of the State concerned, for it would be constitutionally impossible for the Federal Government to single out corporations of one State in the granting of tax exemptions. If there were any danger here, however, it could readily be corrected by striking out in the last line of section 1 the word "other," and I suggest that this be done to remove any question in the matter.

The Garner amendment is not only unnecessary but it would defeat the entire constitutional amendment and make it practically impossible for either the States or the Federal Government to proceed effectively under it. The Garner amendment, by its terms, forbids discrimination by either the Federal Government or the States in favor of "income derived from any source." This apparently covers all sources of income, including, for example, income from securities already issued and outstanding, and income from salaries of State and Federal officers. Even after the adoption of the proposed constitutional amendment, neither the United States nor any State would have power to tax securities of the other already issued and outstanding, and under generally accepted constitutional principles, which have been affirmed by the Supreme Court, the Federal Government can not levy income taxes upon the salaries of State or municipal officers, nor can the States levy income taxes upon the salaries of Federal officers. To forbid discrimination in favor of these nontaxable sources of income would, in effect, make the constitutional amendment inoperative. There are also other generally recognized distinctions, as, for example, between earned and unearned income and miscellaneous special exemptions which it might be impossible to make under the form of wording proposed. These difficulties would embarrass the State governments, in proceeding under the constitutional amendment, quite as much as they would the Federal Government, and would make it impossible for the States to levy any income tax upon future issues of Federal securities without at the same time imposing an income tax on all outstanding issues of their own securities, and, in fact, a general income tax upon all sources of income subject to State taxation. Even if it could be constitutionally done, to levy income taxes upon securities already issued as tax exempt would constitute a gross breach of faith, while to require a general and uniform income tax, with exactly the same taxation of income from securities as of all other sources of income, would involve almost insuperable practical difficulties and probably prove impossible.

I believe, therefore, that the Garner amendment would accomplish nothing but to defeat what is probably the most necessary reform in our system of taxation, and I hope that, in the light of these comments as to the effect of the constitutional amendment as reported by the committee and the changes proposed, the Garner amendment will either be withdrawn or rejected. The constitutional amendment as reported puts the Federal Government and the States on absolutely the same basis, and the very fact that the Federal Government is ready and willing, for the sake of the general welfare, to place itself under these restrictions as to future issues of tax-exempt securities, notwithstanding its own heavy debt and the practical certainty that it will always have obligations outstanding and to be financed, gives the best possible assurance that the States and their political subdivisions can place themselves under like restrictions without endangering their credit or embarrassing their necessary borrowings.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. WILLIAM R. GREEN,
Acting Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, there is no pressure incident to the general condition of business in the House which makes it necessary to take this bill up for consideration to-day. On the other hand, there is good reason why it should not be taken up to-day but put over until next week. The bill, which contains over a hundred printed pages, was only reported to the House yesterday afternoon, and, along with the hearings contained in a volume of over 450 printed pages, was only within the reach of Members during the afternoon. Thus no time has been afforded anyone to study the bill in the light of the hearings, and no one can now know much about it except the members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which is in charge of it. Surely in the consideration of this and other appropriation bills either there should be an interval of two or three days between the report and printing of the bills and hearings before the bills are considered, or else it may as well be understood that the House is expected to automatically approve the conclusions of the subcommittees.

The policy of the House in dealing with District affairs seems to be to rush through the appropriation bills and to retard the disposition of specific measures that crowd the calendar of the District Committee by disregarding the rules which assigns to District business two days in each month. Two days in each of the months when Congress is in session would seem to be a very meager allowance, and nevertheless the common practice is to devote those particular days to other business.

No one except somebody gifted with the temperament of Mark Tapley, who always became more cheerful as conditions became worse, can regard this bill as satisfactory. Everybody, for example, realizes that it does not adequately meet the educational needs of the District. Those needs and other urgent requirements are set forth in the communication of the commissioners to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget under date of September 15, 1922, which I ask leave to print with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to be allowed to include as a part of his remarks a certain document. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I shall not attempt the futile effort of trying to have the bill amended here, but I hope that some attention may be given the views of the commissioners which will now appear in the RECORD, and some fair response made to their requests when the bill is considered at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield right there. Has the gentleman in mind from that letter, or could the gentleman state to the House, how much more was asked by the Board of Education than the Budget?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The communication will show what was asked for educational purposes.

Mr. FOCHT. Just so as to have it now, instead of hunting up the record.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What is the evolution of this bill? The time was when the Commissioners of the District were in direct relation to Congress and presented their estimates directly to Congress. They are appointed by the President to the office they hold because of their knowledge of conditions in the District and their ability to represent to Congress the expenditures that should be made, in order to keep the District on a normal basis, or, anyway, to prevent it from traveling toward a basis of abnormalcy, to use a word which under high authority now seems to be permissible. The civilian commissioners are taxpayers; they act for the entire body of taxpayers of the District, and it would appear that it might be assumed that they could be counted upon not to submit extravagant or fantastic estimates. They heretofore did precisely what the local officials of, I suppose, every large city in this country do in making up an annual city budget. But under the new law the contact between the commissioners and the Congress is broken. The commissioners now submit their estimates to the Bureau of the Budget, and recently, as will be seen by reference to the September communication of the commissioners, they were told by the bureau "that a maximum total of $24,532,515 had been allocated to the District, which amount the estimates could not exceed." It is further true that they were informed "that if such sum was not sufficient to meet the absolutely necessary requirements they could submit a supplemental statement showing the additional amounts required." But they were given to understand that they must make every possible exertion to adhere to the amount allocated. The allocation was apparently arbitrary, and it expressed the opinion not of the officials of the District or citizens of the District, but of the official of the Bureau of the Budget who had been placed in charge of the task of estimating the expenditures that should be made. In 1921 the official of the bureau who performed this task was former Senator Sherman, of Illinois, and this time, I am informed, the official is Capt. R. D. Stephens, a Chicago lawyer, who took service under General Lord when the latter was appointed to succeed General Dawes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman differentiate between estimates for the District and estimates for other departmental work?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that, as far as the District is concerned only a very small proportion is paid by the National Government, and therefore the estimates of the District should not be restricted to the extent by the Budget Director as the estimates for the Government generally.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is one fact; and, in addition, I may say to my friend that I think it is perfectly incongruous to place the Bureau of the Budget, made up of officials from outside of the District of Columbia, in charge of the business of making and submitting to Congress estimates for municipal needs. I think those estimates ought to be made up and submitted just as estimates are made in other cities for annual expenditures—just, as I take it, they are made, for example, in Milwaukee by the officials of Milwaukee to the legislative body of the city of Milwaukee. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] would not for a minute approve the preparation of estimates for the municipal expenses of Milwaukee by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] or by myself, a citizen of the State of Virginia.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not suppose that the city of Milwaukee has a portion of those expenditures paid out of the treasury of the State of Wisconsin or out of the Federal Treasury; and if the city of Washington did not have $8,000,000 from the Federal Treasury, then the Budget officer would not have the same interest that he has now.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I can not think that that should be a determining factor. Finally, in any event, the Government of the United States, speaking through the legislative branch, with the approval of the President, determines what the appropriations shall be.

Mr. CRAMTON. But the purpose of the Budget is to see that the total of all the expenditures that must come from the Federal Treasury shall be within the expected revenue; and if that total is not complete, then the function of the Budget is destroyed.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I can not believe the fact that something like $8,000,000 included in the total is payable out of the Treasury furnishes any practical ground for applying the Budget plan to the municipal activities of the District. The Government of the United States after all, comparatively speaking, is but slightly interested. Government expenditures for the next fiscal year are going to aggregate about $3,000,000,000, of which only a very small fraction can be a liability on the Federal Treasury for District purposes.

I spoke of Captain Stephens. I understand he is a very capable and high-minded man, and it is not my purpose to level any criticism at him or at Mr. Sherman, but I do point to the fact that the important matter of passing on District needs and District estimates is intrusted to officials who by no possibility can have that knowledge of the situation which is derived from long years of local experience and observation. It is as indefensible to place that matter under the control of a citizen of Illinois, new to this environment, as it would be for the Legislature of the State of Ohio to turn over to a citizen of Washington or a citizen of Michigan the duty of estimating for the necessary annual expenditures of, say, the city of Cincinnati, which has approximately the same population as Washington.

The commissioners in their communication to the Bureau of the Budget did the best they could to observe the arbitrary limit fixed by the bureau, but they added a series of supplemental estimates amounting to $6,361,520. In other words, they estimated for a total expenditure of $30,894,035, as against the bureau limitation of $24,532,515.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will yield if I have time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would simply like to ask the gentleman, since he has spoken of somebody outside of the District of Columbia making the estimates for the District of Columbia, what does he think of somebody being employed from the outside, as, for example, a superintendent of schools, to come in here and make the estimates of the school system?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Those estimates, however, if the old system were in effect, would be passed to the commissioners and revised by them and the final estimates for educational purposes would be submitted to Congress by the commissioners.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I hate to take the gentleman's time, but I have a very brief observation I would like to make.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I want to say to my friend that after I have taken the time to commend him personally, then if I have any time remaining I shall be very glad to yield to him.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am glad of the gentleman's commendation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The subcommittee in control of this bill held hearings for four days and the bill, as reported, cutting down the bureau estimates $338,471.80, carries a total of $24,137,738, which is less by over $300,000 than the appropriations for the fiscal year now current. And, as before stated, the House is now expected to drive ahead and pass a bill freshly printed, with little or no prospect of any real scrutiny or analysis of the various subjects and items that are involved.

In saying all of this I am not arraigning the Subcommittee on Appropriations, for whose members I have very great respect. That committee at the outset of the hearings before it, by its chairman, said to the officials of the District:

> The committee has full authority to take up any items it thinks desirable and the Congress has full authority to go to any extent. It is not limited by the figures in the Budget. The Appropriations Committee, however, has adopted the rule which governs this committee, as it does every subcommittee, that we will not, except in the most extraordinary cases, recommend to the House items not recommended by the Budget.

This was in effect stating that, without the most extraordinary showing, the conclusions of Captain Stephens, of Illinois, would be adopted by the subcommittee and reported to the House.

My quarrel is not with the subcommittee or the Committee on Appropriations, which I think is doing very valuable work, but with the Budget law, which unreasonably, and, as it seems to me, absurdly, classifies a great municipality having numberless activities with the ordinary departments of the Government. I am thoroughly convinced now, as I have been for some time, that a mistake was made in including the District of Columbia in the Budget law, and that the sensible thing would be to amend that law and go back to the former law under which the commissioners submitted their estimates directly to Congress.

If I could have my way, not acting upon any mere theory but for the purpose of bringing Congress into a common-sense relation to the District, I would amend the Budget law by excluding the District from its operation, and, in addition, create a joint committee of the two Houses on the District of Columbia, and vest that joint committee with complete jurisdiction to formulate and propose legislation relative to the District, including appropriation bills. In my judgment, such a recasting of the present system would not be in any sense hurtful to the Government but helpful to both the Government and the District, and it would tend to remove the increasing complaint that Congress, which is crowded with business, is unconsciously more or less indifferent to the interests of a great community over which it has full control. The volume of congressional business is evidenced by the fact that about 18,000 bills and joint resolutions have been introduced in the present Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Michigan grant me one minute more?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will give the gentleman one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. All of my material interests lie in Virginia. I am not a property owner or taxpayer here. But I know something about the rapid growth and the progressive needs of this locality. I am the friend of the District, as I assume every other Member is. I am not, however, blindly its friend. Last year, for example, I approved the increase of the tax on intangibles, and perhaps myself suggested the payment of taxes in installments, so as to save the Treasury from some alleged burden. Coupled with my friendship for the District is a strong desire that Congress, as the governing body, shall exercise its power, which is practically without restriction, in the most practical and effective manner that is possible so as to meet the just and reasonable expectations of the people who live here, and who pay an increasing proportion of the expense of maintaining their institutions.

I append the following communication from the commissioners to the Bureau of the Budget, to which I alluded a while ago:

SEPTEMBER 15, 1922.

To the DIRECTOR, BUREAU OF THE BUDGET:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia direct me to transmit, herewith, estimates of appropriations of the District for the fiscal year to end June 30, 1924.

In your letter of August 11, 1922, you informed the commissioners that a maximum total of $24,532,515 had been allocated to the District, which amount the estimates could not exceed. You further informed them that if such sum was not sufficient to meet absolutely necessary requirements they could submit a supplemental statement showing the additional amounts required.

In compliance with your instructions the commissioners have limited their estimates proper to $24,532,515, but they also transmit a series of supplemental estimates amounting to $6,361,520. Both sets of estimates aggregate $30,894,035, which amount the Commissioners earnestly urge be included in the complete budget to be submitted by your bureau to Congress.

The estimates totaling $24,532,515 are classified as follows:

Chargeable 60 per cent to the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent to the revenues of the United States	$22,094,652.00
Chargeable to the revenues of the water department	925,020.00
Permanent and indefinite appropriations chargeable wholly to the revenues of the District of Columbia	50,000.00
Trust and special funds	1,462,843.00

Of the total sum of $24,532,515, the District of Columbia would be chargeable with $13,556,791.20, the United States with $8,837,860.80, the revenues of the water department, no part of which is paid by the United States, with $925,020, and trust and special funds, no part of which is paid by the United States or the District of Columbia, with $1,208,843. Of the total budget the United States, under existing law, would be responsible for only 36 per cent.

With every desire loyally to cooperate with you and to conform to the desire of the President for the utmost economy, the commissioners feel that certain facts should be called to your attention and that you should also be informed that the estimates proper, together with the supplemental estimates, represent the minimum amount that should be spent during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, if the people of Washington, the Capital of the Nation, are to be adequately served, if reasonable conditions as to comfort and sanitation are to exist, and if the progress and growth of the city are not to be materially retarded.

In order to bring the estimates within the limit of $24,532,515, it has been necessary to reduce greatly the figures presented by the heads of the various branches of the District government, which, in accordance with instructions previously given to them, had been prepared to cover merely those items that were regarded as indispensable in the proper administration of this large and rapidly growing community. This total represents the minimum needed to preserve public order and to keep the community safe from the possible hazards of riots and of, perhaps, great conflagrations. They do not go beyond this, and they are not adequate for the health or for the comfort of the people, who under these estimates would continue to suffer from crowded schools, unpaved streets, inadequate water and sewer service, and insufficient standard of public lighting, and other remediable evils and inconveniences.

Specifically, your attention is invited to the fact that in spite of the record-breaking activity in building construction recently experienced in Washington and promising to continue for some time to come, the estimates include not a single dollar for the extension of principal lines of water mains or for additions to our system of sanitary sewers, and only $50,000 for the paving of streets and but slight provision for public-school betterments. Nothing is provided for the relief of residents and taxpayers from damage caused by storm water, though recent experience has shown in many localities hitherto regarded as moderately well served by storm sewers that conditions are such as to demand construction upon a general scale if the residents are to be relieved from the further serious damage to their property, and possibly to their persons.

It is perhaps needless to say that a great city like Washington is a living and growing thing, and that its activities can not be conducted upon the basis of a constant or diminishing scale of expenditures. As streets are opened, as houses are built, as the population increases and expands, there arises the need for increased expenditures. In the past the residents of the District have willingly submitted to restrictions upon appropriations caused by the war status. They feel now that the restrictions arbitrarily placed, four years after the conclusion of the war, in spite of the fact that more than 60 per cent of all expenditures are financed by the taxpayers themselves, are a hardship. This is the sentiment of the various commercial bodies of Washington and of the numerous citizens' associations, all of which are familiar with the physical needs of the city and join in protesting against the limitations now proposed to be placed upon the expenditures and against the discomfort, inconveniences, and dangers to which in consequence they and their families are likely to be subjected.

The commissioners wish to emphasize the statement already made orally that the District of Columbia is unlike the Federal departments and bureaus which, with scarcely an exception, are money-spending agencies supported exclusively by the Federal Treasury, whereas the District of Columbia produces through local taxation and from other sources of revenue more than 60 per cent of its annual expenditures. Furthermore, many of these expenditures are, at least in part, reimbursed, and to that extent should in strict fairness not be charged as part of the total. Thus, under the law, abutting owners are required to pay practically half the cost of permanent street pavements, as well as of the cost of laying sidewalks and paving alleys. Property owners also pay at a rate specified by law for service water mains and service sewers, the result being that about 47 per cent of all expenditures for the operation of the water-supply system are paid out of the revenues of the water department, and, obviously, sums needed for improving this service involve no increase in demand upon the Federal Treasury, while, on the other hand, curtailment of necessary expenditures produces no gain in Federal resources, since all receipts of the water department are carried in a separate fund and credited to that department, nor are the moneys received from trust and special funds, which for the first time the commissioners have been compelled to include within the total of the estimates they might submit, in any way a charge upon the revenues of the United States.

It has already been remarked that Washington is a living, growing entity. From purely selfish motives its growth should be encouraged, because increased land and property values will result, representing correspondingly increased earnings in the form of greater taxable values. Regarded, therefore, merely in this material light, a fairly liberal policy in the making of improvements is sound business.

But the question is not exclusively a business one, though it is true that the continual denial of the ordinary conveniences of modern life will tend to discourage prospective residents and home builders from adopting Washington as their home. The very essentials of what we regard as purely American progress and civilization are at stake in that the city of Washington, which should of all cities in the United States be a shining example in sanitation and in conditions generally, is not only not achieving this high standard, is not constantly becoming a better place to live in, but is actually going backward. As evidence of this, we cite the fact that during the past year so great has been the increase in the number of dwellings unprovided with sewer and water service that the number of privies, the cost of which is borne by the District treasury, has increased nearly 15 per cent. This is retrogression, not progress—a reproach to the city and to the Nation.

During the past fiscal year building activity in the District has been extraordinary. Construction is going on in all sections, but it is most active in the northwest section, where solid blocks of new houses are the frequent rule. An hour's ride in an automobile through the area lying east of the Soldiers' Home and north of Columbia Road will show street after street solidly built with attractive and substantial homes. Practically all of these streets are unpaved, and many of them are impassable in the winter. In no other city would they be permitted to remain long in their present condition, and the property owners and residents are justified in the numerous complaints made by them. Relief should be given; but, even though the funds for paving the streets as now submitted in our supplemental estimates are duly appropriated, their residents will undergo at least one more winter of mud and great discomfort before the money becomes available and the work can be done.

As a result of the recent shifting of the center of population, schools are no longer convenient of access for a considerable part of the people. As an instance, it may be mentioned that there is only one school in the section north of Rock Creek between Connecticut and Wisconsin Avenues, and there is no school whatever in the area between Sixteenth Street and Rock Creek Park, both sections where building has been and still is extremely active. In addition, the existing older school buildings have been neglected. Few of them are properly lighted or heated, and it is the exception rather than the rule to find them even satisfactorily clean and well painted.

As a brief epitome of recent experience, it may be said that during the past year lack of funds has prevented the execution of the following work: Water connections for new buildings, $55,973; sewer connections for new buildings, $210,955; lighting of newly settled neighborhoods, $21,000; and urgently needed repairs of schools, $360,638.

In addition, the growth of the city has far outstripped the extension of large water mains, needed to permit adequate service without excessive cost for pumping; and so-called storm sewers, needed to take care of the surface drainage for which natural water courses are no longer available, are seriously lacking, so much so that premises are now extensively flooded by comparatively small storms and, in addition, much damage is being done by the erosion caused by the torrential character now assumed by the run-off. During the past summer the rains have been excessive, and washouts and floods have occurred throughout the city. Liberal provision should be made at an early date for extending the main lines of drainage. Unless this is done, liability for damage may be incurred by the District, and, in any event, the residents of the areas of deficient drainage will experience serious losses.

If the total amounts in the original and supplemental estimates are approved and the appropriations are made by Congress, by the end of the calendar year 1924 it will have become possible to provide a seat in the schools for nearly every pupil. Part-time classes and staggered school schedules may then be practically ended, and the use of portable school buildings of unsatisfactory character abandoned. Permanent pavements can be furnished for the large number of streets fully built up on both sides with dwellings and other buildings, and the main arterial highways connecting the District with the excellent roads of the State of Maryland can be put into good condition so as no longer to reflect reproach upon the National Capital. Sewer and water service can be supplied to all new buildings, and it will no longer be necessary to resort to the humiliating expedient of denying these necessities to those who have a right to demand them.

Finally, legitimate extensions of these services may, in anticipation of future growth, be made, and betterments of both in the interest of more dependable, efficient, and economical operation.

Whatever may be the final result of our representations, the commissioners feel that they have a right to ask that no item in the estimates be changed except as a result of careful investigations into the subject matter to which it relates, and that, in any event, such items as relate to physical improvements and material conditions capable of verification by visual inspection be decided only after careful investigation in the field has been made. The commissioners stand ready, of course, to cooperate with you or any agency that you may designate in expediting such field investigations as they believe to be indispensable.

The commissioners, in conclusion, call attention to the fact that the estimates proper which they are allowed to submit for 1924 are over $1,400,000 less than current appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the whole of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury that I referred to be printed in the RECORD, and in view of the importance of the matter I also ask that it be printed in 8-point type.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the letter read in part into the RECORD be printed in full in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is recognized.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the statement made by the chairman of the subcommittee relative to District affairs, and I think it is a clear, businesslike statement from the standpoint of the American Congress. I think every man in this House is interested in the District of Columbia, and wants it to be one of the foremost cities in this country and its citizens to have every advantage and improvement consistent with good judgment. We are willing to do our part in helping to make it such, but I think so long as the present system of taxation and raising money to pay the expenses of this District is continued as at the present time there will always be unnecessary arguments and disagreements between the District and the Federal Government. I for one am absolutely sick of reading in the papers nearly every night of the Takoma Park Association or Petworth Club or some other suburban society legislating and fulminating against Congress. I do not think it helps any, and I do not think they get any more from Congress by continually depricating Congress and the attention it gives to District matters.

In early days, when it was first agreed that the Federal Government and the District of Columbia should each pay 50 per cent of the local taxes, our proportion of the real estate in this District was far larger than it is at the present time, and while perhaps at that time it might have been a fair proposition, neither 40 per cent nor 50 per cent now is a fair proposition; and every man who gives careful consideration to the increase of population and the increase in real-estate values in this District knows that that is not a fair proposition at the present time and the basis ought to be changed.

I have tried to find out definitely the proportion of real estate the Government owns in the District of Columbia, but there is nothing definite on it; but one thing is absolutely true, that if that proposition was fair to all parties concerned 50 years ago, it is absolutely unfair to the Federal Government now and ought to be changed.

My idea would be that the Federal Government should pay a reasonable amount toward the support of the government of the District of Columbia. Personally I should be willing to pay even as much as it is paying now, $8,000,000 a year, and then let the District pay the balance, whatever it is. Then I would go ahead and give the people of the District of Columbia every single improvement in reason, in any way, shape, or form, that they were willing to pay for, and stop this argument back and forth that Congress will not give needed improvements to the District and the things they say they want and are willing to pay for. A gentleman who lives in the District told me that his tax this year was $13 a thousand. That is a joke as far as taxation is concerned when you talk about present-day costs of municipal government. In my individual home town I pay more than that for school tax alone, besides the other city, town, and State taxes, and the majority of the Members of this House will find this is true in their local communities, while here they only pay one tax and get more for it than any city or town in the world. Still they find fault. Let them have what they want and make them pay for it and you will not have as much complaint and argument. Furthermore, they have the lowest valuation in the whole country.

I believe we should have legislation right away to change the method of raising the appropriations for the District of Columbia. I feel that the Federal Government should pay a reasonable amount, perhaps more than our share, and then the committee that has the appropriations for the District of Columbia in charge should grant every single request that the people of this District are entitled to. If they want a schoolhouse on every block, let us give it to them. Let them have pavements as good as they want, but in return let them pay for them. [Applause.] That is the only manner in which we will ever get away from this continual argument between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government, and is the only sensible and businesslike way to deal with the much-disputed question of District improvements. And I hope the District Committee will give this question some careful consideration in the near future.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman know of any resolution passed by the Takoma Park Citizens' Association asking for the kind of legislation he is referring to?

Mr. SNELL. No, I do not; and there never will be any, either. The only thing they advertise throughout the length and breadth of the country is that Congress does give very little attention to the District of Columbia, and they ridicule the local Government, when they live in the best governed city in the United States and get more for their money than other people. As far as I know, every Member of this House wants to give fair treatment to the District of Columbia, and afford them every advantage and convenience consistent with economy and good judgment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has 18 minutes remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, which was read from the Clerk's desk a few minutes ago, referring to the proposed constitutional amendment relative to tax-exempt securities, these two sentences appear:

> Whatever opposition there is to the proposed amendment to restrict further issues of tax-exempt securities rests, I think, upon a misunderstanding of the object and effect of the amendment, and this in turn harks back to the old controversies about State rights and the powers of the Federal Government.
> I can say without hesitation that, separated from these old prejudices and taken from the point of view of the facts as we face them to-day, the proposed constitutional amendment involves no question whatever of State rights and makes no attack whatever on the credit or borrowing power of the States or their political subdivisions.

To these two expressions, Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself in the brief time allotted me. I shall not attempt to discuss the economic phases mentioned by him at this time.

Everyone recognizes in the Secretary of the Treasury a man of great financial power and of great intellectuality. But, Mr. Chairman, his ipse dixit upon this legal question is not conclusive. When one has studied out the legal propositions involved he can not fail to say, though he will say it respectfully, that such an assertion as that of the Secretary of the Treasury is preposterous. No attack upon the credit of the States when you give to the Federal Government the power to tax that credit! No attack upon the credit of the National Government when you give to the States the power to tax that National Government's credit! But the Secretary of the Treasury follows up that statement with an argument that simply because you will have given to the State the power to tax the securities issued by the Federal Government therefore you will not have attacked State rights or State powers.

That can not be true. Marshall said that the power to tax is the power to destroy. So, indeed, it is. Of all who have argued this question, the Secretary of the Treasury, so far as I know, is the only one who has ever asserted that it did not affect the rights and powers of the States, and in turn did not carry the power to affect the rights, the credit, and the strength of the Federal Government itself. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to charge the Secretary of the Treasury with demagoging. He is not that type of man. Yet it is singular that he should use the words "old prejudices" in connection with the discussion of this matter.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman had occasion to read the entire letter he would see where the Secretary of the Treasury admits that it lodges the power in Congress to which the gentleman refers, but the Secretary of the Treasury can not conceive it is possible that Congress will exercise that power.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was discussing that particular statement which I read, not that which he subsequently made. I have not yet read all of the letter.

Mr. GARNER. In substance, the Secretary does admit that Congress would be given this power, but he can not conceive it possible that Congress would constitutionally exercise it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then that statement is inconsistent with the language I have read. There can, of course, be no question about that. Perhaps the Secretary may have discussed that in pages of the letter that I have not yet had time to read. The entire letter was not read from the desk. As I endeavored to point out in the discussion of this matter on December 19 last, this is a thing of high importance, that it is not a reciprocal proposition between the States and the Federal Government as to all the securities. The great bulk of the tax-exempt securities are not issued by the States as State securities, but they are issued by the subdivisions—by your counties, by your school districts, by your municipalities, by your drainage and irrigation districts. The great bulk of the billions invested in tax-exempt securities are invested in those issued by such subdivisions, not by the governments of the States; and as to those subdivision securities it can not be reciprocal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Owing to the fact that the House has limited the time for debate and placed the control of this time in the hands of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], the Chair regrets that he does not feel competent to entertain the request of the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the Secretary of the Treasury is right in his reference to "ancient prejudices," can it not be properly said that those prejudices date back to the Constitutional Convention of 1787?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Undoubtedly. Ah, Mr. Chairman, those of us who recall history remember that perhaps the principal reason for bringing about the Constitutional Convention and forming this great Republic was because of the discriminations imposed upon commerce by one State as against another and other rivalry legislation whereby one State would seek undue advantage over another.

Now, this so-called Green constitutional amendment, I undertake to say as to the power of the legislature in the States, would undo all that was accomplished in regard to many of these discriminations by that great instrument as it came from the hands of the fathers, and open up an era of discrimination and sectional legislation such as this country in all its history, even during colonial days, never witnessed.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Tennessee was in favor of the sixteenth amendment, the income-tax amendment. Did it not occur to the gentleman at the time the amendment was pending in the House and in the country that it conferred very great and far-reaching authority on the Federal Government without any reciprocity whatever from the standpoint of the citizen or the State to tax incomes everywhere contrary to the original intent? If the gentleman fears the encroachment of the Federal taxing power, how did it happen that he was in favor of extending the Federal authority in the income-tax amendment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The sixteenth amendment did not confer on the Federal Government the right to tax incomes on State securities. Let the gentleman from Wyoming understand me, and let all understand me. I stated in the brief remarks I made when this proposed amendment was under discussion on December 19 last that I was not opposing it simply from the standpoint of a man who believes in State rights. Of course I believe in State rights, not out of sentiment, not out of prejudice, but as a sound principle of Government in a country such as ours. [Applause.] But I do not believe in State rights to the exclusion of the national rights, the national powers. There are things the Federal Government must do; there are things that can not be done by the State. I am not one of those who would cripple in any respect the power of this great Republic. I am as much opposed to a proposition which would place the power over the credit of this Federal Government in the hands of the States as I am to the placing in the hands of the National Government the power over the credit of the States themselves. [Applause.]

Oh, we do not know what the future has in store. We do not know what division of sentiment may be in this Republic in years to come. If again there be stress of war, and this Republic or the Congress that will succeed us in years to come should find it necessary to pass a resolution similar to that we passed at the beginning of the great World War, pledging all the men, pledging all the resources of the Republic, pledging all the credit and all the power, to the President that he might fight a foreign enemy, I do not wish it to be within the power of any State to tax the credit of this great Federal Government and prevent it from doing that which it seeks to do. [Applause.]

No matter from what powerful source it may come, I do not want to go unchallenged the statement that this does not affect one of the great sovereign powers of the States and of the Nation, the supreme power of credit. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, in view of the fact that some misunderstanding seems to have arisen with reference to the purpose of the resolution of inquiry passed this morning, I thought it advisable to make a few brief remarks as to the purpose of it. It calls on the President simply as a matter of form for a report as to the present activities of the Sugar Equalization Board. Under the act passed and approved December 31, 1919, the activities of the United States Sugar Equalization Board were extended for the period of one year. By the terms of the law the board automatically went out of existence on December 31, 1920. Here is a copy of the act, and it makes that provision in the very first sentence of the act of extension. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that under the terms of the law the Sugar Equalization Board is without any legal existence, my information is that it still has several million dollars in its hands which it has not covered into the Treasury and which it is now holding. Now, I ask for a statement of that account and a statement of any salaries or expenses incurred and for incidental information in connection therewith.

That is not simply for the purpose of satisfying idle curiosity. There are some sugar claims pending before the Agricultural Committee, and two of them have been reported out and are now pending before the House. During the period of inquiry into the facts in connection with these claims one of the witnesses was asked as to the status of the Sugar Equalization Board and as to the funds they had on hand and as to the expenses and salaries which were being paid and incurred.

The witness failed to furnish the information but stated it would be furnished later. Also we had at a later time one of the members of the Sugar Equalization Board before us, and he was asked for the same information. He gave general information relative to it but did not have the specific data just at hand. And so from time to time the committee sought to ascertain information, and finally on April 12 the committee passed a resolution as follows:

> That the chairman of the committee request the head of the United States Sugar Equalization Board to report the names and salaries of all persons paid by the board and other expenses incurred by it during the past two years, and also the balance in the Treasury to the credit of the board.

The chairman sent a copy of the resolution and received a reply on April 19 as follows:

> DEAR SIR: This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 17th addressed to me requesting certain information in regard to the United States Sugar Equalization Board in accordance with the resolution adopted at the hearing before your committee on the Lamborn sugar claims. I am having this data prepared and will forward same to you within the next few days.
> Yours very truly,
> THOMAS HEADS,
> Comptroller United States Sugar Equalization Board.

Yet to this day the information has never been furnished. It seems to me that the Congress and the committee are entitled to that information, and that the Sugar Equalization Board, nor any other organization, should not be permitted to flaunt in the face of the committee the contempt or the disregard which their action seems to evidence. It may be merely a matter of neglect, but if it is, this resolution most assuredly will be a reminder of that fact.

The United States Wheat Corporation had some $30,000,000 in its hands, which it made in profits in handling wheat, and it long ago covered that money into the Treasury, notwithstanding the fact that there were many claims pending before the Agricultural Committee and the Committee on Claims running into millions of dollars arising out of the activities of that corporation. Nevertheless when it ceased its activities it turned the money into the Treasury.

The only reason that seems apparent why the Sugar Equalization Board should not want to turn the money into the Treasury is the fact that they may want to give opportunity for the pending $4,000,000 of sugar claims to be paid without seeming to have them paid out of the United States Treasury. If that is not the only reason, they can state the reason in answer to the resolution of inquiry. If that is the only reason, most assuredly they should not be permitted to hold in their hands several million dollars which they have on hand, I think some $10 000,000 at the time their activities terminated, but at least several million dollars now, and they should not be permitted to camouflage the payment of claims running into four or four and a half million dollars by simply directing that the Sugar Equalization Board take over the contracts for those claims, and avoid what seems to be an appropriation. They should cover the money into the Treasury. Then, if the claims are allowed by the Congress, they can be appropriated for in the regular way.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If that is their purpose, then it is their purpose in view of the fact that one of those claims was reported, not unanimously, by the Committee on Agriculture, went on the calendar of the House as a private claim, and that the Committee on Rules finally reported a rule providing for its consideration, and after all debate was exhausted, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was ready to rise and report to the House, the advocates of the measure quit because they knew they would be beaten in the House.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; they got cold feet when they saw that they were beaten, and it was whispered around that they better wait until after election and that they would then have a better chance to pass them during the "lame-duck" season. But I do not believe they can do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, 40 per cent of each of the following sums, except those herein directed to be paid otherwise, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and all the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia and such advances from the Federal Treasury as are authorized in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923, namely.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in line 6, page 1, I ask unanimous consent to have the comma taken out after the word "appropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph provides that 40 per cent of all of the expenses of the District government, as provided for in this bill, shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States by the taxpayers of the United States. If the people of the District of Columbia were paying a proper tax, there might be nothing wrong with that, possibly, but when as a matter of fact the present tax rate of the District is only $1.30 on $100 on real property and tangible personal property, and five-tenths of 1 per cent on intangible personal property, and that is all the tax they pay, the provision with regard to many items of expense is not just to the taxpayers of the Nation. If the people back home in every district in the United States only knew that the people here in the District of Columbia were paying only $1.30 tax on a hundred, with every modern city convenience furnished, and that $1.30 on $100 constituted all of their taxes, we would hear from the people.

The good, trusting people of the United States do not know that the miles and miles of paved streets throughout the District of Columbia have been paid for half with their money. They do not know that the million-dollar bridge on Connecticut Avenue was paid for half with their money. They do not know that the fine bridge across the Potomac below Lincoln Monument, the bridges across the Potomac above, and the new Key Bridge, which have cost several million dollars, were paid for half with their money. They do not know that the main water conduit that furnishes this city with water was paid for with their money. They do not know that Rock Creek Park, winding for miles along the creek, and constantly enjoyed by the 450,000 residents here, as well as the many other parks, were all paid for and are maintained with their money. They do not know that the thousands upon thousands of electric and gas lights that burn all night upon every street and alley in this District have been paid for and maintained half with their money. They do not know that the expense of acquiring and maintaining the numerous playgrounds, the numerous bathing pools, the splendid Tidal Basin, furnishing skating in the winter and a bathing beach in summer, the municipal golf links and clubhouses, the cricket and polo grounds, the numerous tennis courts, the special drives for horseback riders, have all been paid for half with their money. They do not know that 40 per cent of the expense of the great army of trash gatherers, with their wagons, who call regularly at our back doors, is paid out of the United States Treasury. They do not know that the army of garbage gatherers, with their special garbage wagons, who call at our back doors, are paid for 40 per cent by the people of the United States. They do not know that the horde of laborers who regularly call for our ashes at our back doors are paid for 40 per cent by the people of the United States. They do not know that the army of laborers who regularly trim the thousands of trees along each street in Washington are paid for 40 per cent by the whole people. They do not know that the army of laborers who regularly spray the thousands of trees along each street in Washington are paid for 40 per cent by the whole people. They do not know that the army of tree doctors who are regularly performing surgical operations on the diseased trees here are paid for by the whole people. They do not know that the fine Western High School, the Tech High School, the Business High School, the Dunbar High School, the Central High School, and the Eastern High School now being constructed to rank with the others, and which when finished will cost $1,500,000, and as well the scores of other fine school buildings here, have all been paid for half with the money of the whole people, and that 40 per cent of their expense of maintenance, as well as the salaries of the 2,587 teachers and employees of said schools are paid for by the whole people of the United States. They do not know that the salaries of the host of firemen, the cost and maintenance of the numerous fire stations all over the District of Columbia, the fire engines, apparatus, and equipment have been paid for half with the money of the whole people. They do not know that the great army of city police doing service in the District of Columbia—exclusive of the numerous special police and watchmen in public buildings paid for wholly out of the Treasury—have been paid half by the whole people. They do not know that the great army of street sweepers, sprinklers, and cleaners here are paid for half by the people. They do not know that the great army of laborers who, with sacks on their arms and punch sticks in their hand, each day gather up the papers residents scatter all over the city are paid half by the whole people. They do not know that the Public Health Service, with its army of sanitary officers, are paid for by the whole people. They do not know that 40 per cent of the expense of this Rent Commission, benefiting only Washington residents, is paid for by the whole people.

I see my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. SPROUL] on the floor. I want to commend him, because while on the District Committee, when he found that the resident District architect and his big force of employees were employing nine outside architects to plan the nine new buildings that were then proposed, he condemned it. And that is the last time a proposition of that kind was heard of. We stopped it then largely through the action of the gentleman from Illinois. When the foundation of the magnificent Eastern High School was built, they let first the contract for the foundation and they advertised for bids for the superstructure. The contractor who constructed the foundations, who knew more about the building than anybody else, had all of the employees and all the implements necessary, tool houses, and so forth, on the grounds. Notwithstanding that his was the lowest bid for the superstructure, they turned his bid down and gave the contract for the superstructure to another man at an increased cost of $17,000. After turning this man down in that way they afterwards gave him two other contracts for two other buildings, and the people back home are paying 40 per cent for that sort of business.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman would advocate that the Federal Government do not pay anything toward the schools here?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I think that if the gentleman from New York has children here and I have children here we ought to pay for their schooling, because our people back home have to pay for their schools down there.

Mr. MURPHY. Do not they pay rent?

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the people at home do not want to pay for their school expenses there and then pay for part of the school expenses in the District. The school item is one which ought to be paid exclusively by the people who live in this District.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BLANTON. We have tax dodgers, as I have said, from almost every State in the Union, men and women, rich, who come here to this Nation's Capital to escape taxation. One dollar and thirty cents on the $100 they pay on real property and on tangible personal property and five-tenths of 1 per cent on intangible property. They come here to live, with their fine residences out on Sixteenth Street and on Connecticut Avenue, away out, miles, where they are providing for new paving in this bill for their benefit and convenience. I say they ought to pay for their own children's schooling in this District and not call upon the tax-burdened people back in our districts at home to pay these school expenses here in addition to their own school expenses at home.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchasing division salaries: Purchasing officer, $3,000; deputy purchasing officer, $1,800; computer, $1,440; clerks—1 $1,800, 1 $1,600, 3 at $1,500 each, 12 at $1,200 each (5 of whom shall be stenographers and typewriters), 1 $1,100, 3 at $1,000 each; storekeeper, $1,200; messenger, $600; driver, $600; inspectors—1 of materials, $1,400, 2 at $900 each; 2 property-yard keepers, at $1,000 each; temporary labor, $100.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan, in line 16, page 2, should it not be stricken out?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think the copy the gentleman has is a committee print which contained an error which has been corrected in the reported bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That being so, I had better get another copy.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think perhaps the gentleman is not speaking of the matter I had in mind. Line 16 in the committee print was a repetition of "purchasing division, salaries," and so forth. Is that the language?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. I see in the bill which has been distributed around the House that has been left out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Building inspection division: Inspector of buildings, $3,000; assistant inspectors of buildings—one $2,000, three at $1,500 each; one $1,400, nine at $1,360 each; fire-escape inspector, $1,400; civil engineers or computers—one $2,000, three at $1,800 each, one $1,500; clerks—chief, $1,800, one $1,050, three at $1,000 each, one (who shall be a stenographer and typewriter) $1,000, one $900; messenger, $600; assistant inspector, $1,500; for temporary additional assistant inspectors, $15,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman if this is the paragraph that relates to the inspectors who inspect buildings under construction? Has there been any material change in this department since the trouble we had here a year ago?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; a deficiency act passed Congress last spring or early summer providing $20,000 additional for this purpose of inspection. That addition is continued in the bill before the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. Is the same inspector in charge who was in charge prior to this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. So far as I know the same official is in charge of the bureau, but I can not speak with certainty.

Mr. DOWELL. Then the benefit we get is that the inspectors are drawing salaries with an increased expenditure and not making any change in the department itself?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not say that is the only benefit, but I should hope that the personnel took a lesson in reference to the need of increased watchfulness, and so forth. One of the immediate results was an increased force given in the deficiency act, and we have continued that force.

Mr. DOWELL. I notice there is in this paragraph $15,000 for temporary additional assistant inspectors. Are those regular inspectors employed, or is that for an emergency fund?

Mr. CRAMTON. That continues in the main the temporary force authorized under the deficiency act, and while the language refers to temporary it refers to the employment of individuals rather than the continuation of the fund. As the gentleman will realize, the needs of this service are not constant thoughout the year, and instead of having a regular roll and an annual salary they have this fund from which they can hire temporary inspectors when the need develops, and they are on a per diem basis, as I recall.

Mr. DOWELL. There is not any regular employee under that appropriation?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well——

Mr. DOWELL. I mean of continuous service.

Mr. CRAMTON. There may be some under that who do have employment throughout the year, and I will not say there are none, but in the main it is a flexible fund that can be used as the occasion develops.

Mr. DOWELL. Are the salaries under this in any manner fixed by the committee, or is that matter entirely with the inspector?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is no limitation in the section, as the gentleman will note. They made their showing before the deficiency committee when first they were given the funds, and I have in my hand a letter from Mr. Healey, the present inspector of buildings, and, as my recollection goes, he was before the Knickerbocker disaster also, giving the names. There is one gentleman who is an engineer and computer at $8 a day, some one working on the revision of the building code at $8 a day, and a number of inspectors at $6 a day and some at $5.25 a day, and one as low as $3.50 a day.

Mr. DOWELL. And none on an annual salary?

Mr. CRAMTON. No.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire of the gentleman if an investigation has been made as to the competency of this inspector, the general inspector, whether or not he is properly performing the duty assigned to him under this paragraph?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; he must have the training necessary, and he apparently is competent or the commissioners, who are charged with the duty of making the appointment——

Mr. DOWELL. The reason I am making——

Mr. ZIHLMAN. If the gentleman will permit, he is a member of the American Society of Engineers and a very competent man, and he has done all the work possible in the way of building inspection with the very limited force Congress has allowed him to do the work.

Mr. MADDEN. He is a qualified man. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. DOWELL. He not only needs the qualification, but he also needs the disposition to make a very careful inspection here. We have had some experience along this line, and it occurs to me that there ought to be no question about the man at the head of this department.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course the chief inspector can not inspect.

Mr. DOWELL. But the chief inspector ought to know what is going on, and it seemed to me at the time that the chief inspector ought to have known something about the building that collapsed here a year ago, and it seems to me that this inspector and this force of men ought to be held to a very strict accountability for their services. I make this inquiry in order to know that this department at least is giving service for the appropriation that is granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of metal identification tags for horse-drawn vehicles used for business purposes and motor vehicles in the District of Columbia, $17,500.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNYDER. Just to ask a question. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether these salaries that are read in the bill below $2,500 carry the bonus of $240 in addition?

Mr. CRAMTON. For the current year they do. Of course, there has been no decision by Congress as yet as to the bonus for any Government employees for 1924.

Mr. SNYDER. Then so far as these salaries are stated here now, they are flat at the rates quoted?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. And unless legislation later on is enacted giving them the bonus, this is the salary for the year we are legislating for?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. I hope—and I speak only for myself—that it will be the case, that if the bonus is provided for Government employees generally for 1924 it will be continued for the District employees.

Mr. SNYDER. I simply asked for information, not stating my view of the policy involved at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF WEIGHTS, MEASURES, AND MARKETS.

Salaries: Superintendent, $2,500; inspectors—chief, $1,500, 5 at $1,200 each; clerk, $1,200; market masters—2 at $1,200 each, 2 at $900 each; assistant market masters—2 at $780 each, 2 at $600 each; watchman, $600; laborers—5 at $600 each, 5 at $480 each; in all, $24,160.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BEGG. I do so for the purpose of asking a question. This refers to the Center Market, does it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. To all the markets.

Mr. BEGG. They are under the control of the Government and are operated by the Government, are they?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Can the gentleman ascertain why it is that the most expensive place to buy fruit in the city is at the Government-operated market? If you want to buy any high-priced food you will have to pay more in those places even than you will in a little grocery store.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not give the gentleman the desired information. If he has discovered the most expensive place in Washington to buy those things, I would like to know the most economical place.

Mr. BEGG. If you go into a little corner grocery, with which the Government has nothing to do, you will find the prices much under those in the places where the Government runs the establishment. I am serious about this. I am not saying this in any spirit of levity. The Government runs these markets, and the highest prices prevailing to-day are found in those market houses.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are a lot of things about this that I do not know anything about, but my understanding is that the Government owns this property and leases it to individuals to conduct their business there, to sell food and other commodities at such prices as they desire. Outside, along the curb, as the gentleman knows, are many people coming in from the country and others selling their commodities.

Mr. BEGG. What revenue is derived, does the gentleman know, from the lease of these buildings?

Mr. CRAMTON. The figures I have before me do not include the Center Market. The other markets bring in total receipts of $41,882, and the expenses to the Government are $16,868. That shows a profit, without making allowance for depreciation and interest on investment, of $25,000.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman realizes with receipts amounting to $41,000 coming in as a return for the use of buildings, and with a salary roll of $16,000 and other expenses of $24,000, how soon the bankruptcy court would get him if he himself were conducting this as a private business?

Mr. CRAMTON. This $16,000 does not cover salaries entirely. It includes lighting and supervision.

Mr. BEGG. The Government permits a public market to be conducted here where the highest food prices prevail. I make that statement without fear of any contradiction. The highest food prices are in the market to-day.

Mr. CRAMTON. The salary roll in this paragraph is $24,160, and that is not alone in connection with these markets, but it covers the entire inspection service of weights and measures throughout the District.

Mr. BEGG. I am not calling the attention of the committee to that particular phase. I simply wanted to know why it is that the Government goes to the trouble of supervising a series of markets under the implied promise that we are going to see the public protected from gouging in food prices, and yet in every one of the places supervised by the Government the peak price of foods is charged. I may say if that is the natural result of Government operation, it is a good lesson for the advocates of Government control and operation to be compelled to come down here and buy their food from the markets operated by the Government.

Mr. DOWELL. Is not this a municipal affair operated by the city?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think the Secretary of Agriculture runs this market. The Center Market is operated by the Department of Agriculture, but the gentleman understands that it has only the ownership of the buildings and the carrying on of the various stalls.

Mr. BEGG. Why do we not get rid of them and stop the loss?

Mr. CRAMTON. We are not losing money.

Mr. BEGG. If the gross income is $41,000 and the expenses are $16,000 and $24,000, it would indicate a loss.

Mr. CRAMTON. The shopkeepers rent the stalls inside, and outside along the curb there is opportunity for the market gardener and the farmer outside to bring in his vegetables and fruits and things and sell them. I suppose no charge is made unless it is a small fee. The object of running these markets by the Government is not to make money but to give that opportunity to the people of the country to come in and sell their wares.

The Government does not regulate the price of eggs. We must assume that that is governed by the law of supply and demand. My own experience does not bear out the gentleman's assertion that the Center Market is always the most expensive place to buy. Recently I bought some eggs there, and I paid 2 cents under even the chain-store price in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Is it not true also that the Government of the United States rents a theater to a theater company in Washington? Yet the Government does not regulate the price of the theater tickets.

Mr. BEGG. That is very true; but that is a different proposition entirely. They rent it because they are holding that property for available building space in the future. Now, I may be entirely in error as to the purpose of operating these markets, but I read in a newspaper the other night where the Secretary of Agriculture was going to feed so many people in this country. I am not averse to the Government and the Secretary of Agriculture operating these markets, but they ought not to be operated for the benefit of a few retailers, to the exclusion of everybody else, who sell at a higher price than a man can rent a little suburban store and sell food for. The gentleman says he can buy more cheaply at the Center Market, but I can not buy more cheaply in any of the markets than I can in any other stores.

Mr. SNELL. Has this bill anything to do with Center Market? I thought that came under the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BEGG. This appropriates for markets.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not the Center Market, but the Western and the Eastern and some other markets.

Mr. BEGG. The whole thing comes under the idea of Government operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] merely emphasize the argument I made a moment ago, but he has got the Center Market mixed up. He speaks about gouging. If the gentleman will read up on the splendid work done by our colleague from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] with regard to that Center Market, he will find out that the main gouging was stopped. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] had done nothing else in all of his long useful years of splendid service here than that one thing, it ought to entitle him to a seat in this House for the rest of his life. He saved this Government thousands of dollars annually by seven or eight years of hard work, trying to get that property back, and after working seven or eight years on it his proposition finally went through the House without a single vote against it.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. I am not interested in what the gentleman from Kentucky did. I am curious to know why it is, if the Government controls and operates these public markets, that prices are higher there than they are in private retail stores? If the gentleman can give us some light on that, I would be very glad to hear it.

Mr. BLANTON. According to the newspapers here, if the Government operates anything, the people of the District ought to be able to go down and get their vegetables and their meats absolutely for nothing.

Here is what the Herald says this morning, editorially:

The increasing tendency of the House Appropriations Committee toward exempting certain appropriations from the 60–40 arrangement between the Federal and the District Government and saddling the District with the whole expense ought to cause a note of alarm.

Even if the items are for strictly local purposes, a dangerous and unfair precedent is set. On one pretext and another Congress can depart from the 60–40 program and charge the revenues of the District with the entire expense of any local activity—any local activity.

In other words, with respect even to local activities in this great District of 437,000 people, activities that have relation only to the residents who live here, not to the governmental activities, not to the business of the Government but for the pleasure and convenience of the people who live here, who have no connection with the Government, the Herald says that if we do not watch out, the Government will make the people pay the expense of their local activities. Why should they not pay all such expense? That is exactly what I have been contending for.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Speaking of the schools in particular, does the gentleman think the District ought to pay all the expenses in connection with the schools of the city? Does not the gentleman recognize that over half of the pupils who attend the public schools in this city are the children of people who are not residents of the District of Columbia but who are here temporarily for the purpose of their employment in the Government service, and who pay taxes back home?

Mr. BLANTON. There are about 66,000 children in school here. By an investigation I made last year I showed conclusively and had Superintendent Ballou admit that there were 2,485 school children from the States of Virginia and Maryland who attend school here every day in Washington and have their books and tuition furnished free, and 40 per cent of the whole expense is paid by the taxpayers at home.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Is it not a fact that those very children are the children of men who are in the Government service and who are temporarily living within the District?

Mr. BLANTON. A few of them are, but a great many of them are not. The parents of these 66,000 children do not all work for the Government. If in order to escape paying $100 a month rent in the District a man moves over into Virginia or Maryland, where he can rent for $25 a month, why should he not pay the expense of sending his children to school in Virginia or Maryland, if he is getting the benefit of reduced rents? Why should he call upon the taxpayers in the States back home to pay for part of it? It is not right and it ought to stop. The gentleman from Ohio has to buy his meat and vegetables here. I do not blame him for kicking because they charge him more at the Center Market. Why does he not do as I do, go to these chain stores and hunt up the places where they do not charge him so much?

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman from Ohio was not kicking. He was just inquiring why the prices were higher at the Center Market than they are at the retail stores. I was not complaining.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's words may have been just an inquiry, but the tone of his voice sounded like a kick. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. In regard to the old Center Market, you have all seen it and probably have been fleeced more than once when you went there to buy provisions. I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] as to the untiring efforts of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] in behalf of the District, and his desire to economize and at the same time to progress and more greatly beautify the city and make it more inviting, and exalt the Nation by the attractiveness of the surroundings of a great Capital.

But so far as this market house is concerned, the people that had it were glad to get rid of it, and so they passed it back to the Government. Now, you have all this trouble over again, that of Government control. Some years ago when my distinguished friend, Mr. Moore, now the mayor of Philadelphia, was a Member of this House, he made an investigation as to the higher cost of produce purchased at the market places in the District of Columbia. He positively reported back as a fact that the storage men supplied the little dealers with their produce, with orders to sell it at the same price everywhere—fix the price; they were price fixers—and they said if you do not sell it at that price you bring it back and we will destroy it. Did you ever hear anything the equal of that as a base hindrance to the law of supply and demand? It is an accepted fact that there is a combination made every market morning that fixes the price of commodities, particularly butter and eggs, and that that price does not prevail only in the stalls themselves but by wonderful celerity—perhaps it is radio or something equivalent—it is transmitted to the colored women on the outside who charge the same price within five minutes after this combination has issued its edict.

Now, whether there is anything in the bill that will remedy the situation I do not know. I have looked into the matter somewhat, and we are going to ask much for the District and there is much that is needed. This is the Nation's Capital, and our consideration ought to be for the National Capital beyond that of any taxpayer here or elsewhere. If this country is to stand on the rock of education, if it is to continue to have Christian civilization as its sturdy pillar, if these are to mean anything at all, in the name of God and all blessings, we ought to have it here in the highest type; the best structures and the best instructors ought to be at the Capital of this great American Republic. [Applause.]

We ought to pay the teachers adequately. The teaching of to-day is not the method of inculcation employed before Plato, the first systematic teacher; not now like the old masters, who walked up and down lecturing to the sons of the nobility—we have a confederated democracy where we bring all the children of the masses together and give them an education alike and by the best teachers.

Now, if you look this teachers' salary bill through, you will see that under its provisions we have increased the pay gradually. We do not give the teachers 100 per cent at once, but we graduate it according to their efficiency as may appear to the examining board.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] is under a misapprehension. From all appearances he is entirely right, and it would look as if consideration of these measures had been abandoned. But that is not true. I have been a member of a legislative body for many years, and I can well understand the processes and the power that resides in the members of any legislative body and the subdivisions or committees thereof. We have a Committee on Rules that can bring in any kind of controlling measure providing for the debate of a question in any way, or not have it debated at all. So, therefore, in order to accomplish results, instead of going up against a stone wall and trying to start something and failing, as I have seen many a man do in undertaking to filibuster and then leave the floor chagrined and humiliated. No, my friends, I have been willing to submit to the judgment of gentlemen who have the power, who gained the power from you as the result of some widespread so-called independent reform movement—which, if anything, reforms backward instead of forward, and which, to my mind, has been more tyrannical than JOE CANNON ever was. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. I was defeated once because I stood for JOE CANNON'S czarism. I recall that I was a little slow in responding to a request that came from Mr. Mann as to whether I would be in favor of Uncle JOE for Speaker. Later I got a letter from Senator Penrose, and he said Mr. Mann would like to know how I stood as to Uncle JOE, and told me that I had better tell him where I stood. He did not tell me that I should say I was for Uncle JOE or against him. Of course, I was for him, but I thought I would wait until I got here before committing myself. The record stops there, and it need not be said that Penrose was for Uncle JOE. He was a czar all right; but he laid the cards on the table and you knew he was a czar, and you knew there was no false pretense about it. But now you do not know where you are going or how you are coming out if you hunt the Committee on Rules to get something done for the District of Columbia. [Laughter.] It is something submerged, it may be the Ku Klux, I do not know whether it is or not. Brother SNELL will tell us more about it later.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is talking about the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. FOCHT. Now, about these District bills. I hope the Members here will be patient and considerate when they are brought on the floor. There is no partisanship about any of them. There is no place for partisanship in District bills. In many other matters the majority is here to be partisan. I never squealed when one session I lost the only job I had here. An old soldier held it, and after he was removed I saw a Confederate soldier over there in his place.

That was the business of the Democrats; it belonged to them, and so now the conduct of this House is in the hands of the Republican Party. The Republican Party is responsible, as it must necessarily be in a country like this, where we have representative and responsive government. We are now waiting until these appropriation bills are passed, so that there may be no tie-up in this great body, so that on the 4th of March next, when the gavel falls and we adjourn, you may go home and spend some time there. I have not been able to do that for 8 or 10 years now. The fact of the matter is that 20 years ago I bought and gave my wife a house, and I have actually spent two months in that house, and one of those months I was sick. Most of the rest of the time I have been running around after this job. But when we bring these bills here, my friends, after yielding all of the time, we would like to have your attention, we would like to have you here, we would not like to be in a position where just criticism may not be made, as it has been made in the past by my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who has complained of absenteeism when these great appropriation bills are being considered, and particularly now when this District of Columbia appropriation bill is being considered. This District does not have representation. We should remember that. You represent the District of Columbia. I hope you may give proper consideration and concern to this great Capital of a great Nation, and particularly to the intellectual and cultural aspect of it, and remember that only half of the population of America is of the original stock and that our future hope is the schoolhouse. The two great markers of all civilization are the schoolhouses and the churches. Let them forever be the greatest and best buildings in any town, and particularly in the Capital of the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to say a word upon this subject, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] interjected some remarks about the Center Market. I invite his attention to the fact that under the law the Center Market is under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture and not under the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Under that same law the Secretary of Agriculture has the right to eject any stall master in the place who charges exorbitant prices for commodities put there for sale. Therefore, instead of his inquiry being made of the chairman of this subcommittee respecting extortion in the market, he had better direct the inquiry to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] a few moments ago said that the owners of the Center Market were anxious to get rid of that property. They exhibited their anxiety by contesting the proposition most vigorously, indeed, for 8 or 10 years. The act of Congress creating the Center Market authorized a capital stock of $1,000,000. Only $150,000 of that amount was ever paid in. They paid a dividend annually of 5 per cent on the million dollars. Therefore they were receiving on the $150,000 they had paid in a dividend of 33⅓ per cent. Receiving 33⅓ per cent on their money invested, one can imagine their anxiety to get rid of the investment.

The Clerk read as follows:

MINIMUM WAGE BOARD.

Salaries: Secretary, $2,500; clerical, contingent, and miscellaneous expenses, including the purchase of books of reference and periodicals, $2,500; in all, $5,000, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided, That until the constitutionality of this board shall have been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States there shall not be expended from this appropriation or from the appropriation for this board for the fiscal year 1923 a greater sum than at the rate of $1,600 per annum for personal services and $400 per annum for contingent and miscellaneous expenses.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 13, after the word "of," insert the words "the act creating," and in line 16, before the word "fiscal," insert the words "remainder of the."

Mr. CRAMTON. This is simply to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RENT COMMISSION.

For salaries and expenses authorized by section 103, Title II, of the "food control and the District of Columbia rents act," approved October 22, 1919, as amended by the act approved August 24, 1921, extending the rent commission until May 22, 1922, and the act approved May 22, 1922, extending the said commission until May 22, 1924, $42,500, of which $13,750 shall be available exclusively for the salaries of members of the commission.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Something was said about this the other day, but I did not understand just what provision was made and how far this took the commission.

Mr. CRAMTON. The act authorizing this commission expires the latter part of May, 1924. Hence, unless there is further legislation continuing that legislation the commission will cease to exist. I think the date is May 22, 1924.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not 1923?

Mr. CRAMTON. Nineteen hundred and twenty-four. It was extended this year, the gentleman will remember.

Mr. SNELL. This is a proportionate amount to take it up to that time?

Mr. CRAMTON. The amount carried here is below the Budget figures. There are five commissioners provided for in the act. Only three have been appointed. The committee assumed, without any definite information, that so much time now having elapsed and the end of the period being in sight, it is not the purpose to appoint more commissioners. So this item carries salary for only three commissioners. Then it takes the existing pay roll of the board, and it carries that pay roll right up to the last day that the board can exist. It gives some further allowance for printing and contingent expenses, cutting down somewhat the allowance for printing and cutting out almost entirely the amounts for new equipment, because it does not seem that this board needs to keep on buying new furniture up to the day that its head is cut off, and cutting those figures we are enabled still to cut the amount as I have indicated.

Mr. SNELL. Then a reasonable amount has been allowed for the board to function?

Mr. CRAMTON. We have an allowance for salaries for the three commissioners, for their present pay roll, and something for contingent expenses and printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Free Public Library, including Takoma Park and Southeast branches.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, strike out the caption in lines 13 and 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

In type to distinguish the items which follow as comprising an independent subdivision of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous, including Takoma Park and Southeast branches: For books, periodicals, and newspapers, including payment in advance for subscriptions to periodicals, newspapers, subscription books, and society publications, $17,500.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 2, strike out the words "society publications."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, under this subhead of "Miscellaneous, $17,500," we authorize them to furnish for the readers out here at Takoma Park and the Southeast branches "society publications." I do not know how many of my colleagues live in Takoma Park—I see one of our new leaders of the majority lives out there——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Not guilty.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, a leader, whether he is a present leader or a leader to come hereafter, needs these society publications, and the gentleman from Illinois, if he becomes a leader, why he has to have these publications to post himself on society matters, but his people back at home in Illinois, I take it, do not want part of this $17,500 spent for that purpose. If these were some technical publications that would benefit the public, it would be different; but we are providing lots of libraries for Washington. Why, of all the places on earth that does not need so many branch libraries, it is Washington, D. C. The Congressional Library is one of the finest of its kind in the world. In addition to it, with all its fine, magnificent possibilities, we have the big Carnegie Library, down here on New York Avenue, and others. We are extending all the time——

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will yield, the Congressional Library——

Mr. BLANTON. I was referring to the other gentleman from Illinois; I did not mean the gentleman who is addressing me.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Congressional Library is not available to the public to take out books?

Mr. BLANTON. Any person in this city who can come to any Representative and get his Representative to O. K. orders can go there at will and get all the books he wants, providing he brings them back; and almost every person here in Washington has an open sesame to the office of some Representative or some Senator.

Mr. DENISON. But the gentleman from Texas does not think a private person here, a resident of Washington, has access to the Congressional Library, does he?

Mr. BLANTON. I help a great many people here in Washington to get books, not merely people from Texas but people who are from other States who come to me once in a while and want me to help them get a book.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman think, in so far as he does, that he is violating the rules of the Library?

Mr. BLANTON. Not if I see that the books are returned.

Mr. DENISON. I think if he will inquire into it a little he will find he is going a little beyond his privileges.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the Congressional Library for?

Mr. DENISON. Is it for Members of Congress——

Mr. BLANTON. That magnificent library which covers several blocks of ground for Members of Congress only?

Mr. DENISON. For Members of Congress and those people who want to go there for research, investigation, and such matters, but it is not for the public generally to go and take out books.

Mr. BLANTON. Thousands of those books are fiction with hundreds of pages each, and Members of the House and Senators are not expected to read so very many books of fiction.

Mr. DENISON. Speaking for myself, I read a great deal of fiction.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean that we do not have enough time to devote to reading fiction that would take in the possibilities of the whole Library in that regard, but the people also have ample opportunity in the other public libraries here. Congress ought not continually to extend this matter to the extent of $17,500 to pay for society publications.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. What are society publications?

Mr. BLANTON. I put the question back to the gentleman from West Virginia; what are they?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The American Medical Society, Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. There is a society relating to the protection of childhood.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. And that kind of society publications.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but that is not the kind of society publications I am talking about.

Mr. HERSEY. What is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. BLANTON. High-society publications.

Mr. HERSEY. No such publications are out in the library in Takoma Park, where I live.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the reason you are asking for this $17,500 appropriation.

Mr. HERSEY. I am not asking for it.

Mr. BLANTON. Somebody is asking for it and somebody is getting it, for it is in the bill. Why, they are not confined to medical-society books, they are not confined to engineering-society books, they are not confined to technical publications. Under this term of "society publications" they can get any kind they want with the $17,500.

Mr. DENISON. I was wondering if my friend from Texas can give an illustration of one of the high-society books.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the gentleman from Illinois is so efficient along that line, being one of the high-society leaders of this great District, that he ought not to need any information along that line.

Mr. DENISON. I was wondering if the Smart Set would be one.

Mr. BLANTON. It would.

Mr. DENISON. Would the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD be one?

Mr. BLANTON. In some instances; yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The Social Register might be.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; sometimes at about half-past 4 or 5, when we are in such a hurry to get through with our session here in order to attend special dinners and other high-society functions, the gentleman might call the proceedings then taking place, as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, society publications.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I see that the Members are not in the humor to get rid of their high society, so I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MOUNT PLEASANT BRANCH LIBRARY.

For the purchase of a site for a branch of the Free Public Library in the Mount Pleasant-Columbia Heights section of the District of Columbia, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and authority is hereby conferred upon the commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept from the Carnegie Corporation of New York not less than $100,000 for the purpose of erecting a suitable branch library building on such a site, subject to the approval of said commissioners and the board of library trustees.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph as being new legislation, unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will admit that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. I may do anything the gentleman wants if he will reserve his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the item provides for the purchase of a site for a third branch of the Public Library in the city. There is one at Takoma Park, and there is one in the southeast, and this item provides for one in the northwest in a section that is built up now, quite distant, some 3 miles from the central library, so that it will serve a great public need to have a library in that section of the city.

The site proposed, I am reliably informed, is worth at least $50,000. I say I am reliably advised, and I believe it to be a fact that the value of the site proposed is at least $50,000. It is offered to the District for $25,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has a Carnegie Library in his own town, has he not?

Mr. CRAMTON. We are getting one.

Mr. BLANTON. And the people of the gentleman's district bought that site, and they are providing the library that Mr. Carnegie furnished the money with which to build the building?

Mr. CRAMTON. In our case the late Mr. Carnegie was not quite as generous as he was with respect to the city of Washington. We are getting less than one-third of the building and site from the Carnegie Corporation, whereas in this case the owner of this land offers it at not over half the real price. Then the Carnegie Corporation will put on it a $100,000 building. The building will be entirely at the expense of the Carnegie Corporation, so that the $150,000 site and building will cost the people of the District only $25,000, of which, under this bill, only $10,000 will be the part of the United States. As long as our present policy is to share this expense, I do not object to the Government sharing in a branch library to the extent of $10,000 where the whole cost will be $150,000.

Mr. BLANTON. The point I make is that the people of Mount Pleasant do not contribute to the expense of the gentleman's home library, but I live in Mount Pleasant and I am willing to contribute my portion of the proper expense to buy this site for $25,000 for the benefit of those of us who live in Mount Pleasant. But the gentlemen who live in Mount Pleasant ought not to call upon the people back home throughout the United States to provide a site for their own benefit.

Mr. CRAMTON. It will not benefit me much. In the Southeast branch and in the Takoma Park branch this policy was followed, and it is simply to follow the policy heretofore adopted. I will concede that the point of order is good, and if the gentleman from Texas insists upon his point the item will have to go out of the bill. But I am going to say to the gentleman this: That in view of the fact that this $25,000 will make possible a contribution of $25,000 from the owner of the land and a contribution of $100,000 from the Carnegie Corporation, I hope the gentleman will not insist.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not simply a question of providing $25,000 for the purchase of a site. The very minute we buy this site it becomes a question of maintenance for years. I will match any contribution that the gentleman from Michigan may make to raise this money in Mount Pleasant and provide the site.

Mr. CRAMTON. My financial condition is such as to make the gentleman's proposition safe. I hope he will not make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I must insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes a point of order on this paragraph. Many rulings have been made in the past sustaining it, and the Chair does sustain it. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT AND MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES.

For printing, checks, books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery; surveying instruments and implements; drawing materials; binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; purchase of laboratory apparatus and equipment and maintenance of laboratory in the office of the inspector of asphalt and cement; damages; livery, purchase, and care of horses and carriages or buggies and bicycles not otherwise provided for; horseshoeing; ice, repairs to pound and vehicles; use of bicycles by inspectors in the engineer department not to exceed $800 in the aggregate; and other general necessary expenses of District offices, including the personal-tax board, harbor master, health department, surveyor's office, office of superintendent of weights, measures, and markets, department of insurance, and Board of Charities, $45,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question, or maybe some one else on the committee can furnish the information desired. I was wondering what the need was for a buggy or carriage and horses in this connection.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is blanket basket section; it is a basket section for various needs of the District government. It touches all the different activities. In some of these activities they still use horses and buggies, although the need for them is being done away with in general.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice on page 18 there is another provision with reference to horses and buggies. I was wondering whether it was not cheaper to keep a Ford car than to maintain a horse and buggy. It is in most cities and towns.

Mr. CRAMTON. I notice that these officials are all anxious to get Ford cars and buggies as rapidly as Congress will let them.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice even veterinarians not only stop riding in carriages but stop riding on street cars and prefer to ride in Fords. It seems to me that they might need horses in some of the street work, but it also seems to me that it is not a matter of economy to maintain horses for the purpose of drawing buggies and carriages.

Mr. CRAMTON. The whole amount carried in the item would be very small. The item of forage and stable supplies and horseshoeing, vehicles and repairs, livery and garages is $1,025 only out of the $45,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That does not include the horses and buggies provided for on page 18.

Mr. CRAMTON. This is a general basket provision, a contingency fund.

Mr. JONES of Texas. From the number of places where horses and carriages and buggies are referred to in the bill, it seems that there must be a number of them maintained, not only the ones provided for in this contingent fund. I used that simply as a basis for making an inquiry. I wondered how many there are.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are about 700 horses cared for by the District veterinarians. Of course, that includes about 70 horses still in use in the fire department, and some for the collection of refuse.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; I understood that some would be needed in street work.

Mr. CRAMTON. In work where there are frequent stops horses are desirable.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; but, of course, they would not use the buggies for that purpose.

Mr. CRAMTON. No. I can not say how many buggies there are, but there are 700 horses. I suppose the number of buggies is very limited. I will guarantee that every man who drives around at Government expense will take an automobile in preference, if Congress will give him one, but it is not always an economy to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing all annual and special reports of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for submission to Congress, $5,000: Provided, That authority is hereby given the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to discontinue the printing of any annual or special reports of the government of the District of Columbia in order to keep the expenditures within this appropriation. In all cases where the printing of said reports is discontinued, the original copy thereof shall be kept on file in the offices of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for public inspection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What has this appropriation been heretofore?

Mr. CRAMTON. At one time it was $10,000, but in 1922 it was cut to $5,000, and has been that since.

Mr. DOWELL. Then the only part of this paragraph that is of any importance is the releasing of the commissioners from making a report of their acts to Congress?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not regard that as the important portion.

Mr. DOWELL. The expenditure has been reduced heretofore.

Mr. CRAMTON. When the cut was made from $10,000 to $5,000 this proviso was put in the bill, and it may be surplusage now. They are given the authority to discontinue the printing of some reports, and that does not seem to be undesirable.

Mr. DOWELL. This relieves them from making any report.

Mr. CRAMTON. This relieves them from printing certain reports.

Mr. DOWELL. Any printed report.

Mr. CRAMTON. It does not discontinue their responsibility to make a report, but relieves them from printing certain reports.

Mr. DOWELL. It says:

In all cases where the printing of said reports is discontinued the original copy thereof shall be kept on file in the offices of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for public inspection.

Mr. CRAMTON. They have to make the report just the same.

Mr. DOWELL. Does not this relieve them from any report?

Mr. CRAMTON. Not at all. It only relieves them from the printing of such reports as the commissioners do not deem it desirable to print.

Mr. DOWELL. It permits the commissioners to file their reports in their office, but relieves them from any report whatever to Congress if they see fit.

Mr. CRAMTON. It does not do anything of the kind. This has simply to do with the printing.

Mr. DOWELL. I am asking for information, to ascertain whether or not the $5,000 is to be paid if the reports are not printed.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think their estimate is $4,725 for next year.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it not a fair interpretation of the language that they shall expend as much of the $5,000 as may be necessary for printing their reports, but if the $5,000 is exhausted then they are not expected to spend any more for printing?

Mr. DOWELL. Oh, no; this language clearly exempts the commissioners from submitting any printed report.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The proviso reads as follows:

Provided, That authority is hereby given the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to discontinue the printing of any annual or special reports of the government of the District of Columbia in order to keep the expenditures within this appropriation.

That is the only purpose for which they may discontinue printing.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; but any report may not be printed if the commissioners see fit not to print it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not think so.

Mr. DOWELL. It relieves the commissioners from submitting any printed report. I do not know the importance of having their reports printed and sent here rather than having them filed in their office, but this is a complete release from the obligation to file a report with Congress.

Mr. BRIGGS. It does not mean that it relieves them from filing a report, but it does provide that the report shall not be printed.

Mr. DOWELL. They file their report in the office of the commissioners.

Mr. BRIGGS. They still make their reports. The reports are printed in order to make them accessible to the Members of Congress.

Mr. DOWELL. But the appropriation is $5,000 for filing a report in their office. I do not know to whom this report is made, but I assume it is a detailed statement of the business transactions of the various departments of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRIGGS. Why should the $5,000 be carried then?

Mr. DOWELL. I submit that question to the chairman of the committee. The reason I am making the inquiry is because, as I understand it, heretofore they have filed a printed report with Congress. This, as I understand the language, entirely relieves them from filing a report.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is nothing in this section that relieves them from the filing of any report that the law requires. It does provide that they may discontinue the printing of a report if necessary to keep within the $5,000 limitation, the limitation that is carried in the original act of Congress. The committee found that they were printing reports from Tom, Dick, and Harry to an unreasonable extent. Each board, each branch of activity, made a report, and so it goes. This does not affect the legal obligation of any agency to file a report. It does keep down the senseless printing of reports that nobody wants to read.

Mr. DOWELL. Why did not the committee specify the reports that should be printed and exclude the others?

Mr. CRAMTON. We did not consider it necessary; it is the language heretofore put in the bill and we did not want to impose any hardship on the commissioners. We give the commissioners, and we think it is right, the discretion as to what reports should be printed and what should not. I do not think there is any conflict.

Mr. DOWELL. I simply wanted the information in regard to the paragraph, and, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motor cycles owned by the District of Columbia and used exclusively for official purposes; for the pay of persons employed exclusively in maintaining, repairing, and operating such vehicles; for all expenses incident to the occupation of any building in whole or in part for the housing or repair of such vehicles; for allowances to officers and employees of the District of Columbia for supplying for official use their own motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles at not to exceed $26 per month for an automobile and $13 per month for a motor cycle, there shall be set up on the books of the Treasury a single appropriation to which shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from appropriations contained in this act similar to appropriations which were properly available for such expenses during the fiscal year 1923, such sums as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall certify as being required for the purposes hereinbefore enumerated, and, except as hereinafter provided, no part of any other appropriation contained in this act, after such transfers shall have been made, shall be available for any such expense: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as affecting the appropriations herein made under the police, fire, and water departments, under the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds and under the Engineer Department of the Army, but no motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle or motor cycle acquired by purchase or otherwise by any of such excepted activities shall be transferred, loaned, or assigned to or for any other activity provided for in this act: Provided further, That during the fiscal year 1924 not more than 40 persons shall be paid an allowance for supplying their own passenger-carrying automobiles and not more than eight persons shall be paid an allowance for supplying their own motor cycles: Provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall report to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session the total sum expended under each appropriation during the fiscal years 1922 and 1923 for each of the purposes specified in this paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to lines 10 and 11 on page 16. That provision for allowance to officers not to exceed $26 a month for an automobile and $13 a month for a motor cycle was reduced in the committee to $20 and $10, respectively.

Mr. CRAMTON. This is new language. I can not be certain as to that and I would not controvert the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky. I will accept the gentleman's recollection of it. The gentleman knows that it was a section that was gone over considerably in order to put it in proper shape.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move, on page 16, line 10, to strike out the figures "26" and insert "20," and on line 11 strike out "13" and insert in lieu thereof "10."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 16, line 10, strike out "$26" and insert "$20"; line 11, strike out "$13" and insert in lieu thereof "$10."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

All of said motor vehicles and all other motor vehicles provided for in this act and all horse-drawn carriages and buggies owned by the District of Columbia shall be used only for purposes directly pertaining to the public services of said District, and shall be under the direction and control of the commissioners, who may from time to time alter or change the assignment for use thereof or direct the joint or interchangeable use of any of the same by officials and employees of the District: Provided, That no automobile shall be acquired hereunder, by purchase or exchange, at a cost, including the value of a vehicle exchanged, exceeding $650, except as may be herein specifically authorized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan if it was not also agreed in committee that there should be no assignment of one automobile from one department to another.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand that is provided for on page 16:

No motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle or motor cycle acquired by purchase or otherwise by any such excepted activities shall be transferred, loaned, or assigned to or for any other activity provided for in this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is not the language at the bottom of page 17 and the top of page 18 contradictory?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am satisfied that specific provision would control the other general language.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman think that, beginning after line 25, page 17, after the word "Commissioners," that language should come out down to and including the word "District," in line 3, page 18?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I think the language is required to take care of some needs, and I think there would be no conflict between it and the language on page 17. But if the gentleman fears that there is, I think that that could be safely eliminated by adding at the end of this proviso "except as otherwise provided in this act."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman offer that amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. Mr. Chairman, on page 18, line 3, after the word "District," insert "except as otherwise provided in this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 18, line 3, after the word "District," insert "except as otherwise provided in this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse fire inspectors for expenses incurred by them in the maintenance of their own automobiles incident to the performance of their official duties, at the rate of $26 per month each, $1,560.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, on line 8, page 22, I move to strike out the word "fire" and insert the word "five." That is a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 8, strike out the word "fire" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to correct an error similar to the one the gentleman from Kentucky called attention to, I move to amend on line 7, page 22, strike out the figures "$13" and insert "$10," and correct the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 22, line 7, strike out "$13" and insert "$10," and correct the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. And in line 10 strike out "$26" and insert "$20," and correct the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 22, lines 10 and 11, strike out the figures "$26" in line 10 and insert in lieu thereof "$20," and in line 11 correct the total.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, how is the Clerk going to ascertain what the total will be in the amendment proposed? We only allow the Clerk to compute the total when it is a matter of mathematical computation.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all it is here.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think in the computations it is well enough for the clerk of the committee to give the Clerk at the desk the amount so that there will be no mistake about it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall put it in, and if I am wrong I want the gentleman from Wisconsin to correct me. In line 11 strike out "$1,560" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend also in line 7, page 22, by striking out "$468" and inserting in lieu thereof "$360."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 7, strike out the figures "$468" and insert in lieu thereof "$360."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, your committee tried to improve the bill by a regrouping of the items to bring in one place the expenses of each certain bureau rather than to have them scattered. These two paragraphs in respect to the building inspection division were not placed with the building inspection division on page 3 of the bill because at that time the committee had under consideration the general question of this matter of motor vehicles.

I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to transpose the two paragraphs, lines 4 to 11, on page 22, to page 3, following line 9, so that they may immediately follow the paragraph for the building inspection division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that certain changes be made in the arrangement of the paragraphs referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to object, but ought not the line, "building inspection division," be transferred also?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I would ask to omit that line entirely.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that ought to be made a separate subhead at the top of page 3, because there is no subhead there.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think the side heading on page 3 will be sufficient.

Mr. BLANTON. But it would be out of proportion.

Mr. CRAMTON. Very well, I shall include that.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that the Clerk may be sure of the intention of the gentleman from Michigan, will he kindly repeat his request?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that on page 3, line 1, the words "building inspection division," which is a side heading, be made a subhead, and that following line 9, on page 3, the Clerk be authorized to transpose to that point the paragraphs lines 4 to 11, on page 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that there be a certain transposition of paragraphs as indicated in the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a further request that on the same page, in line 10, the words "plumbing inspection division" may be made a subhead, and that the Clerk be authorized to transpose to follow line 16, on that page, the paragraph from line 13 to line 16 on page 22.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman wish to correct the item of $13 in line 16, page 22, before he makes that transfer?

Mr. TILSON. I do not think that has yet been read.

Mr. CRAMTON. It has not been read. We will defer that request for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PLUMBING INSPECTION DIVISION.

To reimburse five assistant inspectors of plumbing for provision and maintenance by themselves of five motor cycles for use in their official inspections in the District of Columbia, $13 per month each, $780.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in line 16, page 22, I move to amend by striking out "$13" and inserting "$10," and by striking out the figures "$780" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$600."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 16, strike out "$13" and insert in lieu thereof "$10," and strike out "$780" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$600."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that line 12 on page 22 be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that line 12 on page 22 be stricken from the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. And that lines 13 to 16 be transferred to follow line 16 on page 3, and that the words "plumbing inspection division," in line 10 of that page, be made a subhead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that certain changes be made in the arrangement of the bill as indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT BUILDING.

For fuel, light, power, repairs, laundry, mechanics, and labor not to exceed $5,000, and miscellaneous supplies, $35,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I rise to obtain information as to what is the policy in the District as to the purchase of light and power, or whether it is generated directly by the various instrumentalities. Some years ago the power for the operation of the Washington Monument, under the then Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, was generated by its own plant. He made the representation to the subcommittee on the War Department appropriation bill that it was more economical to buy the power direct. I was curious to inquire of the chairman what is the policy as to light and power, so far as the District government is econcerned?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no definite information as to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment on the information furnished me by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question. Has it been ascertained that it is cheaper to have the Washington Monument supplied by the local company than for the Government itself to supply it as it formerly did?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] was just throwing some light on the subject, and I think he was the authority for that statement. Independent of that I have no information.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Wisconsin to whom I referred is Mr. STAFFORD. He supplied no information on the subject, but simply referred to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. If my colleague will permit, I may not have supplied any more information than the gentleman from Michigan furnished me, but I intended to supply a little bit more.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Michigan was trying to be careful not to supply misinformation.

Mr. DOWELL. I am not sure we are getting a great deal of information from these distinguished gentlemen.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to suggest that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] merely mentioned the fact that the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in this city urged that instead of having the Government supply the electric power for the Washington Monument that a private corporation supply it on the ground of economy. The change was made, I understand, and I have just asked the gentleman from Michigan, chairman of the subcommittee, if the facts bore out the recommendation made by the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds and whether by making that change there has been a reduction in the public expenditure.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is a question of fact.

Mr. CRAMTON. The operation of the Washington Monument and all of that question referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is in an entirely different bill, with which I am not connected, and I can say my only information on that subject is that which is furnished by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and of course I would not dispute that statement made by him.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Nor would I dispute the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], because I know it to be true. I remember when that recommendation was made. But what I ask now is whether the subsequent facts have justified the recommendation? Has there been a lessening of expenditure? I know that there is a persistent propaganda always going on here to have changes made so that the Government shall not be able to supply anything for its own use, but that private corporations, which make a profit out of it, shall supply every need of the Government. I merely asked for information as to whether the facts have justified that particular recommendation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. In the hearings a couple of years past it was developed that the Washington Monument was having its own power furnished by a small integral unit that was very expensive to maintain, or rather the cost of generating that small unit of power was greater than what the power could be furnished by the Potomac Electric Light & Power Co. I can not recall offhand the number of men who were required to generate that small power, but the showing was so obviously in the interest of the Government for economy in this one particular instance that the committee discontinued in last year's appropriation bill the employment of the six or seven men engaged in the generation of this small power and authorized, or rather permitted, the purchase of power from a private utility company. There is no question in that instance that there was a decided benefit to the Government. It stands to reason that a small project for the development of small power would cost more than a large one, and I think it will be clear, even to my colleague from Wisconsin, from that statement of facts that it is better to purchase power where it was generated in large quantities at a low rate from a private company and it would cost less than by having it generated in the way it had been for years. With that statement I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Northwest: For paving Georgia Avenue Military Road to Dahlia Street, 60 feet wide, $85,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, page 24, line 1, after the word "Avenue" I move to insert a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 22, after the word "Avenue" insert a comma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, this $85,000 is for paving Georgia Avenue to Dahlia Street. Georgia Avenue is already paved; not with the kind of boulevard paving that the gentleman expects to see with this $85,000, but it is already paved. Oh, I presume that the gentleman from Michigan is one of the persons whom the commissioners bumped over this road as outlined in the Washington Herald this morning in an editorial, and they succeeded in bumping him out of $85,000. The Herald says:

In one respect the House bill is to be commended. That is in the matter of street appropriations. Gentlemen of Congress have evidently had some good bumping over District thoroughfares that should long ago have been paved. So the House Appropriations Committee is liberal enough to add $44,700 over Budget estimates. The total allowed streets is $521,200 over appropriations for the current fiscal year. If distinguished Senators can also be given a physical demonstration of street needs here the Senate will doubtless add to the House allowances.

In other words, they are going to take the Senators up and bump them over Georgia Avenue and several other roads.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not?

Mr. BLANTON. Georgia Avenue is paved now with various kinds of pavement. For some distance there are cobblestones. There is some bumping when you travel over there in fine limousines, and it is a kind of bumping that Congressmen do not like sometimes when out on rough roads. But why not take this $85,000 and go to the streets that are muddy and impassable; impassable in muddy weather in wagons, even, much more in automobiles? There are a good many of them in the District where poor people live who have not got limousines. They do not even get to be bumped over them in these demonstration cars of the commissioners.

I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan if he wants to ask me a question.

Mr. CRAMTON. I just want to contribute to the discussion.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not believe they bumped the chairman. He was subcommittee chairman, and they had fallen out with him already. There was a statement in the paper to the effect that they did bump the other three Congressmen in this demonstration ride. I can imagine their feelings when they bumped over these bumpy roads and enabled those Congressmen to feel the real need of paving those streets.

But not only is Georgia Avenue paved, but on the next page you provide $54,000 for Nichols Avenue, in the southeast. That is already paved. The gentleman will not deny that it is paved in a way. There is a pretty good pavement there now. You also provide $40,000 for paving Canal Road from Aqueduct Bridge to Foxhall Road, which is used when you go down and take the boat for Norfolk——

Mr. CRAMTON. No; that would be a long way around to get to the Norfolk boat. This Canal Road connects with the Chain Bridge Road.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. It is already paved, and you are making an appropriation to improve it still further. It is paved now, and it is not muddy in muddy weather. Your automobile does not sink down in it as it does in some roads and streets and alleys that are not yet provided for in this bill. Yet for these three propositions alone you are providing an appropriation of $174,000 for streets already paved, and this practice ought to stop.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I think the House is entitled to one or two suggestions about this matter. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] speaks of going into these other places and paving streets for poor people. I want to remind him that this Georgia Avenue leads out to Walter Reed Hospital, and I do not think he will object to our making that thoroughfare as smooth as possible for carrying the wounded soldiers out to that hospital.

Mr. BLANTON. We have extended Sixteenth Street right up to Walter Reed Hospital. They all come in at Sixteenth Street, the finest boulevard in the country, except that there is one in Philadelphia that is better.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The traffic on Sixteenth Street is getting so thick that it is not safe to take the patients out there. There ought to be another route.

Mr. BLANTON. I am familiar with that street. I drive out on Sixteenth Street.

Mr. CRAMTON. This is a shorter road, and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] says, one more convenient for access to Walter Reed. But now as to the policy involved in these items, where the gentleman from Texas says that a street once paved ought not to be paved again, I do not think that theory will find much support anywhere in the country. Streets do wear out. Georgia Avenue is at present paved. There is no part of this that is of a block surface. It is more or less a smooth surface. This is a main highway, a main artery running out into Maryland, and the expense of maintaining the pavement, such as the section under debate here, is very great.

The cost of renewal and the patching of spots here and there is very heavy, and all that expense of repairing is at the expense of the Government—three-fifths the District and two-fifths the United States. All that repair work is at the expense of the Government. This expense for repaving will eliminate maintenance costs for many years to come, and of this $85,000 $42,500 is contributed by the adjacent property owners, and of the $85,000 only $17,000 comes out of the Federal Treasury; so that while the immediate cost this year is a little more to the Federal Government to put $17,000 into the paving there, rather than pay the 40 per cent of repair costs, in a very few years there will be a decided economy. That is true of the other main arteries provided for in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOWELL in the chair). Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The Washington Post this morning says the gentleman's committee has increased the Budget estimate for street improvements by $29,000, while the Herald says it has increased it $34,000. I ask the gentleman which is correct.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is refreshing occasionally to find the Herald correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the administration paper is wrong to the tune of the difference?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think that is a safe deduction. The $44,700 represents an additional charge on the Treasury of a little less than $9,000, and in a bill that carries $8,000,000 from the Federal Treasury we thought we could go $9,000 above the Budget estimate without any great shock to our consciences.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to an inquiry?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. While we are talking about these Humpty Dumpty roads, I would like to ask the gentleman about Connecticut Avenue. In resurfacing that road to the Rock Creek Bridge a shoulder is put on the road beside the trolley tracks. It seems to me that by granting permission to put that shoulder on that right of way you are giving an absolute monopoly to the railroad company to the central part of the street, for which they probably pay nothing. I should like to ask the gentleman if that is true?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not say that any statement the gentleman from New York makes is not true.

Mr. HICKS. No; I am asking the gentleman whether they are paying anything for that privilege?

Mr. CRAMTON. There has been a very sharp controversy about that curbing. There has been no specific authority from Congress to allow that curbing to be placed there. There has been a great deal of controversy about it. A short time ago I read in the newspapers that the commissioners had abandoned that policy. At any rate, the item in the bill is for the full paving on each side of the street. There is no authorization for that shoulder to be put there, and it is my understanding—although I will not be positive about it—that that shoulder proposition is to be abandoned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Major Besson told me as we were going over the street several days ago that they were going to knock that shoulder off just as soon as they had this pavement put down.

Mr. HICKS. Who gave permission to put the shoulder on in the first place, or who took the responsibility of doing it?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HICKS. It seems to me it is an absolute violation of the rights of the people to have that shoulder put there, and have that much of the street thrown out of public use.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. More than that, does not the gentleman think that shoulder is exceedingly dangerous?

Mr. HICKS. Absolutely.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Not only does the street car company pay nothing for the use of the street except the 4 per cent gross receipts tax, but there has been a great deal of complaint on the part of residents of that section that they have not kept their part of the street in repair; that the stones they put on the middle of the street are knocked out onto the pavement and in that way are very destructive to it.

Mr. HICKS. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] to say that that shoulder is to be removed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; that is the statement that was made to me.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I think everybody concedes that it was a mistake to put it there.

Mr. HICKS. It is brand-new and has just been put there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I called attention to that shoulder, and Major Besson said that when they came to pave the street they were going to knock it off.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York need not be concerned over Connecticut Avenue, because the committee have granted $45,000 and $17,000 and $64,000, so that they will have plenty of money to cut that shoulder off.

Mr. HICKS. I am afraid the money will be used to put more shoulders on.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Northwest: For paving Woodley Road, Twenty-seventh Street to Twenty-eighth Street, $4,800.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the committee [Mr. CRAMTON]. I desire to commend the members of the subcommittee and also the Appropriations Committee on what I consider the very liberal policy they have adopted in the matter of street improvements, especially in view of the practice that has been established in the committee of confining themselves exclusively to the items recommended by the Director of the Budget. I feel that in providing for these unpaved streets, the paving of which will cost the Federal Government only about 20 per cent, they have done something that is very commendable and that will be very beneficial to various sections of the District and to the people of Washington generally.

I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, however, if the matter of Wisconsin Avenue has ever been brought to the attention of the subcommittee either by the Director of the Budget or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia? I think that is one of the worst streets in the city, not only that portion which is macadamized but also the cobblestone-paved portion of the street down to Georgetown. The heavy cars have broken down the cobblestone paving of that street, and it is almost impassable. Last year I made an attempt to incorporate an amendment that would provide for the repaving of this street, which is certainly in a deplorable condition.

Mr. CRAMTON. There was nothing for Wisconsin Avenue in the estimates this year, either as prepared by the commissioners or as submitted by the Budget. I think I have in mind the character of that street, and I am going to ask the gentleman from Maryland, if he has not already done so, to examine Sixth Street SW., where the commissioners have been experimenting with the use of asphalt dressing over an old cobblestone pavement. One of the papers this morning criticized those experiments, but I think they have been successful on Sixth Street in transforming one of those very old cobblestone pavements, at a very little cost, into a splendid pavement.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the scientific way to do it, and that is what they ought to do with all of them.

Mr. CRAMTON. It seems to me that the gentleman might be interested in such a thing being done with the portion of Wisconsin Avenue that he refers to; but there was nothing for that street in the estimates before the committee this year from any source.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Does the chairman believe it is possible to make such an improvement on Wisconsin Avenue, that portion of it which is paved with cobblestones, out of the repair fund provided in this section of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not want to give an answer to the gentleman that I would not be positive about. I can not inform the gentleman whether they have the authority to do this resurfacing out of the repair fund or not where the resurfacing is more than a block in length.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The committee made a very material increase in the maintenance fund.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; very material. The maintenance item was increased, on city streets, from $460,000 to $550,000, as estimated, and on suburban roads it was increased from $225,000 to $275,000.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In further comment on Wisconsin Avenue, that is one of the avenues by which the city is entered from one of the leading thoroughfares going out to the western country?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes; it connects up with the Lincoln Highway and the Old Trails Road.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The particular part to which the gentleman refers is below that.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. They are both bad.

Mr. CRAMTON. I know the road is rough.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It has been in very bad condition for a number of years.

Mr. FESS. The comment I want to make is that from Springfield, Ohio, clear on through all the States the road is in admirable condition outside of one or two very short stretches, and it is not a very pleasant experience after driving over this splendid road to strike Washington over this rough Wisconsin Avenue. That is the point I was making.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is the only road in America built exclusively by Federal funds—the Cumberland Road—the construction of which was begun in 1812.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be given two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. While on the subject of roads I want to say, in answer to some statements that have been made by some gentlemen, particularly the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], deprecating the contribution of 20 per cent of Federal funds toward the paving of streets that have not previously been paved and to the cost of which the property owners abutting on each side pay 50 per cent, the Federal Government contributes 50 per cent to the building of many roads in the States—the State of Maryland, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not contribute to the paving in any city in any State with over 2,000 population.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The Federal Government contributes to the building of roads in Texas and Maryland.

Mr. MADDEN. In the country, but not in the city.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The plans for the roads are prepared by the State road commissions of various States and must be submitted to the Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture, and it is no more a wrong policy for the Federal Government to contribute to the paving of streets in the Capital City than it is to the building of roads throughout the States of the Union under the guise of building post roads. Away back in 1824 there was a presidential campaign fought out on the issue whether the Federal Government had the power to construct internal improvements and reconstruct the old national road, officially known as the Cumberland Road.

Mr. MADDEN. As far as I am concerned, I do not think the Federal Government ought to contribute to the building of any road.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The gentleman from Texas laid great emphasis on the fact that 20 per cent of the cost of paving the streets comes out of the Federal Government, whereas the Federal Government contributes 50 per cent to the construction of roads in Maryland and in Texas and in other States.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I do not blame the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] in his efforts to get every dollar of appropriation he can to build good roads in the Capital toward Maryland. That is the reason that his people send him back here and give him such big majorities, both Democrat and Republican.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Do not the residents of the District contribute to the good roads in Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. Not for the streets of any city in Texas. The citizens of my State do not enjoy a tax rate of only $1.30 on the $100.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Oh, those are local taxes. I am talking about Federal taxes.

Mr. BLANTON. You look at the record of my district and you will see that the Federal tax paid is as large in proportion as from the gentleman's district in Maryland. But what I am objecting to, and the same objection was raised by the gentleman from Illinois, is to the city improvement for residential sections. I do not object to the Government paying for any pavement around its property or buildings that are used for public affairs. But these are residential sections, out in the silk-stocking neighborhoods around Connecticut Avenue, miles from the Capitol, where the people who own the property build new buildings, residences and apartment houses, and get the Government to come in and pay a substantial part for the paving of the streets and alleys, and I say it is not right that that should be paid by the people of Maryland or Texas or Illinois. It ought to be done by the people in those residential sections of Washington who reap the benefit of it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Take the street, for instance, in the residential section, 60 feet wide.

Mr. BLANTON. All the street along Connecticut Avenue is 60 feet wide.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Take the residential section where the streets are occupied by residents in moderate circumstances, would the gentleman assess the property owner for paving that street 60 feet in width, a man who has no automobile?

Mr. BLANTON. They do it in my State.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. They do not build roads 60 feet wide there.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes. The gentleman is mistaken. We have streets wider than that. The main street through my home city is wider than 60 feet. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not object to a single thing that is proper, but I do object to these real estate owners becoming multimillionaires putting this expenditure on the people of this Government.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. What does the gentleman think of the people building roads through his district? Is he in favor of that?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Contributed to by the Federal Government?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. How can the gentleman differentiate the two cases?

Mr. BLANTON. The roads are public highways. In building roads through the States, when they come to an incorporated town they stop. The street improvement is done by the city.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. What is the difference? You are building roads for rich motorists.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me tell you the result. You take the Willard Hotel in Washington. It has paid this year on its common stock 33 per cent dividends. The Washington Hotel has paid on its common stock this year 27 per cent dividends. Take the Raleigh Hotel here in Washington, where many of my colleagues live. It has paid 22 per cent dividends on its common stock.

A MEMBER. How about the Wardman?

Mr. BLANTON. That is in a class by itself. I can not get up that high. These large dividends on the common stock are made possible by reason of the ridiculous 60–40 fiscal relation between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I might say to the gentleman in regard to hotels that they have used the public streets for the taxicabs which serve the patrons of those hotels. They have turned the use of the public streets over to the exclusive use of these taxicabs. If the gentleman wants to do something helpful, there is a problem that is more vicious than the one he presents. The public streets are being used for taxicab stands.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, that to an extent has been broken up. The monopoly is transferred to the terminal station. A Congressman or a Senator has to drive into a second or third removed roadway to get into the terminal station. Only one particular line of taxicabs can go into the terminal station and unload at the main entrance. Everybody else has to go in at a second or third entrance. That is the main monopoly. At most of the hotels you can go down there right now and park your car with just the same right as any other automobile or taxicab in this District.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Condemnation: For purchase or condemnation of streets, roads, and alleys, $1,000.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph in order to ask the chairman of the committee what this paragraph means. It provides for the purchase or condemnation of streets, roads, and alleys, $1,000. What streets and roads and alleys are they going to condemn for $1,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is condemnation of land for streets.

Mr. DENISON. If it means that why not put it in that way? Ought not the words "land for" be inserted after the word "of"?

Mr. CRAMTON. It has been so carried for many years. Colonel Keller says with respect to this that they use the money generally to buy a small piece of property necessary for making an alley more convenient in width, in cases where it is impossible to have the land dedicated, or to modernize an old alley to meet the requirements of the present day as to convenience and size. It is an emergency item, for which a small amount is now expended.

Mr. DENISON. Should it not be condemnation of land for streets and alleys?

Mr. CRAMTON. I suppose so; but they get the money spent just as well under the present language. I would not object to the amendment.

Mr. DENISON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move as an amendment that after the word "of" in line 8, page 27, there be inserted the words "land for."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 27, line 8, after the word "of" insert the words "land for."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman recalls that we had up the matter of the establishment of an archives building some time ago. The recommendation would require a condemnation of a street called Ohio Street. Is it possible that in this case the language might mean that you might at some time want to close a street?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not imagine that it would be a condemnation proceeding. It would be the closing of a street by authority of Congress in the case the gentleman speaks of. I do not see any objection to the amendment, although this existing language has served the purpose for a good many years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the amendment. I ask the chairman of the committee whether from this appropriation expenses are not paid for condemnation proceedings?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am advised not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Years back Congress used to pass special bills authorizing the opening of streets throughout the District, and if the land could not be obtained by purchase, then condemnation proceedings were to be had. Where is the item in the bill to provide for such character of expenses? There must be some provision in the bill authorizing the payment of condemnation expenses when streets are opened.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will look on page 27, line 13, does not that general item provide for that?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; that applies only to certain provisions, whatever they may be, which were contained in the District appropriation act for 1914. I agree that if this item is solely for the purchase of small tracts of land, it would be better phraseology to insert the words "land for"; but what is the use of making uncertain a provision that may embarrass and restrain the commissioners? I think the gentleman should withdraw the amendment, because no real good can come from it and it may hamper the work of the commissioners.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Can the gentleman from Michigan tell us in a few words what that provision is in the appropriation act of 1914?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it is the general act that governs condemnation proceedings to secure land for street purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not know what limitations were included in that act. I have sent for it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not that at hand.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no provision for appropriations for the purpose of paying expenses of condemnation proceedings.

Mr. CRAMTON. Colonel Keller states that the money in this item is used for the purchase of the land, and no part of this $1,000, I feel sure, is for the expense of condemnation proceedings.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield, I am not familiar with the language that has been used in the bill but I do happen to be familiar with the language used in my State for condemning streets. It never used condemnation of land for a street or an alley, but it is directly condemned, and I rather think it would be a mistake to change this phraseology which has been in existence.

Mr. DENISON. It is condemning land for the purpose of a street.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The phraseology is "condemning the street." You condemn a street through a piece of property or an alley through a piece of property.

Mr. DENISON. I think the gentleman from Ohio is wrong; you condemn land for street purposes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Perhaps it may be the wronge phraseology, but in the State of Ohio it is the condemning of a street.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that in the case of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tunnel under Howard Street in Baltimore the question came up of the city condemning the street rights, and it was held that the fee of the street remained in the Howard heirs and they got $50,000 or $60,000 from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for the tunnel. They condemn street rights and not the land.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this language has been in the bill for many years, and they are getting the money under it for the purpose for which it is necessary, and I see no objection to continuing it as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To carry out the provisions contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914 which authorize the commissioners to open, extend, or widen any street, avenue, road, or highway to conform with the plan of the permanent system of highways in that portion of the District of Columbia outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown there is appropriated such sum as is necessary for said purpose during the fiscal year 1924, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and unauthorized by law. It is a change of existing law.

Mr. CRAMTON. Just to what does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BLANTON. Page 27, ending with line 21.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this is entirely and directly based upon existing law and clearly is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. That was merely a rider on an appropriation bill, I call to the attention of the gentleman, in the year 1914. It was a rider on an appropriation bill. It did not become permanent law, but it was merely for a year. This is an indeterminate appropriation and it may amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars. We do not know; there is no limitation placed upon it whatever. It says, "There is appropriated such sum as is necessary for said purpose." We are absolutely taking the bridle off and giving them entry into the door of the Treasury without any restriction at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman has concluded, the District of Columbia act for 1914 carried this provision:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to open, extend, or widen any street, avenue, road, or highway, to conform with the plan of the permanent system of highways in that portion of the District of Columbia outside the cities of Washington and Georgetown—

And so forth. With the usual directions. The essential language is, "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to open, extend, or widen any street," and so forth. That is permanent legislation. It does not say that "hereafter" they are authorized, it is true. It does not say in the Constitution that you have got to use the word "hereafter" in order to make it permanent.

It is clearly apparent that the language gives a permanent authority. It does not say for the current year. It is not in connection with any item in the appropriation act. It is not tied to any specific appropriation for the year. It is a legislative provision of a permanent character that was put in an appropriation act that year. Now, I take it if that is to be conceded, then the gentleman will have no objection to the language in the bill. The language in the bill simply gives the money with which to carry out the authority conferred in the permanent legislation.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. If the gentleman will yield, does not the act of 1914 also provide that the damages assessed in a suit of condemnation shall be equal to the benefits, and this simply provides the revenue for the paying of the benefits——

Mr. CRAMTON. That is one of the portions of the act, but I think the only question that can be before the Chair raised on the point is whether this language, "The commissioners are hereby authorized," is permanent law. I think there can be no reasonable controversy about it that it is.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will remember, in discussing this very point the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, our late lamented colleague, Mr. Mann, laid down the rule here, and he went back for years and called attention to the fact that a provision to be permanent law in an appropriation bill must use that word "hereafter" to make it permanent law, and held that without the word "hereafter" in there it was held to apply for that particular year. I am not making this point of order captiously. I think it is an unwise power to be placed in the hands of these commissioners not to be obliged to come to Congress when they want to open up a street. If they want to close a street, I do not care whether it is a quarter of a block or a half a block or half a mile, they have to come to Congress and get the power to close the street. If they have to get the power to close a street by coming to Congress, they should come to Congress in order to get the power to open the street; and I think it is an unwise power to be placed in their hands.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I simply suggest this further consideration, that in that same act the preceding paragraph has reference to this same general subject of highways for the District, and it provides that "the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized whenever in their judgment the public interests require it," and so forth. It does not say during that year or during the year after, but "whenever the public interests require it" to prepare a new highway plan for any portion of the District of Columbia and to submit the same for their approval. Then comes the next paragraph which was offered, which was to supplement that authority to acquire by condemnation land for the purposes of highways in carrying out that general highway plan.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I certainly will have to dissent from the position taken by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], in which he claims to reflect the opinion of our lamented distinguished parliamentary leader, that you could not in phraseology make permanent law on an appropriation bill without the use of the word "hereafter."

Mr. BLANTON. Or words that mean that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, now the gentleman is qualifying it—or words that admit it, of course. It has been held from time to time by the Comptroller of the Treasury in construing acts of Congress that the purpose is determined from the phraseology; where the language shows that character of permanency that it is intended for more than the appropriation year, then it is construed as permanent legislation. The very purpose of clause 2 of section 1 is to prevent legislation of a permanent character being carried on an appropriation bill, and it is liable and vulnerable to a point of order. Appropriation bill after appropriation bill has been passed here with permanent legislation.

If the Chair will examine the item under consideration he will see from the entire scope of it that it was to be permanent; that it was not merely for the year then pending. In that bill no appropriation even is carried for that year. It is at the close of the item relative to highways, inserted there for the definite purpose of making it permanent law, and the gentleman can not escape it.

It is so in nearly every appropriation bill that is presented.

In the War Department appropriation bill, now under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations, there is item after item where the comptroller has construed the phraseology to be permanent without the use of the word "hereafter," because on its face the purpose is indicated that it was the purpose of Congress to make it permanent. How ridiculous it would be for the Comptroller of the Treasury to hold that this language, permanent in character, was only intended for the fiscal year! Its very breadth and scope indicate that it was for all time, and that is the policy of Congress in carrying this utilizable appropriation for expenses.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, may I make this further observation that if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is right, and if that legislation in 1914 was not permanent in character, then there has not been since that day any legislation upon which to base condemnations for street purposes. But on the contrary the authorities of the District, year after year since 1914, have been proceeding under that authority. The courts have sustained condemnation proceedings under that particular provision. The courts recognize it as permanent law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the very phraseology which has already been referred to by the chairman of the committee in the preceding paragraph shows that it was intended to be permanent. For instance, "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized." When? "Whenever in their judgment the public interest requires it." Not during the fiscal year 1914, but whenever in their judgment the public interest requires them to prepare a new highway plan and submit the same for approval to the Highway Commission under the act of March 2, 1893, they are given that authority, and the following clause amplifies and supplements that. It is the paragraph that makes it workable. "The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to open, extend, or widen any street, avenue, road, or highway." If you will examine the legislative annals of this Nation you will find that prior to the enactment of this law there were at almost every session when District business was considered bills coming from the District of Columbia Committee for opening of streets. Since that authorization was enacted—permanent, as I contend—there has not been one bill presented for opening or widening any street. It is under this authorization that the District Commissioners function.

The CHAIRMAN. This question is rather an involved one. The Chair is going to ask the chairman of the committee to defer the decision on this point until to-morrow, and asks that the paragraph be passed over without prejudice until to-morrow.

Mr. CRAMTON. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee do now rise. That will leave the matter pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the Government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, during the consideration of the ship subsidy bill the House granted me permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I was detained from the House on account of sickness. I desire to renew that request now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the ship subsidy bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been so amply and ably discussed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], and my colleague [Mr. BLAND] from Virginia that little is left for discussion which has not already been covered by these conclusive arguments. I desire, therefore, to direct the attention of the House for a moment to the pending motion to strike out all of section 410, including (a), (b), (c), and (d).

Section 410 (a) is as follows:

Whenever the board determines that in order to promote the welfare of the United States the operation of vessels in any particular service or of any particular type and kind is desirable and necessary, and that the rate of compensation authorized under section 404 is insufficient to induce the operation of vessels in such service or of such type and kind, the board in making the contract for compensation may provide therein for the increase of the rate of compensation authorized in respect to such vessel under said section to such an extent as it deems necessary to procure the establishment and maintenance of such service and the operation of vessels in such service or the operation of vessels of such type and kind; but the rate of compensation as so increased shall not exceed twice the rate authorized by said section. As used in this subdivision and in section 411 the term "service" includes the route on which the vessel operates, the frequency of sailings, and the speed which she maintains.

An examination of the above provision clearly shows an attempt on the part of the framers of the bill to take from Congress the power of legislation and place such power in the Shipping Board. If this be so, of course it is beyond the power of Congress to accomplish.

Article I, section 1, of the Constitution provides "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives." This is an exclusive grant of every legislative power to the Congress, and, therefore, the executive, the judiciary, and all others arms of the Government are excluded from its use. This principle is so well recognized as to need no further discussion. Does the above paragraph, then, take from Congress the power of legislation and give it to the Shipping Board?

Under section 404 of the bill the rate of compensation is determined by Congress for all vessels. This rate is carefully and specifically determined by the committee in six pages of the bill embracing sections 404, 405, and 406. Having determined with precision what that compensation should be, the above paragraph (a) says that if the Shipping Board—not the Congress that has the power to legislate—but if the Shipping Board determines it is "desirable and necessary" to have vessels of a particular type in its service and the Shipping Board—not Congress—determines that the compensation under section 404 is insufficient to induce such vessels to enter such service, the Shipping Board—not Congress—may provide for a change of the rate in section 404 and increase it "to such extent as it"—not Congress—"deems necessary," and so forth.

The power to exercise judgment, the power to exercise discretion, the power of determination—that is, of fixing a status as permanent amidst a multitude of conflicting facts and of making that status final—that is the power of legislation. But see what a latitude by this paragraph is given to the Shipping Board, "whenever the board determines that in order to promote the welfare of the United States." What a vision! What powers of determination and decision! What unlimited scope for the exercise of judgment and discretion! "The welfare of the United States" is at stake. That welfare follows the commerce of the world and goes with every vessel that plows the seas. It is closely woven into State, interstate, and international commerce. It sits at the council table of the Nation directing and controlling our international relations, and reaches as truly the hovel of the poor as the mansion of the rich. A power with no limit but its own vision, with no restraint but its own desires, and this unlimited power is attempted to be taken from the Congress of the United States to be exercised by the Shipping Board. The power to fix this subsidy or bonus under all the circumstances of the case is a legislative power. This has been done in sections 404, 405, and 406, and having been done this bill—section 410—seeks to abolish sections 404, 405, and 406 and lodge this power in an abortive legislative agency known as the Shipping Board.

Second, it gives to the Shipping Board the power to legislate for "the welfare of the United States" when Congress itself has no power to legislate for "the welfare of the United States." Can Congress, itself incapable of doing a thing, vest in another the power to do what it can not itself do? Some ambitious statesmen have in times past invoked the power of Congress to legislate for "the general welfare of the United States," but it remains for this Congress to produce those bold enough to suggest a further extension of that power in its application to "the welfare of the United States" without the semblance of constitutional sanction. The principle involved here is simple. Congress may construct a piece of legislation complete in itself, except, first, as to the time of its going into operation, and that time may be a fixed point, as July 1, 1923, or, second, upon the happening of a certain fact or event, which fact or event is to be determined by a designated party or agency, but such party or agency can not change provisions already fixed and established in the law. The paragraph we are considering (a) violates this principle. Sections 404, 405, and 406 fix and determine the amount of subsidy to be granted, while this paragraph gives the Shipping Board the power to change these and establish a different rate of subsidy.

Two cases may be quoted—and there are many others that could be—which I take from the speech of Senator THOMAS J. WALSH, of Montana, in the Senate of the United States on May 8, 1922:

The legislature can not delegate its power to make a law; but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. (Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 491, 498.)

The result of all the cases on this subject is that a law must be complete, in all its terms and provisions, when it leaves the legislative branch of the Government, and nothing must be left to the judgment of the electors or other appointee or delegate of the legislature, so that, in form and substance, it is a law, in all its details, in praesenti, but which may be left to take effect in future, if necessary, upon the ascertainment of any prescribed fact or event. (Dowling v. Lancashire Insurance Co., 92 Wis. 63.)

This principle is strongly affirmed in Field v. Clark (143 U. S. p. 692 et seq.), wherein it is decided that upon the determination by the President of certain facts and the announcement of such facts, that ipso facto duties on certain articles were changed, not to such duties as might be named by the President but to those specifically named in the bill. The President's function then was in no wise legislative, but declaratory. Congress in the bill prescribed the duty which was to take effect when the President declared a certain fact.

This section 410 (a) we, therefore, hold is unconstitutional and void, and while the section is viciously bad in principle, in that it gives to any board the right to double the subsidy to be paid (that is bad enough), but when it is noticed that this bill provides for this as a continuing appropriation for 10 years, during which time this board will probably change its personnel in its entirety after we pass this bill, we are actually granting this great legislative power to a body of men that we know nothing of. The present board may command the confidence of some who believe that they would not use this power unjustly; but in a year or two the board will begin to change, and during the length of this bill we are safe in saying that not a member of the present board will be on it at the end of 10 years, and we are actually granting these great powers to unknown men.

I have never known a bill in Congress that contained as many vicious provisions as the pending bill, and if passed in the form in which it came from the committee by the Republican Party, I think will relieve the Democrats of the necessity of a campaign two years hence for the Presidency. It is a fitting complement to the Fordney tariff bill. It is full of special legislation for the great interests of the country at the expense of the great mass of the people. If it passes this House in its present form, it will never pass the Senate, in my judgment.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1467. An act to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 4122. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Interstate Toll Bridge Co. for construction of a bridge across Red River between Montague County, Tex., and Jefferson County, Okla.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 214. An act to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 4116. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Missouri, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Francis River, in the State of Missouri; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4187. An act to extend the time for payment of charges due on reclamation projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

S. 4096. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BANKHEAD, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two days, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "Slacker Lists," I desire to call attention to a letter from The Adjutant General's office, dated December 30, 1922.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the fifth day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but, on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of, the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 30, 1922.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have the honor to transmit herewith for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 5, 1923, lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between November 5 and December 4, 1922, both dates inclusive. A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also inclosed herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT C. DAVIS,
The Adjutant General.

The following names have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD since the publication of such names:

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 1, COUNTY OF KERN, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

1619 Martimer Peter Shea, Standard Oil Co., Bakersfield, Calif.

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 4, BOSTON, MASS.

507 John Ville, 6 Chestnut Street, Boston, Mass.

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 3, COUNTY OF WAYNE, STATE OF MICHIGAN.

572 Anthony Loss, 37 Twelfth Street, Wyandotte, Mich.

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 10, CITY OF MINNEAPOLIS, STATE OF MINNESOTA.

1760b Fred LaPlante (F. La Plant), 2915 North Third Street, Minneapolis, Minn.

LOCAL BOARD FOR COUNTY OF CUSTER, STATE OF MONTANA.

2041 Geo. W. Flock, Kruger, Mont. (Seneca, Nebr.).

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 1, MIDDLESEX COUNTY, N. J.

2085 Erine Hazen (Aaron Isaac Hazan), 89 Morris, New Brunswick, N. J.

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 40, CITY OF PHILADELPHIA, STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

2358 Michael Hoffman, 1131 Wolf Street, Philadelphia, Pa. (219 Kingston, Brooklyn, N. Y.).

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 2, CITY OF KNOXVILLE, STATE OF TENNESSEE.

458 Robert A. McDaniel (Robert A. McDaniels), 411 Dale Avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

LOCAL BOARD FOR THE COUNTY OF SULLIVAN, STATE OF TENNESSEE.

2234 Nibie Osborne Harrison (Nevil Osborne Harrison, Nebie Osborn Harrison), 552 Lake Street, Britsol, Tenn.

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 3, CITY OF NASHVILLE, STATE OF TENNESSEE.

5 Jesse (Jessie) Stokes, 1429 Fifteenth Avenue south, Nashville, Tenn.

LOCAL BOARD FOR COUNTY OF LEWIS, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

4008a Leo Edward Baranowicz, Adna, Wash.

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 2, COUNTY OF HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

640 George A. Reis, Pearl City, Oahu.

LOCAL BOARD FOR COUNTY OF MAUI, TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

480 Robert W. Kamakahi, Halawa, Molokai, Territory of Hawaii (Robert W. Kamakahi, jr., Pukoo, Maui, Hawaii).

The men whose names appear below, and who were under the jurisdiction of the local boards named, were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who, since the publication of the lists, has been found to have actually served in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included; nor is that of any man who, though he rendered no service during the period mentioned, has, since the publication of his name, been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which, for any of the aforementioned reasons, should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should, for any of these reasons, likewise be removed, notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13690) granting a pension to Kittie C. Simpson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 13691) granting a pension to Phillip S. Jackson; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6757. By Mr. COLE of Iowa: Petitions signed by Fred Drew and 21 others, residents of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, for the abolishment of discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6758. Also, petitions signed by William Fisher and 21 others, residents of the fifth congressional district of Iowa, for the abolishment of discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6759. Also, resolutions adopted by the Philathea Class, of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, a class with a membership of 150 women (submitted by George C. Claassen, Mrs. F. C. Waples, and Mrs. Gail Yessler, committee), regarding conditions in the Near East; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6760. Also, petitions signed by F. W. Schencken and 42 others, residents of Keystone, Iowa, for the abolishment of discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6761. By Mr. CULLEN: Resolutions adopted December 21, 1922, by Harry Boland Council of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, favoring the United States protesting against the barbarous executions of prisoners now being carried on by the so-called Irish Free State; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6762. Also, resolutions adopted at seventeenth annual meeting of the Empire State Forest Products Association, urging that the Director of the Budget and the Congress should give favorable consideration to the request for funds for the establishment of a northeastern forest experiment station; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6763. By Mr. FESS: A petition in support of joint resolution now pending in Congress purporting to extend immediate aid to the people of the German and Austrian Republics, now famine-stricken owing to scant crops and money depreciation, signed by citizens of New Bremen, Ohio; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6764. By Mr. KIESS: Petitions of citizens of Williamsport, Pa., with reference to tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6765. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Hon. Frederick M. Davenport, chairman committee on taxation and retrenchment, the senate of the State of New York, favoring the constitutional amendment to eliminate tax-exempt securities; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6766. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of the California Anti-Vivisection Society (Inc.), of Los Angeles, Calif., indorsing the bill introduced by Congressman Albert Johnson, of Washington, to abolish poison-gas experiments on living animals, House bill 12605; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6767. Also, petition of the Matzger Chocolate Co., of San Francisco, Calif., urging the repeal of the 3 per cent excise tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 6, 1923.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we turn toward Thee this morning supplicating Thy guidance, and as we look out upon a world in distress we beseech of Thee for Thy revelation to all the peoples of earth. Give wisdom in deliberation, give judgment and guidance continually, and so enable us in our own land and life to realize the highest interests to Thy glory. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, January 3, 1923, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

REPORT OF THE CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of that company for the year 1922, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a list of documents and papers on the files of the Interior Department not needed in the conduct of business and having no permanent value or historic interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. NORBECK and Mr. MYERS members of the committee on the part of the Senate, and ordered that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof.

PETITIONS.

Mr. LADD presented the petition of Heinrich Kuball and 14 other citizens of Dresden and vicinity in the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STERLING presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of South Dakota, praying for the passage of legislation repealing the discriminatory tax in existing law on small-arms ammunition and firearms, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MCNARY, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 992) thereon.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4028) for the relief of John N. Halladay, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 994) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3553) for the relief of the family of Lieut. Henry N. Fallon (retired), reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 991) thereon.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 993) thereon.

I give notice that I expect to call up the bill for consideration on Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4281) to appropriate $500,000 for the purchase of seed grain to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of eastern Washington, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. NICHOLSON:

A bill (S. 4282) for the purchase of the statue "The Pilgrim Mother and Child of the Mayflower" and presentation of same to the Government of Great Britain; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 4283) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to require operators of motor vehicles in the District of Columbia to secure a permit, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 4284) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth F. Long; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 4285) defining the legal status of all children under 18 years of age who violate Federal statutes, the creation of a United States parental court, and defining the duties and jurisdiction of a chief United States parental guardian; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 4286) for the relief of James Francis McDonald and Sarah Elizabeth McDonald; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 4287) to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to amend the Federal reserve act; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 263) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to accept membership for the United States in the Permanent Association of the International Road Congresses; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

STATE TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11939) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF MOTOR VEHICLES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4237) to control the operation of motor vehicles in the District of Columbia, to provide for indemnity bonds or insurance policies, to fix penalties, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS OF DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 to aid the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind in the city of Washington, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13660, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for aid and support of the National Library for the Blind in the city of Washington, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13660, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read, and I ask for its immediate consideration. It is simply a resolution calling for information, to which, I am sure, there will be no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have asked that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 399) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the head of each department and head of each independent bureau or commission of the Government in the city of Washington, including the District Commissioners, be, and they are hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate as early as may be practicable the number of passenger automobiles in use by such department, independent bureau, or commission; the name of the official or person to whom such automobile is assigned; the cost thereof; the cost of the upkeep and operation thereof; the salary or pay of chauffeur furnished, if one is furnished, to the end that the Senate may have accurate information as to the number of automobiles, the cost thereof, the person using same, and all the facts pertaining thereto in each department, independent bureau, or commission in the city of Washington. If allowances for privately owned automobiles are made in any department, independent bureau, or commission to officers or employees of such department, independent bureau, or commission, then the amount of such allowances for upkeep or operation shall be reported with the names and positions of those to whom such allowances are made.

Also the number, location, and cost of any garage or garages maintained by such department, independent bureau, or commission; where such garages are located; number of employees used in said garages; cost of same; rentals on same; and all other information in connection therewith; the number of passenger automobiles kept in said garages and the number of trucks; the names of such officers or employees keeping such automobiles in said garages. The heads of said several departments, independent bureaus, or commissions are likewise directed to furnish in reports separate from the foregoing facts, like facts, figures, and information concerning the use, upkeep, and operation of all passenger vehicles in use in their said departments, independent bureaus, or commissions outside the city of Washington.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. I think there can be no objection to the furnishing of the information.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Fernald	McCormick	Sheppard
Brandegee	Fletcher	McCumber	Shortridge
Brookhart	France	McKellar	Smith
Broussard	George	McKinley	Smoot
Bursum	Harreld	McNary	Spencer
Calder	Harris	Nelson	Stanfield
Cameron	Harrison	New	Stanley
Capper	Heflin	Nicholson	Sterling
Caraway	Hitchcock	Norbeck	Sutherland
Couzens	Johnson	Oddie	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Underwood
Dial	Kendrick	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Ladd	Ransdell	Warren
Elkins	La Follette	Reed, Mo.	Watson
Ernst	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Weller

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily absent, due to serious illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS (S. DOC. NO. 286).

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the report of the Secretary of Agriculture upon the work which has been done on the public roads.

There being no objection, the report on the construction of rural post roads in cooperation with the States, etc., was ordered to be printed as a Senate document.

PUEBLO INDIANS OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Judge A. J. Abbott, of Santa Fe, N. Mex., in regard to the Bursum bill affecting the Pueblo Indians.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SANTE FE, N. MEX., December 17, 1922.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: You may not remember me personally, but you will probably recall who I am when I tell you that I was for nine years judge of the Twenty-seventh Judicial District of Kansas, with headquarters at Garden City. * * *

As a Member of the Senate you are, of course, familiar with the action of that body on the measure recently passed known as the Bursum bill, but which has been by the Senate withdrawn from the House. It is on behalf of this Bursum bill, as it is called, because it was introduced and sponsored by our Senator BURSUM, that I am asking a few minutes of your attention.

I was from 1902 to 1910, about eight years, special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico. I am now writing you on behalf of these same Indians.

You have doubtless noticed the sensational and alarming headlines and articles which have gone down the lines of certain classes of newspapers since this bill passed the Senate. I sincerely hope that the unreasonable furor against this measure which seems to have taken hold upon a certain class of people, many of whom I am persuaded are uninformed, will not be allowed to influence the sane and sensible Members of the Senate and House when the measure shall again come up for consideration.

A change in the relationship of these Indians to the Government, brought about by a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, has made some congressional legislation concerning their property rights imperatively necessary. To meet this necessity the Department of the Interior, through the Indian Office, has called to its aid certain gentlemen well informed as to the history and necessities of these people. The bill was prepared by Col. R. E. Twitchell, Attorney A. B. Renehan, and Indian Commissioner Charles H. Burke and carefully examined and approved by Secretary of the Interior A. B. Fall, submitted to and approved by other able and experienced men of the Indian Office, and United States Senator H. O. BURSUM, of New Mexico, who introduced it in the Senate.

Who are these gentlemen? Secretary Fall, as you know, is an old resident of New Mexico and an excellent lawyer, whose interest in these Indians can not be held in suspicion. Col. R. E. Twitchell, also an old-time resident of New Mexico, one of the best lawyers in our State, and a man who has written much on the history of New Mexico, and especially the history of these Indians, and who now holds the office of Assistant Attorney General, assigned to the special work of studying the Pueblo Indian problem and the duty of the Government toward these Indians; a man who, I believe, has taken more interest in the Pueblos than any other man in New Mexico. Hon. A. B. Renehan, an able, careful, and critical lawyer of Santa Fe, N. Mex., who stands high at the bar of our State, and United States Senator BURSUM, who introduced the bill. These are the men to whom was intrusted the difficult task of framing suitable legislation to meet the immediate and future demands of the Pueblo Indian situation.

It is unthinkable that intelligent and well-informed people with good and honest hearts should allow themselves to believe the fallacious and deceptive arguments which have been published under flaming and alarming headlines in sensational articles, with the evidently corrupt intent of producing political dissatisfaction with administration of the Indian department and reflecting discredit upon Government officers.

It is easy for those of us who reside in New Mexico and are acquainted with political conditions here to see in it all a deep-seated political scheme.

This "terrific barrage," as it is called, upon the Bursum bill is designed as a camouflage to blind the public vision and prevent a clear view of the measure, while a scheme for a special commission or court is being developed and brought to light as a substitute, with a purpose of revolutionizing the entire Indian policy and creating places, I may add, for some hungry office seekers who can not hope for anything under the present administration.

Such headlines as "The end of the Pueblo Indians," "Cruel and treacherous assault," "Legalized robbery," "Repugnant to morals," "Special piece of villainy," and many other such bombastic, sensational, deceptive, and misleading illusions and fallacies can not be begotten by an honest desire to promote the public good or prevent a supposed wrong. Honest effort is not usually accompanied by such methods, and it is to be hoped that the promoters of these would-be deceptions will soon learn that the Congress of the United States can not be easily tricked or deceived.

Now, dear Senator, my interest in these Indians has prompted me to write you thus at length, for which trespass upon your time, if indeed it be trespass, I beg your pardon.

With the sincere hope that Congress may act wisely in the premises, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

A. J. ABBOTT.

RETURN OF AMERICAN TROOPS FROM GERMANY.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to call up Senate Resolution 395 submitted by me on yesterday with reference to the recall of troops from Germany. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby respectfully requested to at once cause the return to the United States of all troops now stationed in Germany.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the resolution is merely presented to the Senate for discussion and not for consideration. Is that correct?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I submitted the resolution on yesterday and gave notice that I would call it up this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is on the table and it may come up by unanimous consent or on motion.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may now be taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to know is the request of the Senator from Missouri for unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution with a view to its passage today or merely with a view to its discussion?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly for its passage if the Senate is ready to vote on it; but, of course, at the end of the morning hour I suppose the resolution will have to give way to the regular order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to understand the matter. I myself have no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution, but the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], is not present, and I think he ought to be consulted in reference to the matter before any action shall be taken upon it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will get here. As he is not present, he had better be sent for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I can say what I have to say on this matter, I hope, in a very brief speech, though my prophecies as to the time I am going to speak are not always accurate.

Mr. President, there is no useful purpose to be served by any long statement regarding this subject. The Senate is entirely familiar with the history of the occupation by our troops of a part of Germany subsequent to the signing of the treaty of Versailles and up to the present time. Speaking in round numbers, there are approximately 1,000 American troops still located in Germany. If my recollection serves me right—and if I am wrong I hope some Senator will correct me—the President during his preelection campaign stated that our troops ought promptly to be recalled from Germany. At that time we had a considerable force there. I may be in error regarding the statement which I have just made, but that is my recollection. In any event, the administration did begin the return of the troops, and it was publicly stated and understood that all of the American troops in Germany were to be returned to the United States. The task of returning the troops began some months ago and had been largely accomplished when, for a reason that has never been made plain, at least to my knowledge, the return of the troops was stopped, leaving this small force still in Germany.

The arrangement with Germany, as all know, was that she would pay the expenses of the troops while stationed there. I have sent for the latest figures in reference to the subject, but have not been able to obtain them. So late, however, as April 30, 1921, the troops had cost the United States $240,719,338.29. The total cost had been $275,607,146.84, on which Germany had a credit of $34,887,808.55. I am not informed how that came about. I do not think it came from the actual payment of money, but, possibly, through some adjustment of properties which might have been held by the United States, perhaps dyestuffs, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

The best information that I have is that we have not received any kind of payment for a long time; and, judging by the present situation, with which we are all familiar and upon which I need not dwell, it is extremely problematical whether we will ever get anything in the way of reimbursement, certainly not so long as France proposes to stand in her present position and take the steps which are now threatened.

From the first I have believed and have stated repeatedly upon this floor and elsewhere that, when the armistice had been signed and when our allies and associates had completed their treaties of peace and those treaties had been solemnly signed and were effective, it was the business of the United States to remove armed forces from Europe. We had no indemnities there to collect; we had no responsibilities. Certain it is to my humble way of thinking that, after we had solemnly signed a treaty of peace and amity and good will with Germany, we had no further business for an armed force on German soil.

We have no controversies with Germany, except in regard to some property located in this country and some claims against the German Government, which we do not propose to collect by armed force. Germany has consented to the creation of a tribunal to adjust those differences, and, further than that, has consented that America shall have two representatives out of the three. An eminent former Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States occupies that position, and certainly every question of dispute which is decided by him and by his other American associate ought to be satisfactory to the American people.

There can be, therefore, no good reason for retaining American troops in Germany, wheresoever they happen to be stationed at this moment, so far as their service to American interests is concerned; and, if that were not true, if we did have a material interest there to guard or material right to enforce, it would be the height of folly to withdraw all of our troops except 1,000 men or less, for such a body of men, if there for the purpose of the enforcement of any of our rights, would merely be an irritant because it could not constitute an effective force. The troops, therefore, must have been kept in Germany for some other reason, and that other reason must be service for some other country instead of service in the interest of the United States.

What I am saying now is not by way of criticism. I can well understand how the administration may have been persuaded that for some temporary cause it was best to halt the return of the troops. Although I think I should differ from the administration with regard to such a policy, nevertheless I accord to the administration perfect good faith and acquit it of any desire to do anything which it regarded as wrong; but the Senate has a responsibility, the Congress has a responsibility, and I think it is time we discharged that responsibility to the extent of our power.

These troops never could have been in Germany except for a declaration of war, which the Congress alone was authorized to make. The President would have had no authority or right to send them there or to keep them there but for that declaration of war. Peace has come, and every consideration demands the return of these troops. I inquire, why are they kept there? There is, I repeat, but one reason that can be assigned. They have been kept there not for the benefit of America but for the benefit of other countries.

What is the condition with reference to these other countries? When this war ended the United States said that she did not want to take any land from Germany; that she did not want to levy any penalties upon Germany. There were certain pre-war claims which were open to discussion, but we claimed no right of indemnity. We waived it. We therefore have no business over there to collect something which we do not demand. Our allies, however—and I do not criticize them for it—demanded heavy indemnities. They took from Germany vast portions of her possessions. They cut deeply into the German Empire. Great Britain, as the result of this war, added to her landed estates directly and indirectly a territory greater than that of Rome in the days of the Cæsars. She demands other heavy indemnities. France took vast landed estates and is demanding an indemnity so high that Germany protests she can not pay it, and it would appear now to be the opinion of Great Britain that the amount named is so excessive that it must be mitigated.

In addition to that, Japan took vast possessions, and we yielded to her our just claim to a share in the control of some 30,000 or 40,000 islands of the Pacific Ocean, and gave to her by the four-power pact an advantage which may mean some day a terrific disaster to America.

Now come the later developments. I am not here to prophesy a great European war, but it is apparent to-day that there is grave danger of France invading Germany and seizing possession of a large part of that country. Thank Heaven it is no longer an empire, although they still denominate themselves an empire. If France undertakes that, it is understood, as far as we can credit the reports of the press, that she will do so in opposition to the will of Great Britain. The press brings us word that the Turko-Grecian war is to be resumed. We all know to our own satisfaction that Great Britian has been morally if not financially supporting the Greeks, and France has been morally if not financially supporting Turkey.

With this state of affairs, every prudent man must recognize the fact that Europe to-day is in a highly inflammable condition, and that trouble may break out at any time.

If trouble should break out, what would be the condition of our American troops—less than 1,000 of them, and I understand those 1,000 men are under the command of French generals? Whether that be correct or not—and we can get so little information that we must guess these matters out largely—if trouble should ensue in Germany, it is highly probable that our troops might suffer an attack. That attack might come from an exasperated and desperate people in Germany who, in seeking to resist the French, should draw our troops into the struggle. Such an attack might be by regular forces; it might be by an infuriated people; it might arise under any one of a thousand conditions and circumstances which we can conceive. If the attack should unfortunately be made, even though there were totally absent any purpose or intent to attack our troops, though they should come within the fire zone merely because of their location, the moment a drop of American blood is shed the cry will go up that that blood must be avenged.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for information, of course, simply. Does the Senator know whether the American troops now stationed in Germany are in that part which the French propose to occupy?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The trouble is, I do not know what the French propose to occupy.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I mean the Ruhr Valley section?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The exact location of these troops I am unable to state. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts can tell us.

Mr. LODGE. The troops are at Coblenz, and the Ruhr district is in Westphalia, north of Lorraine.

Mr. REED of Missouri. How far away?

Mr. LODGE. I can not give the Senator the distance in miles, but it is a very considerable distance.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Not very far, because you can not go very far without getting out of Germany.

Mr. LODGE. It lies between Belgian territory, I think, and Alsace-Lorraine; but while I can tell by looking at the map, I think it is a very considerable distance from Coblenz.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I read in one of the public prints yesterday that Coblenz is the place that the French probably would take possession of and occupy, or one of them.

Mr. LODGE. In connection with the Ruhr?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; not in connection with the Ruhr.

Mr. LODGE. I was not aware that France planned to take possession of Coblenz, but that may be.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was not aware of it, either. I simply say, with due caution, that I saw that in a newspaper. Of course, all sorts of reports are coming from abroad and being printed, and nobody knows what importance to attach to them.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think we can agree that the troops are entirely too close to the scene of possible difficulty. When an army starts to move nobody knows where it is going to halt; and nobody knows when the opposing force may surround and isolate our troops, even if they are not at the immediate point at which the French propose to stop.

The New York Times headlines this morning read:

French take steps to enlarge penalties—Rhine forces are put on a war footing—May affect status of our troops there—Mayence troops prepare—Mining engineers and customs forces mobilized in Paris—Move for coal penalty—Poincaré must bring money out or force submissions that satisfy French—Cordiality to Bonar Law—British premier says, in parting, he hopes that Poincaré is right, but doubts it.

I think almost everybody else doubts it.

Mr. President, a heavy responsibility rests upon those to-day charged with public office. The way of safety is perfectly obvious. That is to bring our troops home, where they ought to be, to get them out of this turbulent zone, and to keep our hands out—I will use the expression, though it is not very senatorial—of this hell pot they are brewing over there.

I have seen the last American boy cross the ocean to fight any wars of Europe or Asia, I trust. I hope no man living will ever again witness the spectacle of a draft of American young men to be sent across the seas to engage in quarrels and wars over there. Of course, if America's sovereignty and honor are assailed, we must defend them, though we send our troops to the uttermost parts of the world; and we will defend them. If our troops should unfortunately be attacked, if one of them should be slain, even by an infuriated and irresponsible mob, or by accident, it would be likely to inflame the people of this country and to furnish an excuse for drawing us into another European controversy.

No good reason can be assigned for keeping those troops in Germany one hour. There is every reason for their return, and not the least of them is the fact that if the United States now promptly orders the return of those troops it will be notice to France, it will be notice to every country on earth, that if they propose to keep up their quarrels they must settle their own quarrels.

What I am saying does not run counter to the ideas of any man who may want, by peaceful negotiations, to render assistance to stricken Europe, for I am not dealing with the question of negotiations or friendly offices; I am dealing with the question of soldiers and bayonets and guns. They have no business there except as a war menace.

I might talk long about this matter, but I have said all I desire to say, and I submit the resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri has presented a very important question to the Senate. It is doubtful in my mind whether it should have been presented much sooner than this, but the psychological moment has arrived when some one in this country should seriously raise the question of longer continuing on the Rhine the American troops we have there now. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I would prefer a different form for the resolution. Instead of a request to the President, it seems to me it would be more in accordance with the ordinary proceedings to express the sense of the Senate that the troops should be withdrawn; but that is a rather minor matter.

The Senator from Missouri asks why the troops are kept there. It seems to me we can also properly go back and ask the question, Why were they put there in the first place? They were put there, as a paragraph in the treaty of Versailles very well indicates, for a certain purpose. Article 428 of that treaty reads as follows:

As a guaranty for the execution of the present treaty by Germany, the German territory situated to the west of the Rhine, together with the bridgeheads, will be occupied by allied and associated troops for a period of 15 years from the coming into force of the present treaty.

The article next following indicates when and how the troops shall be withdrawn. If the treaty is carried out, they shall first be withdrawn from the Cologne bridgehead at the expiration of 5 years, and later, at the expiration of 10 years, withdrawn from Coblenz. Coblenz is the point where our troops are located.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course we are not signatories to the treaty of Versailles. Our troops are there solely under the provisions of the armistice, are they not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think they were originally put there under the provisions of the armistice, but, if the Senator from Massachusetts will recall, this particular article of the Versailles treaty I have read was imported into the separate treaty which we made with Germany. It does not require us to keep the troops there, but it was specifically mentioned as a part of the treaty of Versailles under which the United States retained its right to act. I think the Senator will find that is correct.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose it might be included in that provision of the treaty of peace with Germany, and if we thought it was of advantage to us I suppose we could act under the treaty of peace with Germany. But the troops are there solely under the armistice; I think that is the only ground.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I judge that when we made our treaty with Germany the armistice died. An armistice only exists until the treaty takes its place.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose the treaty of peace with Germany terminated the armistice.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think so.

Mr. LODGE. My only point was that when the troops went there originally it was under the armistice.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think so; and they are continued there under the terms of the treaty we made with Germany, which carried into its provisions article 428 of the Versailles treaty.

I am not criticizing the administration for having kept the troops there as long as their presence could be justified as tending to improve conditions, without any embarrassment or danger to the United States. I think there was for a time that justification for keeping a nominal number of soldiers there. There was another justification, too. As long as they are there they constitute a sort of listening post, which has enabled the United States to get inside information about conditions there, and, as has been stated upon the floor of the Senate, they were kept there not only because France requested it but because Germany requested it, and probably also because Great Britain requested it, on the theory that an international occupation was more calculated to produce quiet conditions and to preserve a desirable situation than the occupation by French troops, who have always played the part of conquerors in their occupation.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, is the Senator informed as to how many English troops yet remain in that district, if any?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have a general impression that there are something like 20,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no, Mr. President. I happen to know that the number was reduced below 5,000 a long time ago.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know the number.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think they have very few more than we have.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Be that as it may, Mr. President, it seems to me that the time has come when American sentiment will naturally crystallize in favor of removing our troops. Great Britain and France have apparently come to the parting of the ways, and instead of seeing an international treatment of Germany under the terms of this treaty we are in danger of beholding an aggressive military treatment of Germany by one of the parties to the war, namely, France. Under those circumstances it does not seem to me either desirable or safe for the United States to become involved as a party to the proceedings, by leaving its troops there any longer, and I cordially support the movement inaugurated by the Senator from Missouri looking to some action by the Senate to indicate to the President that sentiment here favors their removal.

To my mind, it is most deplorable that France should take the position which she is now apparently disposed to take, and while I suppose the United States could hardly put itself in the attitude of rebuking France for this shortsighted and destructive policy, certainly there is no just reason why the United States should longer be a party to the proceedings over there by allowing her troops to remain.

As the Senator from Missouri has said, we may be involved in actual danger. We hope that the action of France is not going to result in disorder. We hope it will not lead to war. We hope that some way will be found of escaping from the crisis which seems to be impending; but the disorders may come, the violence may come, and war may come, and there is no possible reason why we should permit ourselves to be embroiled in it or involved in it by longer keeping our troops there.

It may be that we are overpessimistic. It may be that France will halt in her dangerous course; but, in that event, it seems to me that this is the time which above all other times can be properly availed of to withdraw the troops from Germany. We have the right to keep them there, I believe, under this treaty. I voted for the ratification of the treaty, and that treaty involves the right to keep the American troops upon the Rhine under article 428, which is made a part of our treaty, but we have no interest in keeping them there and there is no reason, to my mind, why we should continue to keep them there at the request of France or of any other country. If the Senator prefers to keep his resolution in its present form, involving a request on the President to withdraw the troops, I shall vote for it. I would prefer to see it in the form of merely expressing the sentiment of the Senate of the United States that they should be withdrawn.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY—DISMISSALS FROM OFFICE.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am very much impressed by the new year's advice given to the American people by the Attorney General, Mr. Daugherty. I am impressed, because he asked everyone to do what he himself never did. He said:

I am impressed with the thought that no nobler resolution may be taken by any inhabitant of this Republic than that he will live the life of a 100 per cent American;
That he will dedicate himself to a strict observance of the laws of his country; and
That he will obey them in the letter and spirit—all of them, even though there be some that in his individual opinion hurt.

I had never known before that the Attorney General posed as a humorist. Of course, I presume that he justifies this sentiment by saying he wants the people to do as he tells them and not as he himself does. We all know how the Attorney General practiced a deception on the former President of these United States, Mr. Taft, and had him pardon a man by the name of Morse. We all know how he secured the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who left the floor just as I rose, to say here upon the floor, upon his honor as a Senator, that Daugherty never had anything to do with the obtaining of Morse's pardon, never received a penny for his service in connection therewith, and then, when it was shown that he—Daugherty—was Morse's attorney and that he had been paid for his services in connection with his pardon therewith, he had the very poor sportsmanship to turn upon his friend and say that the Senator from Indiana had utterly and willfully misrepresented him.

Well, I know that is not true, because another Senator on the Republican side told me that the Attorney General had told him that he had nothing to do with the Morse case and never received a penny in connection therewith. If I did not know, as I do know, without any corroborative evidence, that the Senator from Indiana told the truth when he said here upon the floor that the Attorney General assured him over and over again that he never had anything to do with the Morse case and never had any connection with it nor received any fee for his services therein, and that he knew that that was true, because he, the Senator—I am referring to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]—had gone to the Attorney General and asked him specifically if he had, I would believe the Senator anyway.

In this connection I read:

Daugherty's accuser ill, ordered to South. KELLER'S condition becomes known as committee prepares to clear Attorney General.

I take that statement from the court journal, which knows what the administration knows before the administration finds it out, and knows what the Committee on the Judiciary in the House is going to do before the members of that committee themselves have been told. I realize that I am not permitted to say anything about the Committee on the Judiciary in the House. It would be highly improper for me to do so. But if I were permitted to say it, I would say that we knew in advance what the Republican members of that committee would do under the circumstances under which this case came to that committee. I do not suggest it because I am not permitted to do so. But if permitted I should like to suggest that the committee change the word "clear" to "whitewash." I do so because the committee has no power "to clear" the Attorney General of the charges that were made against him, and its findings do not do that. It is not accomplished, although it gave out through the "court journal" in advance that its intention was "to clear" the Attorney General. It can not do that. It can "whitewash" the Attorney General and will do that, but "clearing him" is what no one can do, because in the minds of the American people a verdict has been written that the Attorney General is guilty of the offenses of which he stands accused, and therefore no committee of either House can "clear" him of those charges.

In passing I do not blame Mr. KELLER from withdrawing as the accuser before the committee. We all have read how the hearings were conducted. I am sure if evidence was anxiously sought that sources have been suggested from which that evidence could be had; but the committee—let me read it, because I want to be fair:

DAUGHERTY'S ACCUSER ILL, ORDERED TO SOUTH—KELLER'S CONDITION BECOMES KNOWN AS COMMITTEE PREPARES TO CLEAR ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Illness of Representative KELLER, sponsor of impeachment proceedings against Attorney General Daugherty, will necessitate his leaving the Capital for a month, it became known yesterday just as Republican members of the House Judiciary Committee were beginning preparation of a report to the House designed to show Mr. KELLER had failed to submit evidence to warrant impeachment of Mr. Daugherty and had so maneuvered presentation of his testimony as to make possible the dramatic withdrawal from his case which virtually ended the hearings three weeks ago.

Anyone could have foretold before the new year that the Republican members of the committee would so find; could have told that the day after the charges were filed; could have told Mr. KELLER that even before he made his charges.

This is recited here, together with the advice of the Attorney General to the American people on New Year, because the Attorney General was present when an order was issued by the President discharging many civil-service workers to make places for Republican henchmen, and yet we have had no report concerning it. On the 31st day of March, 1922, 28 employees of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing were summarily dismissed, most of them not only from their places of employment but from the civil-service rolls. A number of them were eligible to retirement compensation. It was said at the time these men and women were discharged that it would be shown shortly that they had been guilty of very grave offenses and that the very safety of the Treasury depended upon their immediate dismissal. I myself introduced a resolution asking that the information be given. It went to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, over which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] presides, and it went, as everybody knew, to its grave.

However, from time to time there was a revival of talk that very grave offenses had been committed by these men and that it would be shown, and that a report would be made public and all of us who had championed their cause would be humiliated. A Republican Senator assured me that I myself was going to be very much embarrassed when I should be convinced that I have been espousing the cause of men who had been guilty of very grave offenses; tremendously grave offenses. He said he knew it because he had talked to the department officials and they had assured him it was true. Such stories crept into the newspapers. These men and women who had worked for 25 to 30 years for the Government, who had honorable names in this community where they lived, were compelled to live under the disgrace and this suspicion for nearly a year, and still no report has been forthcoming. I have very reliable information, Mr. President, that not only did the Department of Justice put its sleuths to hunt out crimes upon the part of the administration of the bureau under the régime of Mr. Wilmeth, but the Treasury also had every one of these people's records checked, and that both investigations showed that not one of them was guilty of any wrongdoing or that there was anything in the conduct of the bureau that would subject them to criticism at all.

Many of those discharged employees were, as I said, entitled to compensation under a retirement law. They can not get it until the President shall take action. This report from the bureau has been on his desk for weeks, and he will not act. He will not act because when he does act he must admit that he discharged these people unjustly, and for political reasons, and therefore he will not act at all.

Let me call attention to a further fact. Dr. E. L. Beach, 68 years old, a native of the State of Tennessee, had worked for 30 years for the Government. He was one of the men dismissed from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. He was eligible to retirement. There never has been a charge made against Doctor Beach except the blanket charge that the President of these United States made against the 28 men and women whom he saw fit to discharge. Doctor Beach, as I said, was 68 years old. He was discharged and disgraced under this order of the President on the 31st day of March, 1922. He lived at 6314 Delaware Avenue, Chevy Chase, Md. Last Tuesday he died, and his son said this:

Father felt that he had been disgraced by being turned out without warning and without explanation. He had been 30 years in the bureau, and although he received but $1,800 a year as storekeeper he handled about $1,500,000 a year in Government property. He often said the treatment was cruel and inhuman and broke his heart.

His son added that, without question, his father died of a broken heart because of this unjust and cruel dismissal.

Now, Mr. President, I had hoped that the President would make public the report and let these men and women at least have an honorable name restored to them, even if he did not see fit to give them back their places of employment. I know that their dismissal was the first of what they call Hardingizing the administration; that is, to turn out everybody who is not an active Republican and put in his place an active Republican. Other dismissals were to follow had not the public condemnation been so pronounced.

The man who succeeded Mr. Wilmeth, Mr. President—Mr. Hill—was being sued by his wife for divorce, in which suit charges which it would be entirely improper to discuss upon the Senate floor were made.

Mr. McCauley displaced Mr. Ashburton as custodian of dies, rolls, and plates. His wife, on similar charges, obtained an interlocutory decree against him; and on yesterday the press contained this statement:

Justice Siddons has granted permanent maintenance of $100 a month to Mrs. Caroline D. McCauley, who sued her husband, Joseph D. McCauley, superintendent of plate vaults in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The decree requires the husband to pay the wife's lawyer $150 and the costs of the suit.

Mr. McCauley, it will be remembered, took the place of Mr. Ashburton, who, on the day he was dismissed, was commended for his faithful services. The letter commending him came but a few hours before he was discharged. Mr. McCauley, the man who was put in his place, will be remembered as the man who wrote the letter to the 15-year-old girl that found its way into the RECORD here.

I desire to say, Mr. President, unless the President shall soon make public the report and let these former employees be restored at least to good standing in the community, that I shall ask the Senate next week to pass a resolution requesting that the report be made public. The President has no right, simply because he is President of these United States, to strike down the good name and reputation of men and women because he wanted their places for his friends and his henchmen. It would be just for him, at least, since he has their places for his friends, to give back to these men and women their good reputation, so that they may go elsewhere and find honorable employment. He should not wait until they go down to their graves of broken hearts, as Doctor Beach has just done—go down disgraced and humiliated by the President because the President wanted their places for his friends and supporters.

Mr. President, I was particularly moved to say this because the Attorney General was present when the President's order was issued; he is presumed to know the law, and that law forbids the discharge of a civil-service employee until he had been given notice in writing of the charge against him and an opportunity to be heard in his own defense by affidavit. The Attorney General, it is fair to presume, advised the President to strike down the law and disgrace these 28 men and women in order that their places might be given to supporters of the administration. Then the Attorney General, after having been a party to that unlawful act, proclaims that everybody ought to obey the law!

RETURN OF AMERICAN TROOPS FROM GERMANY.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 395) submitted by Mr. REED of Missouri, January 5, 1923, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby respectfully requested to at once cause the return to the United States of all troops now stationed in Germany.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am aware that there are many Members of the Senate upon both sides of the aisle who are thoroughly in favor of the resolution which has been submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and that in opposing it, as I shall in the very brief remarks I am about to make, I shall find myself in conflict, as it were, with many of my colleagues.

I can not share the fears expressed by the Senator from Missouri and other Senators. I do not believe that the dangers painted by them really confront our little force at Coblenz or confront the United States, which they represent. I think in their fears they fail to take into consideration the influence of an American soldier, no matter where he is stationed. I call to mind that we have had troops in foreign countries for long, long periods, thousands of miles away from home, at times when those very countries have been seething with violence, revolution, and war; and that in no instance has any faction among the contenders or any influence whatever, foreign or otherwise, come into violent contact with American soldiers.

I have in mind the fact that for many years we have had stationed in Pekin and Tientsin in China a few hundred men. China, Mr. President, as everybody realizes, has been seething with war and violence. Our little force has been at Pekin, near the legations, and there has been another little force at Tientsin, the two being held there in accordance with a treaty into which we entered following the Boxer Rebellion. Their influence upon every occasion has been in the direction of peace. No faction has thought for one moment of involving them in the difficulties that have cursed that part of the world. I think that is due to the respect which people of all nations—and I mean by that the common people of all nations—have for the American soldier and the flag that he carries. They know that everything he does is done in the spirit of fairness; that when it is the duty of the American soldier to his own country to be neutral, he is, in fact, neutral; that when it becomes incumbent upon him to pass upon some dispute, he does so in a spirit of fair dealing to everyone concerned.

That, Mr. President, has been the history of our little force at Coblenz. There are but 1,000 men, approximately, there. Something like two years ago our force there was reduced to below 5,000 troops. It has no military strength and, in my judgment, no military significance; but it is a fact that that little area about Coblenz which is occupied by our men has been the happiest and most contented area in all the troubled regions of Europe, merely because everyone involved respects the American soldier and what he stands for.

It may be that troubles will arise there and grow more acute as a result of recent developments in Germany or in that neighborhood; but I venture to say that, no matter what troubles may arise, no matter what their nature may be, the little area around Coblenz, if our men remain there, will be the safest place in Europe. So far as our men are concerned, I believe they will be as safe there as they would be in the District of Columbia. What I have said, Mr. President, will indicate that I do not share the fears expressed by some Senators upon the floor.

It may be difficult to describe in precise terms the function which this little force performs, and I feel myself unable to describe them in precise terms; but, from everything I have heard from Americans who have traveled in Europe during the last two years, both civilians and returning officers, I gather the very clear impression that our troops, from time to time, in ways which may be described as unofficial but nevertheless effective, have performed a great service not only so far as the situation on the spot is concerned but also to their own country.

General Allen and his assistants have been appealed to, I dare say, many, many times to smooth out little frictions which have necessarily arisen in the extraordinary situation prevailing. His judgment and that of those who assist him has been relied upon; he and his associates have excited the confidence of the Germans, the French, the British, and the Belgians. Upon not one occasion, as I am informed, have our soldiers there failed to contribute something toward peace and a better understanding among the conflicting elements which surround them. I am informed that there have been innumerable instances of just that kind where the judgment of the Americans, devoted to justice and fair dealing, has been accepted.

Mr. President, none of us can know what the future may bring. It so happens, however, that the region in Germany which some believe the French intend to seize lies something like 100 miles from the Coblenz area. I think that the matter of distance is comparatively unimportant; I think if that region were in juxtaposition to the territory occupied by the American troops the territory so occupied would still be absolutely safe. I can not conceive of any one of the parties to the disputes bringing about a situation which would involve the United States of America with one side or the other.

I think we should be conscious of our own power, and conscious of the respect which all the parties, I am sure, feel toward us in this situation; and, conscious of those elements, I think we have nothing whatsoever to fear of America being dragged in or drawn into some outbreak of violence which may involve some portion, or indeed all, of the contingent of 1,000 men.

We may not judge accurately, Mr. President, the psychological effect in Europe of things which we may do or say in the Senate; and I would not attempt, indeed I would not dare, to prophesy in explicit terms the possible result of the adoption of the pending resolution. For one, I have not yet given up the hope that the difficulties existing between the Allies upon the one side and Germany upon the other, and especially the difficulties now existing or apparently existing in France on the one side and Germany on the other, may be composed; and I think no one will deny that their composition would be to the great advantage of the United States, to say nothing of the advantage accruing to Europe itself.

Mr. President, I entertain the belief that in the midst of all this turmoil, all this hysteria, all the prejudice and misunderstandings which every sensible man knows plague Europe today, the presence of this flag of ours and of that little group of men at Coblenz in more ways than one holds forth a hope toward the composition of those difficulties. We can not know how we may perform a service. It may not be to-morrow, it may not be next month, it may not be for months yet to come; but I honestly believe, Mr. President, that the presence of our people in Coblenz—safe, I am sure, from the dangers depicted by other Senators, and their country safe, too—I honestly believe that the presence of those men at Coblenz under General Allen constitutes and holds forth the best hope of America being finally and properly and in accordance with her traditions helpful in composing this distressing situation. I do not fear their continued presence there. I believe that at some time, in some way, they may be useful; and believing as I do that that is the possibility, I can not join at this time in urging their recall.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I expect to vote against the resolution; but I do not wish to do so without stating in the RECORD the reasons that impel me to cast my vote in that way.

I believe that our troops in Germany ought to be returned, and I hope it will be possible for our Government to order their return in the near future; but I do not believe that there is the slightest danger of our troops being drawn into any controversy at this time as innocent bystanders might be drawn into some controversy in which they were not concerned.

The only suggestion of aggressive action that I have seen in the newspapers is the suggestion that the Ruhr district, around Essen and Duisburg, should be occupied by the French. That lies down the Rhine more than 80 miles from Coblenz, where our troops are stationed. Coblenz is not on the line of communications that would be adopted if any such move were made, and it is not in any strategic position which would become important; and to my mind there is no danger whatever of our small force being drawn as innocent bystanders into any such military operations.

I hope very much that no such military operations are going to occur. The peace of Europe will be gravely disturbed by any such invasion as that; but the disagreement that is reported is not final, and all of us must share the hope that an arrangement or composition can be entered into between the Allies and Germany which will be acceptable to all of them. The Germans in March of 1921 themselves suggested the payment of a larger sum in reparations than is contemplated by the British suggestion of recent days; and it seems to me, bearing that in mind, that we must regard the various proffers that have been made by the different nations concerned in these negotiations as mere beginnings of negotiations, in which certainly in friendship to all of the countries involved we do not wish to interfere by action apparently hostile to any one of them. Yet, if we withdrew our troops to-day, within 48 hours after the breaking off of the Paris conference, it could be construed as nothing but an unfriendly act toward France, or at least an unsympathetic action toward France.

Surely, Mr. President, the war is not so long past that we have forgotten how to be sympathetic for France. The war is not so far gone, our comradeship for France is not so faint in the dim past, that we can afford to ignore the distress under which that nation is working to-day. With the fear of a hostile neighbor across a narrow river, on the one hand, and the equal fear of bankruptcy just as close to her on the other hand, surely we can not so show an utter lack of comprehension of her difficulties as to administer this affront to her at this moment.

I want to see those troops brought back to the United States. I want to see the American Expeditionary Force a thing of the past, something of which we can be unqualifiedly proud; but this is not the minute to bring back those troops. A month from now, perhaps, yes; or two months from now; but right now, on the heels of the disruption of the Paris conference, it would be nothing but an affront, and that is why I intend to vote against the resolution.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. During the last few days I have seen statements repeated which were made some time ago to the effect that the German people and the German Government both desired that the American troops should remain there temporarily. What information has the Senator on that subject?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have seen the same statements, and I am inclined to believe them, because it happened that I was one of the first American officers to go into Germany after the armistice. We were met by German officials at these various towns, including Coblenz, who begged us to send the American troops on as fast as it could be done. They wanted the Americans there; and all the time that I had any connection with it they reiterated the same wish that our troops would stay, because they regarded their presence there as the greatest security for order for the German population itself; and I do not conceive that leaving our troops in Germany at the present time will be treated by the German people themselves as anything but a blessing.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have favored for a long time the withdrawal of our troops. The subject was discussed here many months ago, and I do not recall now whether the Senate passed a resolution favoring the withdrawal of the troops or not, but I have always favored it. The other day when we were discussing the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the question was asked me as to the troops that remained, whether I favored their withdrawal or not, I said yes, I did. I never have changed my view on that point at all, and I think they all should have been taken away when the great bulk of the troops were removed, as they were more than a year ago. My only hesitation about this resolution is the moment at which it is offered.

Our troops were put there under the armistice and continued under the armistice until we ourselves made the treaty of peace with Germany. That, I conceive, ended any obligations that we might have under the armistice; but in that treaty with Germany we retained the right to avail ourselves of any provisions of the treaty of Versailles which we thought were for our advantage if we chose to do so, and under that privilege, agreed to in that treaty, I suppose the troops have been kept.

Just at this moment a situation has arisen in which I should be very sorry to see the United States take sides—I do not mean as between France and Germany, but as between France and Great Britain, who have come to a break on the question of the settlement of reparations. We seek no reparations, and never have sought any. We always have adhered to the statement made in that respect by President Wilson, and I think very rightly; and I, for one, have no desire to see the United States drawn into taking part in any attempt to settle the question of reparations, which concerns altogether those who are seeking them. We have, it is true, an indirect interest, which is entirely protected by our unofficial observers who have been there, but I feel that it would be very unfortunate if anything we do to-day should be construed as taking sides. I do not think that is the intent of the mover of the resolution, and I wish to say this to make it plain, so far as I can, that in my judgment there is no intention on the part of the Senate to take sides one way or the other. It is not our business to decide between the differing views of the allied and associated powers who are attempting to settle the question of reparations with Germany. They are all our friends and will therefore, I believe, remain so.

That is my only objection to the resolution, but the question of immediate action is a very serious one. I think the troops ought to be withdrawn—I wish they had been withdrawn long ago—and that we should put an end to that phase of our connection with the late war.

I had hoped that the Senator from Missouri would be willing to accept the modification proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. I think the form of expressing the sense of the Senate is much better.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska and other Senators relates purely to the form of the resolution. I have no objection to yielding to their judgment in the matter; and I have prepared a substitute for the resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). The Secretary will read the proposed substitute.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the President should order the immediate return to the United States of all troops of the United States now stationed in Germany.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I see no difference in the two forms, but I am always willing to yield to the judgment of others in matters of form.

Mr. President, if no other Senator desires to speak, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before this vote is taken I desire to say a few words. I am impelled to do so inasmuch as I shall cast my vote in favor of the resolution, because, unlike the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who has from the beginning opposed the policy of keeping troops upon the Rhine, I have taken quite a different view in the past with respect to that matter. A year ago last summer, in company with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], I was in the area occupied by our troops. After our return he made a very clear, concise, and impartial statement of the conclusions at which all of us arrived, from first-hand information, concerning the conditions there. I fully indorsed everything the Senator from Illinois said about the matter on the floor of the Senate. I think the presence of our troops there has been a highly pacificatory influence. The feeling was so intense between those upon both sides, very naturally, that a clash could easily have occurred during the occupancy of this very considerable portion of the German Empire by the troops of the Allies after the war was terminated.

The occupation of conquered territory by troops of the successful party in war is always a thing giving rise to further strife. It might easily have been precipitated, except for the pacificatory influence of the American troops, and particularly of the American commander. Although we had no representation upon the commission charged with the conduct of government in the occupied territory, we always had with the commission something in the nature of an unofficial observer, who was acting under the immediate direction of General Allen, and who was really the deciding influence upon that commission. Controversies would arise and complaints would be made against the French troops by German citizens of offenses against them, and breaches of the rules of war, and other things of that character. The Germans did not feel they could get any real consideration from the French representative upon the commission, and the feeling, so far as the British representative was concerned, was not very much different. On the other hand, the French recognized that whatever they did would be entirely unsatisfactory and their motives would be misconstrued by the Germans. The result, accordingly, was that practically every controversy which arose was determined by the American commander or by his representative, and, so far as we were able to discover, generally with entire satisfaction to both parties. I felt that to retain the American troops in that area for some time after the cessation of hostilities was a highly commendable course to pursue. I regretted that our force there was so rapidly reduced after I visited the area in the summer of 1921.

But a different situation presents itself now, and whatever may have been my feelings about the matter in the past or my conclusions from the observations which I made, I do not like to see our troops remain there any longer. Everybody recognizes that the situation is exceedingly tense. Apparently nothing will deter the French from occupying the Ruhr Valley. That means, of course, military occupation, which means a resumption of the war with Germany. I do not believe that in that situation of affairs we can be any longer of any very great help in that locality.

Apparently every effort at pacification seems to have miscarried. If, unfortunately, hostilities should arise, our soldiers there would be in a very awkward predicament and might involve us in some way or other in the controvery that is rapidly coming to a crisis.

I shall accordingly support the resolution to express the desire of the Senate that the troops now be recalled, but I felt compelled to say that I do not by my vote indicate any sympathy with the views so often expressed on this floor by the author of the resolution, that they never should have been kept there.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have no desire to inflict a speech on the Senate on this question. I simply rise to state that I am utterly opposed to the pending resolution. Our little force over in Germany is a picked force of men, a sample of the best American soldier. They have been a stabilizing force there. The Germans are glad to have them in the midst of all the other foreign troops stationed there—English, Belgian, French, and Italian. They are anxious to have the American soldiers, because they are model soldiers and help to stabilize the conditions there.

I do not think our soldiers will be contaminated if they stay there. I do not see why that little body of American troops could not stay over there as a sample to the Old World of what the American soldier is. The Germans like him; they prefer him to any other soldier there; and why should we enter upon this picayunish policy about a thousand or fifteen hundred men, and bring them back to this country?

I have been surprised at the attitude assumed by certain statesmen lately. Two years ago it was considered a dangerous matter to have anything to do with Europe. The phrase "entangling alliances" was heard on all sides, and it was thought to be a most dangerous thing to have anything to do with the affairs of Europe in any shape or manner. Lately we have found men on this floor most strenuous in the advocacy of our going into Europe. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] want us to participate in reconstructing Europe.

I may be a heretic, Mr. President, but I have always believed that it was the greatest of mistakes, economically and in every other way, for America not to enter the League of Nations, with one or two amendments of the covenant. If we had become a part of the League of Nations we would have stabilized conditions over there. Political conditions must be stabilized before economic conditions can be stabilized, and I am satisfied in my own mind, though I may be called a heretic, that if we had entered into the League of Nations and accepted the treaty of Versailles, instead of trying to sneak under it by piecemeal, as some of us have been doing lately, conditions would have been far better in Europe than they are to-day.

There were some features of the League of Nations of which I did not approve; but we could have eliminated them. In its main features, however, it would have acted upon the conditions of Europe just as our little Army to-day on the Rhine acts upon the foreign soldiers. It would have stabilized conditions there, and the economic difficulty under which Europe is suffering to-day would have been far less than it is now.

All the people of Europe look to America. As a result of the war a large share of the money of the world came to this country. We were the wealthy country; we were the strong, the rich country, and we attained such a position in the war that, had we been a member of the League of Nations, if Uncle Sam had shaken his head to the powers of Europe our advice would have been taken, and we would have controlled the whole situation.

This may be a sort of a funeral oration on the days of the past, and yet I felt then, and I feel now, that we made the greatest mistake in the world when we did not adopt the treaty of Versailles, with some amendments, particularly as to article 10. If we had done that conditions in the world to-day would have been much better than they are now. I do not like this peanut politics about what a great danger it is to leave a thousand American soldiers over there in Europe, what a horrible thing it is to leave a thousand model American soldiers over there to stabilize conditions.

We had better go to work and pass legislation that is of vital interest to this country, rural-credit legislation, and the merchant marine bill. In Minnesota we hope some day to get ocean shipping up to Duluth, the head of Lake Superior, and to the great ports on Lake Michigan. We hope in the near future to have that accomplished, and if it should be done our people would certainly be glad to have American shipping do the business of the country.

What is the situation? I can not give the exact figures, but we have between 800 and 1,000 steel ships, owned by the Government, which we have not been able to sell or dispose of. Fortunately we are able to scrap the four or five or six hundred wooden ships. They are buried for good and all. We have a few concrete ships, which might as well be buried also. But, counting the very best grade of our vessels, we have from 600 to 800 vessels which we own, which we built at enormous expense during the war, and the question to-day is, Shall we scrap those ships, shall we sell them to our competitors, or shall we try to have them afloat under the American flag? Do gentlemen on the other side want to have those ships scrapped? Do they want us to sell them to foreigners? If not, what would they suggest doing with them?

That shipping cost us over $3,000,000,000, and it was a great extravagance. This morning I looked through the speech of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and it seems to be a justification of the action of the several Shipping Boards we have had. It seems to be a defense of the Shipping Board. I do not care to open old sores. We have had several investigations of that matter before the Committee on Commerce, of which I am a member. A great many things occurred under that Shipping Board which will not bear criticism; but I do not care to go into that subject.

The condition in brief is this: That we built those ships and we have them on our hands. What shall we do with them? Shall we sell them to foreigners, our competitors? I hope there are none on the other side of the Chamber who will take that position. Shall we scrap them, dispose of them as we did of the wooden ships lately; shall we sell them for old iron; or shall we try to put them afloat under the American flag and induce Americans to operate them? That is a plain, simple question. It seems to me that the doctrine enunciated by Senators on the other side who are opposed to this "subsidy" bill, as they call it, will lead to this, that we will have to scrap and throw into the junk heap over 800 good American ships.

When I voted for the shipping bill of 1920 I was in hopes that it would lead to the establishment of routes from the ports of the South, so that all our foreign commerce would not be congested in the port of New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not temporarily lay it aside?

Mr. NELSON. Just let me finish my remarks. It will take me only a few minutes, as the Senator from Washington knows I never speak long.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, when I voted for the shipping bill of 1920 I had hoped that it would result in establishing a number of routes from the Gulf and South Atlantic coast and from the Pacific coast. But I am surprised to see Senators who live along the Atlantic coast voting against the pending measure. Look, for instance, at the port of Galveston. Would it not be a great thing for Galveston if some prominent citizens of that place could be induced to buy some of these ships and use them to establish an American route from Galveston to some foreign port? New Orleans sees the point and through the Louisiana Senators here is in favor of the legislation. But what about Mobile? What about Pensacola? What about Tampa? What about Savannah? What about Charleston? What about all the other Atlantic ports?

Mr. President, I live way up in Minnesota, yet I have an interest in those southern ports. I would like to see a shipping line established and operated by our own people from all the great ports along the Atlantic coast, from Norfolk clear around to Galveston in the Gulf of Mexico.

If we scrap all our ships, and that is what the action of Senators on the other side of the Chamber will lead to, what then? Instead of having as many ships afloat as we have to-day, we will within a year have many less. How much better would it be were Gulf ports like Galveston, New Orleans, Mobile, and Tampa and South Atlantic ports like Jacksonville, Savannah, Charleston, Wilmington, and Norfolk each to have a shipping line of its own?

I am surprised to see so much party politics enter into a matter that ought to be a plain business proposition. I would like to see an American line of boats established from each of the southern ports under the American flag and controlled by their own citizens. By defeating the pending bill that highly desirable result will be prevented. But, Mr. President, it is useless to talk. It is evident from what is going on here that politics enters into the situation. It is not made, as it ought to be made, an economic and business question. I am sorry to see that party politics enters into the question.

The bill in one particular is different from all bills of the past. In all those instances we did not have the ships. It was then a question of getting ships built. In the present case we have the ships in this country. We have a big surplus of ships and the question is, What shall we do with them? That is the only question. It is not a question of building more ships, because we have the ships now. The main thing is to get them afloat. Shall we sell them to our competitors and thus create more competition? Shall we let them go to the scrap heap and then forever cut off America from holding her own in the matter of ocean shipping? It is a pity that such a great question should be made the football of party politics.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it is thought that the resolution can be disposed of in a very few minutes I would be perfectly willing that the unfinished business should be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think the resolution could be disposed of very quickly if we would stick to the question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business, with the understanding that if the resolution takes too much time I shall call up the unfinished business.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, while in sympathy with the general proposition that the American troops should be withdrawn from Europe, I am inclined to vote against the resolution. There is no Member of this body who is more jealous of the prerogative of the Senate than I, and yet it appears to me that the Senate is at this moment rather going outside its province in offering the resolution.

After all, the President of the United States under the Constitution is the Commander in Chief of the military forces of the country. He will probably act ultimately as seems to him best, whether the Senate passes the resolution or not. I do not wish to be misunderstood in that statement. I do not know any more than any other Member of this body knows what the President will do, but that is what I think he will do. I think the President of the United States has been singularly frank and open in his dealings with this body, of which he was formerly a distinguished Member. I think that will always be his policy.

But, Mr. President, without knowing even that there have been exchanges, it is apparent to me, as I think it must be to everyone else, that in such a situation as we know exists at the moment it is almost certain that there are frequent and rapid exchanges of information between the representatives of the United States abroad and our home Government as to the conditions existing on the other side of the Atlantic. It is manifestly impossible for the President or the Department of State to keep this body conversant with every bit of information that it gets as it gets it. That is a hopeless impossibility.

I believe, sir, that it is inopportune for the Senate to pass the resolution. As was pointed out by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] an exigency has arisen. I think the Senate should exercise deliberation in the consideration of the question.

Then, too, I think beyond that that there is grave danger of the Senate being misunderstood in the passage of the resolution at this time. I think there is grave danger of its action being misinterpreted in France as an act of unfriendliness toward that Government when manifestly it is understood here on the floor of the Senate that it is not intended as anything of the kind. If the resolution is to be considered at all, I am much inclined to think that there should be attached such an amendment as I now offer to be added at the end of the resolution proposed by the Senator from Missouri:

And that in this expression the Senate disavows any unfriendly or partisan attitude toward any nation or nations of Europe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is not before the Senate, but the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside is before the Senate. Is there objection to that request? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. NEW. I was under the impression that the request of the Senator from Washington had been agreed to. It now having been agreed to, I offer the amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Missouri, to be added at the close of his resolution.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I rose some little time ago with the expectation of making just a few remarks upon the resolution. I am glad now to say that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has just made observations of a nature similar to those which I had intended to make.

The resolution was introduced yesterday. It has not been referred to any committee. We are asked to express it as the sense of the Senate that the troops should now be withdrawn. I look upon the resolution as a most extraordinary proposal. We know that the troops were first sent to Germany for a very substantial reason. We know that some of those troops have been kept in Germany since the treaty of peace with Germany. We know that they have been gradually withdrawn. But for some reason a small number of troops still remain there. The President of the United States is the Commander in Chief of the Armies of the United States. The troops are kept there under his orders. Presumably he has what appears to him to be a sufficient reason for keeping them there.

The author of the resolution, in presenting it to the Senate, has confessed a lack of knowledge as to why the troops are there. No one has pretended to state on the floor of the Senate the reasons which have actuated the President of the United States in keeping them there. They are under his control; and for the Senate of the United States, without even referring the resolution to a committee for investigation, to adopt it seems to me to be an absolute invasion of the prerogatives of the President of the United States. It seems to me to be more than that. To pass the resolution in this manner, without investigation, without calling upon the President to inform us as to why the troops are there, would be an affront to the President of the United States in which I am unwilling to participate. In my judgment, before we pass a resolution of this character we should at least do one of two things; we should refer it to a committee for investigation as to the reasons why our troops are there, or we should, at least, be considerate enough to ask the President of the United States to inform us, if compatible with the public interest, why they are there.

Mr. President, the suggestion has been made that the resolution should be referred and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, American troops have been stationed on the Rhine since the armistice was signed. They have been retained there under two administrations—one Democratic, the other Republican. My information, gleaned from the newspapers, is to the effect that the presence of our American troops has been desired both by the French people and the German people, and that seems also to be the information of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Why should the Senate act upon this subject at the present time without having a report from one of the organized committees of the Senate? Certainly whatever my vote might be on this subject after an investigation and a report, I am not prepared to vote upon it with satisfaction to myself at the present time.

Mr. President, I was very much interested in the statement which was made by the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] when he told the Senate that he approved the policy of keeping our troops on the Rhine up to the time that he and certain other Senators made their visit to Germany and came back here and made a report to the Senate. The distinguished Senator from Montana has said that the American troops exercised a stabilizing influence as between the Germans and the French, and that when any trouble arose the American officers acted as umpires, and they did decide, I assume, to the entire satisfaction of both sides of the controversy. If it were a good thing to help to preserve the peace from the time the armistice was signed up until the time that these distinguished Senators made their report on the floor of the Senate, why is it unwise now to keep the American troops there?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I thought I made it clear why I thought so. There had not been any purpose declared upon the part of France until recently to occupy any territory except that which she occupies pursuant to the treaty, namely, the Rhineland. Now an entirely different situation arises. She does not intend to content herself with the occupation of the Rhineland, but intends to occupy other territory in Germany not in accordance with the treaty at all but taking such satisfaction as she thinks she is entitled to because Germany has not complied with the terms of the treaty. I trust the Senator from Ohio will see that we now occupy a different position.

Mr. POMERENE. The reasons which the Senator from Montana has given may satisfy his mind, but they do not satisfy mine. What information have we bearing upon this subject? Of course, I have understood through the newspapers that, perhaps, France might take possession of the Ruhr Valley unless Germany paid a certain sum of money on account of reparation, but have we that information officially? If the French people are a little bit more disturbed now than they were a few months ago, and if it were a good thing for us to be present in Germany at that time in order to mollify the feelings of the Frenchmen or of the Germans, may it not be likewise true that if our troops are present now they may postpone the evil day?

I am not prepared to say, in my judgment, there is going to be an armed conflict, but if there should be an armed conflict certainly we can then withdraw our troops quite as well as we can withdraw them now. With both Governments and both peoples seemingly wanting our troops to remain, why now should the Senate of the United States pass this resolution when we do not know the views of the President or of the State Department?

I am paired with my colleague [Mr. WILLIS]. I do not know how he would vote upon this question if he were present, but certainly if I were permitted to vote I should vote in favor of the motion of the Senator from New Mexico, and if that motion should fail, with my present information, I would vote against the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am loath to vote for any resolution offering advice to the Executive in a matter of this kind, and yet under the peculiar circumstances which now surround our situation on the Rhine I do not see how I can refuse to vote for the resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

I believe that the presence of our troops on the Rhine has done a great deal of good. It was absolutely necessary; they should have been sent there in the first instance. The Senate will recall that when they were first sent there they numbered about 15,000. They were sent there to aid in the enforcement of the armistice and kept there to enforce the Versailles treaty when it was thought we were going to be a party to that treaty. That force was gradually reduced during the last administration, I think, to about 5,000 men, and demands have been made from time to time that the number be further reduced and that they all be brought home. After we failed to ratify the treaty there was no real reason why they should have been kept there. I think it has been pretty generally the sentiment of the Senate that they all ought to have been brought home. Our Republican friends long ago assured us they were going to bring them home as soon as they got in power, but two years have passed and our soldiers are still over there. Inasmuch as we are not a party to the treaty of Versailles, inasmuch as we have no representative on the Reparation Commission, it does seem to me that it would have been the part of wisdom to have brought them home before now. There are not enough of them there to do any real good in the event of an outbreak, and as I look at it, Mr. President, if France should invade Germany at any time, as she is now threatening to do, we would certainly be put in a very embarrassing attitude by reason of the presence of our troops on the Rhine. One thousand men could hardly do any good in case of the trouble which now seems imminent.

What are we going to do? Are we going to aid France in upholding the provisions of the treaty of Versailles, to which we are not even a party, or are we going to stand back and say we will not assist in upholding the provisions of that treaty? It is no answer to say that our troops need not take sides, because we will have to take sides; our troops will either have to go forward or they will have to remain there. If they go forward, they will take sides with France. If they fail to go forward, they will in effect take sides against France. If they remain there, they can not do any good, and their presence might involve us in interminable trouble.

I hope the President will withdraw them forthwith. I would have preferred very much that the President had acted and that there had been no necessity for this resolution, but the President not having acted and the resolution being before the Senate, it seems to me it is my duty under the circumstances to vote to have the remaining troops, which, I believe, number about a thousand, brought home immediately. I think it is very regrettable that the Executive has not brought the troops home long before now. It is most regrettable that this phase of our foreign affairs has been handled so clumsily as to make this action upon the part of the Senate necessary. If the troops had been brought home before, as our Republican friends assured us would be done by this administration, we would have been saved from the embarrassing situation that now confronts us. If France acts, we are going to be greatly embarrassed, whatever we may do in relation to our troops on the Rhine unless we get them out speedily. I shall vote against the motion to refer this resolution to the committee and in favor of passing the resolution now.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. President, I visited Coblenz, Germany, in 1919, again in 1921, and also in 1922. When the last administration went out of power there were something like 20,000 troops stationed at the Coblenz bridgehead, while at this time there are, perhaps, a thousand men stationed there, the number having gradually been reduced.

So far as danger to our boys there is concerned, my opinion is that the only danger is that all of the unmarried ones will acquire German wives. The impression which the members of our party received in 1921, as well as in 1922, was that both the enlisted personnel and the officers all wanted to remain at the Coblenz bridgehead, and for that desire they gave various satisfactory reasons.

As soon as the party of which I was a member arrived in Germany on a previous visit, we found that the German officials were particularly anxious that some American soldiers should remain on German soil. The reason actuating them seemed to be largely the wonderfully able diplomacy displayed by General Allen, the commander of the American forces there. When we went further into Germany, crossing the Rhine, we were met with the same report that he was continually settling difficulties arising between the French and the Germans, not only at the Coblenz bridgehead but at other bridgeheads. Both sides trusted him.

We found during our visit last summer the same condition to exist, all those interested seeming to agree that General Allen was doing a wonderful work there. Probably it would make no difference if there were only one American soldier there, provided General Allen of the American Army was also there. He is trusted by all. We found that the Germans wanted our soldiers to remain there, and likewise that the French, the English, the Belgians, and the Italians were anxious that the United States should be represented by troops on German soil. Personally, I feel, our troops being Germany, that when the German Government shall indicate to the American Government that they would like to have the small American representation of troops withdrawn, it will be time enough for us to consider their withdrawal.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to say just a word to explain why I shall vote in favor of the pending resolution.

Our troops occupied the Coblenz bridgehead in the beginning under the armistice. We were there by right, and should have stayed there as long as the conditions under the armistice existed. After that, the question of the ratification of the treaty of Versailles was before the country. If the treaty of Versailles had been ratified, we would have had our part to perform under that treaty, and our troops should have remained there. The treaty of Versailles was rejected, and a separate treaty of peace with Germany was ratified. Among the other provisions of the treaty of Versailles that were made a part of the German treaty were two provisions, one authorizing these troops to stay and the other providing that if the Congress of the United States was willing we might have representation on the Reparation Commission.

As I see the situation legally—I am not discussing it from a sentimental standpoint, but from the standpoint of our position in the world's affairs as fixed by our own treaty agreements—there is no reason whatever for these troops to remain on the Rhine except for the settlement involved in the Reparation Commission. If we determine to keep the troops on the Rhine, we should not leave them there with the actual votes as to what is done on the Reparation Commission left in the hands of foreign powers, while we are there with our troops merely to enforce a decree found by countries where we are not in the voting column.

I recognize that it is said that we are represented there unofficially; but, if we are going to have troops to enforce a decree, we should be represented officially. I think it is manifest that the party in power does not intend to have a representative on that commission officially representing this Government and casting a vote in the deliberations of that commission. If we do not, if we are not directly involved in the findings of that commission, for what purpose except a sentimental purpose can these troops be there? None whatever except to enforce the decrees of other nations.

I think myself it is unfortunate that our Government has not taken its seat on the Reparation Commission, as it is authorized to do not under the treaty of Versailles but under the agreement for the armistice; but that is all that is involved on the River Rhine now. The only question involved on the River Rhine is the question of reparations and how they shall be enforced. We are not sitting in the commission. We have no direct voice in the commission. Why should we have troops there to enforce its decree?

That being the case, I think these troops should be brought home; they should be removed from the Rhine; they should come home at the very earliest opportunity; and therefore I shall vote in favor of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he will not let us vote on the resolution without voting on sending it to the committee.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am unwilling to leave the matter to be passed upon with the information that we have. I do not believe that we should act upon a matter of this sort with the information coming only from the general press of the country. Of course, I realize that the press of the country ordinarily can be relied upon, but this is a most important matter.

Personally, I know of no reason why the troops should not come back home; but I am unwilling to say, by a vote in favor of this resolution, that I am convinced that there is no information which would cause me to change my mind about it. The President of the United States must have some reason for keeping them there; and without even asking him what it is, upon mere rumor, upon mere dispatches from unofficial sources, we are asked to say that we have come to the deliberate conclusion that those troops should come home. I do not see why the merits of this resolution should not be reviewed by a committee of the Senate, the same as all other business of the Senate.

We heard some articles read here to-day from the morning press that may convey the correct situation as it is over there. The distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] said that he had changed his mind about it because of the changed situation; that France is now threatening to overrun a part of the country in excess of that which she had occupied under previous conditions. How do we know it? I submit that there is not a Senator here to-day who knows what France is going to do. There are rumors about it; there are intimations in the press about it; but shall we act upon such vague information as that?

I am anxious, so far as I am concerned, to have these troops come home. It may be that upon official investigation of the subject we would all reach that conclusion. That is why I made the motion to have the investigation made. I hope the Committee on Foreign Relations will investigate the subject, and if it can not present some valid reason for keeping the troops there then I am willing to join with the Senator from Missouri in asking that they come home; but I am unwilling to vote one way or the other without some investigation of the subject. Therefore, Mr. President, I am unwilling to withdraw the motion which I have made.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I hope that the motion to refer the resolution to the committee will not prevail.

For more than three years we have had our troops over there. Many months ago we made a solemn treaty of peace with Germany. The order was issued to bring the troops back, and suddenly an exception was made, and this small body of troops was left there. We were told that it was for some temporary reason. Now time has run on and on and on and on, and still the troops are there.

We may not know absolutely what France's intentions are. I question whether anyone knows absolutely what they are, except the French statesmen; but we do know beyond a peradventure that France's attitude to-day is a threatening attitude. That is all that the Foreign Relations Committee could tell us on that phase of the question. I should be for this resolution if there had been no disturbance there, and I am inclined to believe it would have been better if the resolution had been offered a month ago instead of now; but here is a crisis, and it is proposed in the face of that crisis to refer this matter to the Foreign Relations Committee, where it may sleep a long time.

The press reports, I apprehend, are quite as reliable as any other information, coming as they do from all the press agencies, reported as they have been not for a single day but for several days, with cumulative effect, and with details which indicate an intimate knowledge. Those reports all indicate grave danger of trouble. In that state of affairs there ought to be no delay. A new situation confronts us. If there should be hostilities in Europe, our troops can scarcely be kept out of danger of involvement.

My good friend said that this was an insult to the President. Why, resolutions similar to this have been passed a thousand times. The right of petition is a right that the humblest citizen of the United States has, and that is all this is—the expression of an opinion to the President. My original resolution was in the nature of a request. This expresses an opinion. It is couched in courteous language. The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee himself says that he supports this resolution; and I apprehend that he has as much knowledge of foreign affairs as they have at the State Department.

How long are we to wait? How long are these troops to be kept there?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understood the Senator from Missouri to say that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations would support this resolution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. He so stated on the floor.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then I imagine that there would be no difficulty in getting a report upon the resolution from the Foreign Relations Committee within a short time. It seems to me that there should be nothing embarrassing about having the resolution referred to that committee. I have been usually more than anxious to comply with any request of my friend from Missouri, and I was under the impression that a reference to the committee might mean that the resolution would not be acted upon by the committee.

I think the Senator from Missouri made some such suggestion as that a moment ago, that if it were referred to the committee it would sleep there. If the chairman of the committee is in favor of the resolution, I think the apprehensions are not well founded. In addition to that, a motion could be made to discharge the committee at any time and the resolution could be brought before the Senate, if the Senate saw fit to act upon it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The conclusion of the Senator does not follow. If a resolution goes to the Foreign Relations Committee, it does not at all follow that that committee will be called in immediate session, and it does not at all follow that that committee will report the resolution out. It does absolutely follow that there must be some delay, and this is no time for delay.

There has been a good deal of talk here about our soldiers having acted over there in a manner pleasing to the Germans, and it is stated that they are all marrying German girls. Are we sending them over there and paying their expenses because we are running a matrimonial bureau? Let us understand the real reason why they have been desired there. Undoubtedly every German who loves the Fatherland, as he calls it, resents the foot of any foreign soldier on his soil, but he prefers having an American to a Frenchman or an Englishman or an Italian or the soldier of any other nation, because he knows that he gets fairer treatment from us than from them. That is all there is to his welcome to the American soldier.

I suppose Germany would like to have an American army there if France were to invade her, if Germany were right sure that the American Army would take Germany's side. But the thing I am talking for is—in view of this threatened condition and the fact that our troops have no business there anyway—to get them out of a position where they may be forced to take sides, for the minute they are forced to take sides, then we will incur the enmity of one or the other of those nations. We will offend either France or offend Germany, and let us remember we are now bound to Germany as we are to France by a solemn treaty of peace, and if we look to the future, as we ought to, we must regard that treaty in good faith and attempt to carry it out in its true spirit.

I do not want an American army in a place where its influence will almost necessarily be cast on one side or the other. I did not offer this resolution in order to place the United States in a position of taking sides in the controversy over there, but to get us in a position where we would not be obliged to take sides, and the amendment to the resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] is entirely acceptable to me.

I want to get America out of the danger zone, out of a place where trouble is likely to ensue. Gentlemen may say there is no danger; that the mere presence of America is such a majestic thing that all power will pause at its mere presence; that no nation will do aught to offend us; and that our mere moral presence is enough to arrest the mailed hand of any country. I heard that argument made just before we declared war. There were thousands of people, there were Senators, who believed that a mere declaration of war on the part of America would end the European struggle, but we had no sooner declared war than we were called upon for troops.

America's position may be a proud one, but I sometimes think we are about the only people who indulge in a full measure of that pride. Other nations do not regard us as omnipotent, and this much is certain, that as long as we have those troops in Europe, when trouble is menacing, every effort will be made by one side or the other to gain an advantage from that. That means we begin to take sides in the controversy. Once a nation puts its finger in a strife between two other nations, its hand, its arm, and its body are likely soon to follow.

Let us get these American boys home. Let European statesmen take the responsibility of their own acts. Let no situation exist where, even by intent and conspiracy, an attack might be made for the mere purpose of dragging us into a conflict. The Senator from Massachusetts stated the correct position, in my opinion, when he said that these troops should have been home long ago.

Certainly they should have been ordered home when we signed a solemn treaty of peace with Germany. The Senator from New Mexico says we should know the reason for the troops being kept there. We should have known that reason long ago, if there be a reason. The country should have known it; the world should have known it.

Four years ago last November the battle flags were furled, the war was over, but we kept our troops there. It was justifiable up to the time the treaty of Versailles was signed, and not one minute longer. When that treaty was signed European nations had made their peace. We had no further responsibility to them. They got what they demanded, and perhaps it was our duty to stand by until they did get what they demanded. When they got what they demanded it was no part of our duty to act as a collection agency for indemnities or penalties which inured to them, when we were marching out without the levy of a penny of indemnity. That was their business.

Senators, I think, are mistaken. They imagine the people of this country do not want their troops home and do not want to escape this present menace in Europe. I hope the motion will be voted down.

Mr. HEFLIN rose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if we could have a vote now, I would be perfectly willing to have it taken. This discussion has been going on nearly an hour since the unfinished business came up; and unless we can have a vote, I shall be constrained to call for the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will not occupy more than two minutes' time, and then I will be perfectly willing to have a vote taken.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will take only a couple of minutes, I will withhold the call for the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from New Mexico, I just want to say that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations received a letter from the President when the Borah amendment asking for an economic conference was pending in this Chamber, and in that letter the President was quick to let the Senate know that he opposed that amendment. The President must have known that on yesterday the Senator from Missouri introduced this resolution, and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. LODGE] has been on the floor to-day; and if the President had opposed the resolution very strongly, I suppose we would have heard from him. He knew what was going on here.

I think these troops ought to be brought home. The Republican Party promised in 1920 they would bring them home just as soon as possible, and they should have been brought home immediately after the treaty was signed. They have not been brought home, and we ought to bring them home now.

I do not want to embarrass the President in any way, and I do not want the country endangered in any way by the threatening conditions which now obtain in Europe. I do not want our boys to be there so that harm could come to them. I hope the resolution will pass.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, last year when the Army appropriation bill was before us, I offered an amendment providing that none of the funds appropriated therein should go to pay our soldiers in Germany after 60 days. That amendment was defeated. I felt then that our soldiers ought to be brought home, and I have felt the same ever since. I believe the quicker we bring them home the quicker those countries will settle their differences, and it will be better for all parties concerned. I shall therefore vote for the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to refer the resolution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. NEW. I understand the vote is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent. I promised to take care of him with a pair during his absence, but I have a right to transfer it. I find I can transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], I do so and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). Announcing my pair with my colleague [Mr. WILLIS], who is detained because of illness in his family, I refrain from voting. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). Transferring my general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to my colleague [Mr. PEPPER], I vote "yea."

Mr. SHIELDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is absent, I understand, on account of illness. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (when Mr. WADSWORTH's name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. If he were present, he would vote "yea"; and if I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. WILLIS's name was called). I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is unavoidably detained by reason of serious illness in his family. He is paired with his colleague [Mr. POMERENE], as has been stated.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BROUSSARD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. CARAWAY. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] on official business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is necessarily absent on account of important business. He has a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I have voted, but find that that Senator is not present. Therefore I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has not voted.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have a general pair with that Senator. I do not know how he would vote upon this question. I am unable to obtain a transfer of the pair, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 38, as follows:

So the Senate refused to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, now that it appears the resolution of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will be voted upon, I desire to state briefly the reasons which impel me to vote against it.

I do not believe the resolution should be adopted, at any rate without being first referred to a committee; without the Senate having the judgment of a committee which shall have had opportunity to investigate the matter and learn and report whether there are any reasons why American troops should be left in the Rhine Valley or any reason why they should be withdrawn. In that event, unless the committee should report strong and cogent reasons for the withdrawal of the troops, I should even then vote against a resolution requesting or advising the President to withdraw them.

There was reason for stationing and keeping some of our troops in the Rhine Valley after the signing of the armistice. President Wilson was then Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and he had, I am sure, good and sufficient reasons for his action in keeping some of our troops there. President Harding, who succeeded him, has continued to keep some of them there. Some of them have been gradually withdrawn, and the number there has been greatly diminished; but there are still a small number there, and I have no doubt President Harding, the Commander in Chief, has sound reasons for keeping them there. I believe we have much the same reason for keeping troops there that the Entente Allies have for keeping their troops there; that the difference is only one of degree. It is true we have no reparations due us, expect none, and will have none, but a large number of claims have been made and more will be made by citizens of this country against Germany for damages inflicted by Germany upon them prior to our entrance into the World War. Citizens of this country have something due them from Germany, and I think we should be just as much interested in collecting claims due our citizens as the Entente Allies are in securing reparations for themselves. It is a difference in degree; that is all.

We are interested in maintaining order in that section of the world. I think it is to our interest, as well as to the interest of the rest of the world, to have order maintained there and to see that Germany complies with her obligations, no matter what they may be, whether reparations or damages. Undoubtedly our troops have had a stabilizing effect there, and I do not see any reason why we should run away from there now, simply upon the mere appearance of trouble arising. Our troops were put there to prevent trouble, and why should we run away immediately that trouble is threatened? True, it is reported that France threatens to invade the Ruhr Basin. As I understand, under the provisions of the Versailles treaty, the Entente Allies have a right to invade the Ruhr Basin and take possession of it whenever Germany shall be found in default in her agreement to make payment of reparations.

I do not think we need to be so very much afraid of France doing anything wrong and dragging us into it. France has been our friend and our ally, and I do not think we need to mistrust her on this particular occasion. I do not think we should do anything which would tend to encourage Germany to continue willfully and deliberately to evade payment of her reparations, and, in my opinion, that would be the effect of the withdrawal of our troops just now. I think Germany has been willfully and deliberately evading payment of her reparations and pretending she could not pay more. If we should withdraw our troops at this particular time I have no doubt that action would encourage Germany to persist in her policy of evasion. It may be said we are not concerned in the collection of reparations for the Entente Allies. We are not directly concerned but we are indirectly concerned.

I think the peace, welfare, and prosperity of the world depends largely upon Germany making an effort in good faith to pay the reparations which she agreed to pay. We are interested in having her do so, as all the rest of the world is interested, on account of the stabilizing and tranquilizing effect it would have upon the world. While we are not directly concerned in compelling Germany to pay her reparations, I think we should be concerned not to do something which would encourage her willfully and deliberately to continue to evade payment. We are interested in having every nation in the world make an honest effort to comply with its duties and discharge its solemn obligations, because it is the only way in which the disturbed conditions of the world, I think, can be stabilized.

It is said by some that we are getting no pay from Germany for the expense of keeping our troops over there. That is true, but that is no reason why the troops should be withdrawn. We have had no payment on that obligation or at least none of any consequence. However, it costs us no more to keep troops there than here. Troops can be kept more cheaply there than here. I doubt, though, if we will ever be reimbursed. I do not think Germany intends to pay us, if she can get out of it. I do not think Germany intends to pay her reparations to the Entente Allies, if she can get out of it. In my opinion, there is only one argument that will have any influence on Germany and that is the argument of force. If France is entitled to use force, I do not think we should run away and refuse even to be a witness to what may take place there.

I think this would be a very inopportune time for us to withdraw our troops or even for the Senate to express a desire that the President withdraw them. The time and circumstances are inauspicious. I think the President should be left to exercise his own judgment in the matter and should not be hampered by action of the Senate. He is Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States. It is an Executive province, and I think it should be left to the President, without interference, for the present, at least. Therefore I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. McCORMICK obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to know how long the Senator from Illinois is likely to speak?

Mr. McCORMICK. About two or three minutes. If Senators will bear with me, I merely wish to say by way of reply, in part, to the Senator from Montana, that the argument which he advanced against the adoption of the pending resolution seemed to me to be one addressed to the Senate in its favor. It would have been more expedient, in my judgment, to have postponed action upon this resolution for a few days during the pending crisis in Europe, but since the Senate has decided otherwise, it would be a grave mistake by our action to lead Governments across the sea to believe that we approve the course which events have taken.

No one who has followed the press of this country can mistake its common judgment, its common criticism, of the course decided upon by the continental allies dealing with the question of reparations. Under these circumstances if this resolution were to fail, first there would be those in Europe who might easily construe its failure as an approval of their course toward reparations, while others would believe that we purpose the continuance of the occupation of Coblenz by American forces and that in so doing we represent the views of the American people. We know that that would not be true, but they would not know it across the sea.

Since this resolution has come before us and is about to be voted upon, there is only one candid course for the Senate to pursue, and that is to vote for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as modified. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. NEW. A parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the amendment which was offered by me to the resolution was accepted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and is a part of the resolution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROUSSARD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement which I made before in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I do not know how he would vote on this motion, and I am unable to obtain a transfer. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea." I also desire to announce that if the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] were present and voting he would vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when the name of Mr. NORRIS was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent from the Senate on account of a death in his family. If he were present he would vote "yea" on this resolution.

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with my colleague, the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], who is absent because of illness in his family, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the former vote and vote "nay."

Mr. SHIELDS (when his name was called). On account of the absence of my pair, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], as stated, I will withhold my vote. If my pair were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). My pair being absent, and being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as on the preceding vote, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to state that my colleague, the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], is necessarily absent, and is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] is necessarily detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. SHIELDS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw the statement which I have made regarding the transfer of my pair. I understand that, if present, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], with whom I am paired, would vote "yea," and therefore I let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 6, as follows:

So the resolution as modified was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the President should order the immediate return to the United States of all troops of the United States now stationed in Germany.

In giving this expression of its opinion the Senate disavows any unfriendly or partisan attitude toward any nation or nations of Europe.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to have presented to the Senate the request for unanimous consent which I sent to the desk yesterday afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Washington.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on and after the calendar day of Monday, January 22, 1923, in the consideration of H. R. 12817, the shipping bill, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 60 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 30 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto, and that on and after the calendar day of Thursday, February 1, if said bill is not sooner disposed of, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment then pending or thereafter offered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] has been necessarily called from the Chamber. Before leaving he asked me, if the request of the Senator from Washington were presented, to note his objection to it. I therefore feel obliged to object.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand the Senator from Florida to object?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; for the junior Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think a Senator on the floor can voice the objection of another Senator who is not present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; I object on my own responsibility. We need not be technical about the matter. I am stating the fact, as I was requested to do by the junior Senator from Iowa, and the objection is noted. Senators may take it either way they like.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Ernst	McKellar	Sutherland
Broussard	Fletcher	Nelson	Townsend
Bursum	George	New	Trammell
Capper	Harris	Oddie	Underwood
Caraway	Harrison	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Heflin	Ransdell	Watson
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Sheppard
Dial	Lenroot	Shields
Dillingham	Lodge	Sterling

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. CAMERON, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. MCKINLEY, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. REED of Missouri, Mr. SHORTRIDGE, Mr. STANLEY, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as this is Saturday afternoon, I know if we secure a quorum we shall accomplish nothing; that the time will simply be taken up until the usual hour for adjournment. I realize the difficulty when I am up against a situation of this kind. I do not think we would gain anything by sending the Sergeant at Arms after absent Members this afternoon. I do not believe we will lose anything by adjourning at the present time. So I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 8, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 6, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, our unchangeable friend, do Thou hear our prayer as we lift to Thee our breath of gratitude. In our sins and in our failures remember mercy. Give us the love that envies not, that seeks not its own but suffers and labors long for the advancement of everything that is good. Ever hold us to the duty, the dignity, and the destiny of our being. Be Thou the refuge for every officer, every Member, every helper, and every home of this assembly. Be with him whose heartstrings have been shattered by the hand of death and give him great peace. Touch all our hearthstones and to-morrow fill them with the sweetest joy. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PEYOTE.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes in order to correct what I think to be an erroneous opinion that might be formed from an article appearing in the Washington Post this morning relative to certain legislation..

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will confine his request to five minutes, I will not object.

Mr. McCLINTIC. It probably will not take more than five or seven minutes; just enough to have a letter read. I think seven minutes will be enough.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to address the House for seven minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in order that an erroneous opinion may not be formed, I respectfully wish to call attention to an item which appeared in the Washington Post this morning relating to the use of peyote among the Indians. I want to say that it is used as a religious rite among the Indians of Oklahoma, and there are Indian doctors who prescribe it as a medicine. It has never been decided by any of the medical authorities to be a deleterious drug. If it is decided to be a deleterious drug and is harmful to the Indians, I will be the last one ever to make any objection to its suppression. In my time I ask the clerk to read the article published in the Washington Post and a letter which came to me unsolicited from a doctor in Oklahoma who is trying to look after the health and welfare of the Indians.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Saturday, January 6, 1923.]

REDSKINS' "SUPERHOOCH" SURVIVES SENATE ATTACK.

The crafty red-skinned aborigine may have the same difficulty as his white conqueror in getting his fire water these days, but he still has his peyote, and peyote, according to competent testimony, will produce a more prolonged jag than the best 100-proof redeye.

The Senate yesterday, after considerable debate, declined to give its approval to an appropriation of $25,000 for the suppression of the use of peyote among the Indians. Peyote, it was generally admitted, enabled the Indians to get even drunker than they could on "red" liquor, but it was saved from the ban on the ground that its use was absolutely essential to the Indians' religion.

When the item came up, in connection with the Interior Department bill, Senator HARRISON (Democrat), Mississippi, asked Senator SMOOT (Republican), Utah, to give the Senate some information about peyote.

"It's the same to the Indian as rot-gut whisky is to the white man," answered Senator SMOOT. "The only difference is that its effect lasts longer."

He explained that it was made of a small bean grown along the Rio Grande, and that one of its effects was to produce a delusion of great wealth. Senator JONES (Democrat), New Mexico, said he had investigated its effects on the Indians and had been informed by a missionary that it brought about "a most beautiful state of mind."

"The missionary added that it produced such a good feeling that he felt sure he could make Christians of all the Indians in the United States within a few days if he had a large enough supply of peyote beans," said Senator JONES.

ANADARKO, OKLA., January 2, 1923.

Hon. J. V. McCLINTIC,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: No doubt you will look upon this as an unwarranted presumption on my part, and had you wished any information from me, would have asked for it. Still, I am hoping you might find this of some little interest.

The stand you took regarding the bill aimed at peyote was of course published in the Oklahoman, and it is this I am writing about.

No doubt you know that my work here has to do with the Kiowa, Comanche, Delaware, Caddo, Wichita, Apache Indians; a great number of all these use peyote to some extent.

Before assuming the attitude toward this bill which you did, I am sure you informed yourself upon the subject; but, unfortunately, Mr. McCLINTIC, the medical profession really knows very little about the effect of peyote or its actual value in disease, if any.

Dr. Ernest E. Hadley, of St. Elizabeths Hospital, Washington, D. C., wrote me some time ago, requesting that I assist him in obtaining a supply of the drug for experimental work, as he and Doctor Nolon were contemplating some such work. It was my intention of carrying out some experiments of my own and checking with the results obtained by these two doctors. Working separately and then comparing results would be much more reliable than if all were working together. At first I thought I could obtain the peyote for Hadley and myself, as one of the peyote doctors (Indian) promised to supply me; but he has failed to do so, and I doubt that he will, as the Indians are suspicious of all whites regarding their intention toward peyote, and it is impossible to obtain the drug through the regular drug firms, and the Indians send one of their number into Mexico for the drug.

Mr. McCLINTIC, I do hope you won't think me too presumptious in this matter, and I am perfectly well aware that you are able to look out for your own interest; however, I feel that you may not fully understand what particular element it is that is stirring up the war on peyote.

It is the missionaries that are continually writing about the peyote orgies, etc.; it is this element that will fight you if you stand up for the Indians in their use of this drug. Unfortunately, there is no proof that peyote has any real value in disease. We have only the Indians' word for it. Personally, I believe there must be some therapeutic value to the drug; but this is only an opinion, and not being a Murphy, Osler, or Mayo, my poor opinion is of little value. The missionaries can not prove that it has no value; but you know how public sentiment goes, and these missionaries have great influence in some quarters. From what I can learn, their fight is not based upon the actual physical harm done the Indian by the use of peyote—that is an excuse to offer the public—but it is because the peyote church is gaining more converts than the missionaries, and one familiar with the average missionary and his work among the Indians is not surprised. These men are, as a rule, narrow, bigoted, and overbearing in their attitude toward any who do not "think or pretend to think as they do." They sometimes ride roughshod over old Indian tradition, custom, and belief; and I am sorry to say that some of them destroy the "belief" of the Indian in the Gods of his forefathers, yet give him nothing in place of it.

This same thing exists in regard to peyote. Instead of going about quietly and really studying the drug or have it investigated by men qualified to do so, they jump in and begin telling the Indian it is no good, he is a fool to use it, and Uncle Sam is going to stop it, etc., and write letters about the peyote meetings that are as far from the truth (some of them) as we are from the sun.

It is not my intention to bore you with my opinion, etc.; my idea was merely to let you know that in opposing the bill against peyote you will incur the enmity of these missionaries here at least, and they are not such good Christians as to love their enemies.

I can state positively that I have never found any reason to think the Indians worship the peyote cactus itself; all state positively that they worship a Supreme Being, an invisible God, and pray to Him and thank Him for giving them peyote to heal their ills. It might be that Belo Cozard, Apache, Okla., R. F. D., could furnish evidence of the healing qualities of peyote; he is an educated Indian of more than average intelligence and has studied and used peyote for 30 years; is the leading peyote doctor in this locality.

Now, Mr. McCLINTIC, please pardon me for butting in on this matter. I have informed you how matters stand here. These missionaries are determined to wipe out the peyote church and are using the United States Government to do it. I know nothing about peyote, but have been here since September and although I treat from 10 to 18 Indians every day and have been in many, many Indian homes I have never observed any of the dreadful things supposed to exist among these peyote eaters. I am neither against peyote nor for it; only I believe in fair play for all, and think we should first prove that peyote is what the missionaries claim it is before calling upon Congress to adopt drastic steps to eradicate it; but above all I did not want to see JIM MCCLINTIC get these missionaries on his trail without warning him, even if I had to presume upon his many kindnesses to me to do it. You know the pulpit wields a dreadful power, second only to the press.

Once more asking you to pardon me for butting in, and assuring you that it is only my regard for you that encourages me to write this letter and trusting that you will not hesitate, if I can obtain any desired information, to call upon me, but keep my name from the missionary board unless you need to use this information for your own benefit. I beg to remain, with many thanks for past favors,

Gratefully and respectfully yours,

———— ————.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I have a telegram authorizing me to use the letter.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4030. An act for the relief of Capt. Murray A. Cobb.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill H. R. 13559, the Interior Department appropriation bill, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 259) authorizing the President to abrogate the international agreements embodied in certain Executive orders relating to the Panama Canal, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Interior Department appropriation bill be taken from the table, all amendments be disagreed to, and the bill sent to conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Interior Department appropriation bill (H. R. 13559) and disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] has no objection.

Mr. CARTER. May I ask the gentleman if he knows of any changes that have been made in the House bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I noted by the press that the bill as reported to the Senate carried an increase of only $363,000. I have not had an opportunity to check up the changes by the committee or on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman, after hearing that two or three page letter from a doctor who did not know anything about peyote, if he is going to permit the paragraph for the suppression of peyote to go out of the bill without giving the House a chance to pass on it?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that he realizes that when going into conference one does not like to commit himself, particularly when he has not had an opportunity to consult his colleagues.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that the House has passed on that matter several times by a very decided vote.

Mr. CRAMTON. My own personal desire under existing conditions would be to retain the House provision.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman give us a chance to pass on that before he lets it go out?

Mr. CRAMTON. I hardly want to pledge myself on that.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. CRAMTON the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 13660), with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday there was pending a point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] against a paragraph in the bill. In order that the Members may be informed as to what the paragraph is, the Chair without objection will ask the Clerk to read the paragraph again.

The Clerk read as follows:

To carry out the provisions contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, which authorize the commissioners to open, extend, or widen any street, avenue, road, or highway to conform with the plan of the permanent system of highways in that portion of the District of Columbia outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown there is appropriated such sum as is necessary for said purpose during the fiscal year 1924, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in connection with that point of order, verifying my suggestion to the Chair last night to the effect that the provision has been treated for several years by the courts as law, I have here a letter from President Rudolph, of the Board of Commissioners of the District, responding to my inquiry, which letter is as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Washington, January 6, 1923.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
Chairman of Subcommittee on Appropriations,
District of Columbia, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: Referring to your inquiry as to whether any question has been raised in the courts whether certain legislation contained in the District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914 (U. S. Stats., vol. 37, p. 950), is permanent law, I beg to advise you that this provision has always been considered by the commissioners and by the courts as permanent law. The corporation counsel advises that in no case which has been instituted under this law has the question of its permanency been raised. A great deal of District legislation, such as the public utilities law, the law regarding policemen and firemen's pensions, and other similar enactments, have been carried in District appropriation acts.

Since the enactment of this law, annual appropriations have been made in the District appropriation act from year to year to carry out its provisions.

In the annual report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1922 (p. 45), you will see that 46 condemnation cases were before the courts during the year, of which a considerable number were instituted under the provisions of this law.

Some of the more important cases now pending in court which were instituted under the provisions of this law are the opening of all streets in Barry farm, a subdivision in the vicinity of St. Elizabeths Hospital; the opening of Webster, Allison, and Buchanan Streets and Arkansas Avenue; the opening of Western Avenue between Massachusetts and Wisconsin Avenues; and the widening of Southern Avenue between Bonini Road and Livingston Road. Other larger condemnation cases in contemplation are the widening of Canal Road from Thirty-sixth and M Streets to the Conduit Road, and the widening of Broad Branch Road from the District line to Rock Creek Park.

Very respectfully,

CUNO H. RUDOLPH,
President Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

It will be seen from this letter that many of the cases brought under this provision are pending in the courts of the District, but no attorney appearing before those courts and opposing the proceedings instituted under this section has seen fit to question its validity as law. Not only can Congress very well afford to follow the interpretation of the courts, but I feel that it would be dangerous for the House now to have a holding that this is not law. It might have a disturbing effect upon many proceedings pending in the courts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the chairman of the subcommittee as to a question of fact. I notice that in lines 17 and 18 it speaks of "that portion of the District of Columbia outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown." What are the boundary districts of the city of Washington?

Mr. CRAMTON. As my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has pointed out so well, there is at the present time no such entity as the city of Washington. There was at one time, however.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is what I understood.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is now a District of Columbia.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is no city of Washington, there are no boundary limits to the city of Washington. If you put into the statute that the territory in question shall be the territory between the limits of the city of Washington and the boundary of the District of Columbia, just what do you mean, and over what specific territory would the commission's authority extend under this law?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the question the gentleman raises as to the language in the appropriation affected is, of course, not material to the determination of the validity of the act of 1914 on which the point of order is based. There may be some desirable change in this language, but it would not affect the validity of the act of 1914.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I would state in connection with the remarks made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that the original city was first chartered in 1902, and that charter gave to the city of Washington no boundary whatever. It was as broad as the face of the earth. The charter never even said that it was in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, in respect to the letter read by the chairman of the subcommittee, it seems to me that this sheds no light whatever upon this question. The opinion of the Commissioner of the District of Columbia has nothing whatever to do with the question of whether or not the law authorizes this. The question as to whether or not some attorney has failed to raise the question has no bearing upon the matter. The Chair is here called upon to pass on this with reference to the language and spirit of the law authorizing these appropriations, and upon nothing else. I have no objection whatever to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] submitting a letter from the commissioners, but I certainly would feel that a parliamentary ruling based upon a letter of this character would be out of keeping with the parliamentary practices of the House. The Chair must go back to the original legislation to determine the nature of that authority, and pass upon this question in the light of the permanent law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan or the gentleman from Kentucky a question. Since the passage of this act of 1914, with that proviso in it, have any streets in the District of Columbia been opened up without a special act of Congress, or have they all been opened up without special acts of Congress?

Mr. STAFFORD. No.

Mr. BLANTON. No; not one.

Mr. CRAMTON. Since the act of 1914 proceedings have been instituted and streets have been opened under that act of 1914, but whether there has been any special act that did open some special street I can not tell. I think not.

Mr. MADDEN. The streets were opened as the result of court decrees.

Mr. CRAMTON. Decrees based on the act of 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will assume that all streets opened up since 1914 have been opened up under the authorization of the act of 1914?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, after yesterday's proceedings, I spoke to the clerk of our committee and he told me that all proceedings for opening streets, damage suits, and the like, condemnation proceedings, have been under this general authorization act of 1914, and to my knowledge no special act has passed the House since 1914 providing for the opening of streets, whereas prior to that time on District days we frequently had special bills for that purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] is eminently correct. The Indian appropriation bill for years carried two-thirds of its provisions not authorized by substantive law. They were treated as permanent law until the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] resorted to his rights when he became a little peeved about his authority being taken away from his committee by the Committee on Appropriations, and made points of order, and section after section went out of that bill, until, under special rule, the bill had to be brought in here and revamped in a legislative way. The Chair will remember that. Because provisions in an appropriation bill have long been considered as permanent law is no reason why they are permanent law. Here is the crux of the whole business. If the Chair will read in yesterday's Star and yesterday's Times he will find out the purpose of this provision. He will see that there is a new plan entirely for the city here in the widening of numerous streets and the opening of several streets. The main plan is to widen a number of streets in the city of Washington, and they want to do it without any supervision of Congress whatever. This indefinite provision for the appropriation here could amount to forty or fifty million dollars before we get through with it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This law, if interpreted as it is now claimed it ought to be interpreted and always has been interpreted, would be similar to a law—I never heard of one—which would authorize a city council to give to a committee of that council the authority, in the discretion of such committee, to open, extend, or widen any street in that city.

Mr. BLANTON. Exactly. If they wanted to extend a street through Rock Creek Park they could do it under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Congress, under the Constitution, takes the place of a city council for Washington and has exclusive authority to enact laws to govern it.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and we ought not to delegate that authority.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And yet we have, as a common council, turned over to a commission the right to open, extend, or widen any street—a commission not chosen by Congress nor by the people of Washington.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The argument the gentleman is making now and the reinforcement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] are both as to the desirability of lodging that judgment in the commissioners.

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what this provision does.

Mr. CRAMTON. That has nothing whatever to do with the question of the validity of the act of 1914. That is the question that is before the Chair. It is not a question as to whether it is a wise law, but as to whether it is law.

Mr. BLANTON. It was never contemplated in 1914 by the committee that put in that provision that they should have blanket authority to widen any street they saw fit in the city of Washington. Quite a number of streets that are in the program were mentioned in yesterday evening's paper. They took it for granted that this provision was going to get by, and they let the cat out of the bag and showed how many different streets they expected to widen right away. I know something about widening streets and the cost of such a thing. Write to the city of San Antonio or ask our colleague [Mr. WURZBACH] how much it has cost the city of San Antonio to widen two streets in that city, and he will tell you something about the expense of it.

It could run up into fifty, sixty, seventy, or one hundred million dollars in a very short time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if I may take one more minute to suggest to the Chair the question before the committee is not the wisdom of the act of 1914. And it is not the question of the wisdom of the appropriation proposed in the pending bill. It is as to whether the act of 1914 is to-day valid law. If it is not valid, any proceedings to widen streets and to open new streets brought under that law of 1914 would be knocked out by the courts; they would not sustain any proceedings whatever. It is immaterial whether this section is in the appropriation act or not. If the act of 1914 is not law to-day, this section does not make it law. It only gives the money to carry into effect proceedings under it. If it is law, proceedings will be sustained under it; if it is not law, they will not, whether we give this item or not. So the question of the wisdom of the act is not before the committee. The question of wisdom of making appropriations to carry on proceedings under the act will come before the House when the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. So that we may get the record straight, does not the act of 1914 provide that the courts must assess benefits equal to the damages, and so the statement of the gentleman from Texas is entirely erroneous.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; of course that affects the question of the wisdom of the law but not its permanency.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The gentleman referred to the enormous cost of opening streets. My understanding is that the act of 1914 provides that the benefits must be assessed equal to the damages.

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly. And these expenses to carry out proceedings contained in this section referred to are paid wholly out of the revenues of the District.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, if my memory serves me, the original authority under which the commissioners will act is found in the twentieth volume of the Statutes at Large. What relation to that subsequent legislation has had I can not say, but there is only one amendment to that law that I know of. Whether the 1914 law applies I can not say, but if any of you are at a loss with regard to what the authority is you had better begin to study the twentieth volume. I just make that suggestion because my memory is pretty certain that that is where it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that the provision in the bill which is now under consideration is not at all a bad one. However, the question is not on its merits or demerits, and instead of that the question comes directly upon the point of order. The act of 1914 has been much discussed, but it has not been read for the benefit of the House, so I will read it:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to open, extend, or widen any street, avenue, road, or highway to conform with the plan of the permanent system of highways in that portion of the District of Columbia outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, adopted under the act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898, by condemnation under the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia: Provided, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury under such proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land condemned, plus the cost and expenses of said proceedings, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits: And provided further, That the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken under the provisions hereof and the amounts awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned shall be paid entirely from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and shall be repaid to the said District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia, and such sum as is necessary for said purpose during the fiscal year to end June 30, 1914, is hereby appropriated, payable entirely from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman reread the first line? I did not get that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to open, extend, or widen any street, avenue, road, or highway to conform with the plan of the permanent system of highways," and so forth.

The question now arises, Mr. Chairman, whether that makes permanent or only temporary law. That provision is in the appropriation bill for 1914, and therefore made law for that year only. Because since that time a point of order has not been made against it in different appropriation bills does not make it permanent law. The commissioners themselves have not regarded it as permanent law. They from time to time have prepared and sent bills to the District Committee asking for authority to condemn land for streets. As has been well said by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], because the question has not been raised in the courts does not make permanent a temporary law. The same reason applies because the question has not been raised in the House. It may drift along from year to year as a temporary law, but it can not be made permanent merely because no Member of the House ever chose to make a point of order against it. As I said at the outset, I am not undertaking to question the merits of the proposition. As a member of the subcommittee I let it go by, believing it just as well to let the commissioners have that authority, but I believed all the while, and I believe now, that there is no question that it is subject to the point of order. Again, I wish to say I am not opposing the item on its merits, but I do think, for the purpose of having the rules of the House followed, that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. TILSON. If the Chair will indulge me just a moment, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the question for the Chair to decide is a simple one, and one that has no relation whatever to the merits or demerits of this alleged law. The language of the paragraph of the bill is simply sufficient to make the appropriation to be used to carry out the provisions contained in a certain act referred to. If there is no law now, certainly there is no attempt here to create law. It simply attempts to make an appropriation to carry out the provisions of a law which is cited here in this paragraph. There can be no harm done, it seems to me, if there is an appropriation made for carrying out the provisions of a law that does not in fact exist. This does not make law; therefore, if there be no law, its provisions can not be carried out even though we make an appropriation.

Mr. DOWELL. It occurs to me that that is no reason for ruling upon the point of order on the ground that it may or may not do irreparable injury. The question is whether there is law to sustain this appropriation. If not, the Chair should sustain this point of order and not overrule it because it will not do harm.

Mr. TILSON. The Chair can not determine that.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to suggest another thing: In the appropriation bills where there is legislation intended to be permanent you will recall that the Committee on Appropriations places the word "hereafter" in the legislation; it then applies to other appropriations outside of the bill pending and then is subject to a point of order. In this provision there is nothing to indicate that it is permanent law.

Mr. TILSON. This paragraph would certainly not make it permanent law. There is no attempt to legislate in this paragraph. It simply attempts to make an appropriation to carry out the provisions of a law supposed to be already in existence. If it is already in existence, this appropriation can be used for that purpose, and so far as the Chair is concerned, he is not called upon to determine whether that law is wise, whether it is permanent, whether it is temporary, or what the nature of the law is.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the legislative provision is passed only for one fiscal year and at the termination of that fiscal year ceases to be law, how could it be the basis for an appropriation?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman is assuming that that is so. It does not appear to be so.

Mr. BLANTON. That is my contention.

Mr. TILSON. But this paragraph attempts to appropriate funds to carry out the provisions of a certain law. If there is no such law the money can not be expended. So far as the Chair is concerned, this paragraph states that there is such a law, and cites the year in which it was passed, and appropriates a sum of money to carry out its provisions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman mean to say that there is such a law or there was such a law?

Mr. TILSON. I say that, so far as this bill is concerned, there is such an act as that referred to in this paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There was such an act, and that act has died.

Mr. BLANTON. It is dead.

Mr. DOWELL. The mere statement in this paragraph as to legislation heretofore enacted is of no value to the Chair in ruling upon this question. The parliamentary proposition is that there must be legislation to sustain this appropriation.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Kentucky has just read a portion of that legislation.

Mr. DOWELL. It is purely for the purpose of construing the language of that legislation. Does the gentleman construe the paragraph read by the gentleman from Kentucky to be permanent law upon which this appropriation can be based?

Mr. TILSON. I do not think the Chair is called upon to determine whether that is permanent law or not.

Mr. DOWELL. That is the law referred to in this specific paragraph, and it is the only provision that the Chair apparently has to pass upon; and unless that is construed to be permanent law, it seems to me there is no question before the Chair, because no permanent law has been pointed out, unless the gentleman construes the language in the paragraph read by the gentleman from Kentucky to be permanent law.

Mr. TILSON. I do not think it is necessary for the Chair to go back and pass upon the previous act referred to in this paragraph.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not a well-known principle that before an appropriation will stand the one who offers it must show the law upon which the appropriation is made?

Mr. TILSON. The Members supporting this paragraph have cited that law and read it into the RECORD.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman himself will not say to the Chair that it is permanent law.

Mr. TILSON. So far as the Chair is called upon to rule, it is permanent law, in my judgment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the position that I take is that the act of 1914, which is a part of an appropriation act of that year, made law for that year only. The Code of Law for the District of Columbia, section 491a, makes the permanent law. That permanent law reads as follows:

Whenever land is needed for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of any street, avenue, road, or highway in the District of Columbia authorized by Congress, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia sitting as a district court by petition a proceeding in rem for the condemnation of the land needed.

Now, the act of 1914, I can only repeat, made law only for the year 1914, and in other years the permanent law set out in the Code of the District of Columbia, which I have just read, must prevail.

Mr. BLANTON. And that requires an act of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That gives the commissioners no power to open or condemn any street unless the authorization first be made by Congress.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the provision he has just read was enacted in 1907, and the act of 1914 was passed seven years later.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But the act of 1907 was permanent law, and the act of 1914 is law for that year only.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is just what we are arguing about. Now, whether the act of 1914 was permanent law or not can not be determined by an act passed in 1907. It has nothing to do with the situation. My contention is that the act of 1914 is just as much law as any law we ever passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It was only for that year. It only set aside the permanent law for that year.

Mr. CRAMTON. The act of 1914 was not tied to or related to any other item in any way. It was put in as permanent law.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HICKS). The Chair realizes that the determination of this question is of considerable importance. The gentleman from Kentucky referred to the act of April 30, 1906. In the opinion of the Chair this law, the permanency of which is not questioned, authorizes the institutions of condemnation proceedings for the purpose of opening, extending, and widening streets. It would seem to the Chair that in the appropriation act of 1914 the provision "that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized whenever in their judgment the public interest requires it to prepare a new highway plan," is a supplementary authority giving to the commissioners the right under the act of 1906 to extend the highway system in accordance with a definite plan; therefore the question that presents itself to the Chair is this: Is the provision in the act of 1914 permanent law, or was it only temporary? The Chair has taken the time to consider this question rather thoroughly, for he is alive to the fact that it has far-reaching consequences.

The Chair admits that this point of order is a rather close one, and so far as the Chair has been able to ascertain there are no precedents covering the exact situation presented. The present occupant of the chair has frequently been called upon to render decisions involving the placing of legislative provisions on appropriation bills and has uniformly held that unless it was clearly evident that such legislative authorization incorporated in appropriation bills was of a permanent character the authorization thus created would terminate at the end of the fiscal year for which the appropriations were made.

It has been suggested that the test of permanency of legislation on an appropriation bill should rest upon the use or nonuse of the word "hereafter," and while this is the usual and more positive method of making legislation permanent, the Chair dissents from the view that this is the only test, for the Chair feels that other words might easily and frequently are employed to accomplish the same purpose. By reference to the appropriation act of 1914, the Chair finds that the legislative authority for the extension of the highway system—the permanency of which authority is now disputed—is clothed in this phraseology, "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized whenever in their judgment the public interest requires it," and so forth. It seems to the Chair that the word "whenever," as used in this act, is for all intents and purposes synonymous with the word "hereafter."

From a practical standpoint it is hardly conceivable that a comprehensive plan for streets in a great, rapidly growing city could be matured in any fiscal year or that future needs could be accurately anticipated in any 12-month period. Any plan devised by any board of engineers would undoubtedly have to be modified with the growth and development of the city. From the parliamentary standpoint the Chair is cognizant of the fact that under the act of 1914 streets have been opened and extended without additional legislation and that the courts have sustained condemnation proceedings under that act. By the use of the word "whenever" and interpreting the purpose of Congress by the scope of the authority granted in 1914 it seems to the Chair that it was the evident intention to make it an authorization permanent in character, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Georgetown Bridge across Potomac River: For miscellaneous supplies and expenses of every kind necessarily incident to the maintenance of the bridge and approaches, $2,000: Provided, That upon its completion the jurisdiction and control of the said bridge and approaches shall be under the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 30, line 10, after the word "bridge," insert a comma and the words "which shall hereafter be known as the Francis Scott Key Bridge."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the Washington Board of Trade, the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and various other organizations have asked for the permanent naming of this bridge as a memorial to Francis Scott Key, whose house was at one of the abutments of the bridge. I offered last June a resolution for this purpose.

This proposition was indorsed by the Washington Board of Trade as noted recently in the Star.

The House Joint Resolution 350, changing the name of the new Georgetown Bridge to the Key Bridge, was unanimously indorsed by the bridges committee of the Washington Board of Trade, meeting yesterday afternoon in the board rooms in the Star Building. The committee believes that the Key Bridge would be a more appropriate name for the new structure.

The joint resolution referred to is as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 350) naming the new bridge over the Potomac River at Georgetown the Francis Scott Key Bridge.

Whereas the new bridge over the Potomac River at Georgetown abuts the District of Columbia side of the river at or near the site of the home of Francis Scott Key at the time he wrote the national anthem, and because of this is popularly known as the Key Bridge; and

Whereas there is no monument or other memorial to Francis Scott Key in the National Capital: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the official designation of said bridge be, and it is hereby declared to be, the Francis Scott Key Bridge.

And that such designation be appropriately inscribed on each end thereof, the expense of which inscription to be defrayed from existing appropriations made for the construction of said bridge, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to see that this joint resolution is carried into effect.

SEC. 2. That this joint resolution shall take effect immediately upon its passage.

The National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, have taken the same position, as follows:

MAY 16, 1922.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HILL: I have the honor to inform you that the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, at their thirty-first continental congress, held April, 1922, adopted a resolution approving the effort to have the name of the new bridge crossing the Potomac River, which starts from the site of the old home of Francis Scott Key, author of the Star-Spangled Banner, changed to Francis Scott Key Bridge.

Very sincerely yours,

RITA A. SAWYER,
Recording Secretary General.

The Maryland State Society, Daughters of the Revolution, passed the following resolutions:

DAUGHTERS OF THE REVOLUTION,
Maryland.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Keyser Building, City.

MY DEAR SIR: The Maryland State Society, Daughters of the Revolution, wish to express their hearty approval of the name "Francis Scott Key" for the new bridge at Georgetown.

Hoping you will use your influence to accomplish this, we beg to remain,

Very sincerely yours,

MARYLAND DAUGHTERS OF THE REVOLUTION,
MISS FRANCES STUART,
Corresponding Secretary,
The Boulevard, St. Paul and Thirty-second Streets.

JUNE 17, 1922.

President Harding, on June 14, 1922, at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, said in reference to Francis Scott Key:

Francis Scott Key, though he produced some splendid lines, was not a great poet. He was less, but he was also more, than a great poet. He was possessor of a patriotism which in a supreme moment could make words and meters its creatures and servitors; and so a modest genius was raised in one flaming hour to place among the immortals.

* * * * * * *

To give ringing voice to such a conviction, to such an inspiration, was one of the greatest services which any man could do for the young Republic. That was the service of Francis Scott Key. It was not in the production of soul-stirring lines, thrilling with martial appeal; it was in the contribution of his great hymn toward creating that sense of national pride and that realization of responsibility for a great adventure in behalf of humanity which became at last the inspiration of Union preserved and of nationalism established.

* * * * * * *

I think it fair to say that we have come here to-day, not so much to pay tribute to the genius which caught the inspiration of a vital moment and wrote that inspiration into one of the songs of the ages, but rather more to memorialize the patriotic service of the author in his everlasting contribution to the soul uplift and exaltation of his countrymen who live after him.

Finally, the history of the old bridge is contained in the following letter in the Star of November 23, 1922, from the regent of the local chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution:

[From The Star, Thursday, November 23, 1922.]

D. A. R. PROTESTS NAME PROPOSED FOR NEW BRIDGE.

To the Editor of The Star:

The new bridge spanning the Potomac from the grounds of the old home of Francis Scott Key to the shores of Virginia is about completed. It will soon be dedicated and given a name to stand for all time. Shall the Nation honor King George of England or the American poet-patriot, Francis Scott Key? Unless patriotic citizens voice a demand that the United States Congress can not disregard, the opportunity will be forever lost of naming this bridge in honor of Francis Scott Key. Secretary Weeks has informed us that the power rests in Congress alone. All plans and specifications used in the bridge construction bear the words "Francis Scott Key bridge." Unfortunately, a rider to an appropriation bill presented to Congress and passed by that body gave the name "Georgetown bridge" to the structure. An argument was made from the floor of the Congress to the effect that by so changing the name the memory of George Washington would be honored. This was an unfortunate mistake, for history shows us that the old port of Georgetown was named in honor of King George of England. The Father of His Country was not born until five years after George ascended the throne. Protests from patriotic societies and others crystallized in a resolution offered in the House in the last session of Congress asking that the original name be selected, that of Francis Scott Key, be given the bridge. This resolution has not been acted upon.

Ruth Brewster Chapter, D. A. R., passed, at its meeting Wednesday last, a resolution urging that Congress act favorably at this session upon the resolution to change the name of the new structure to the Francis Scott Key bridge, and copies of this resolution were ordered sent to the President, Secretary of War, and the chairman of the District Committee, House of Representatives.

Georgetown is incorporated in the city of Washington, and is therefore no longer a township; consequently the name Georgetown for the bridge, while perpetuating a sentimental memory of an old town, would convey no definite information in future years as to the location of the bridge. The old Key home has been completely changed, remodeled into a modern store, and is not recognizable as the old colonial home of the poet-patriot. Several years ago an attempt was made to save it—Admiral Dewey, president of the Francis Scott Key Memorial Association, working for this purpose; but the patriotic work failed, and the home was lost to the American people. Here at the Nation's Capital and at this time occurs the golden opportunity for the Nation to dedicate a memorial of gratitude to the author of our national anthem—a fitting memorial, located practically upon the historic spot which was his home; to which portals he brought his young bride; within whose walls all of his 11 children were born, and where he lived at the time of the writing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

MAUD LIPSCOMB GREENAWALT,
Regent, Ruth Brewster Chapter, D. A. R.

The name of "Georgetown" was given this bridge in the sundry civil appropriation bill of 1920, and it is appropriate that in this bill we give the more fitting name. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of getting some information. I am not opposed to the gentleman's amendment. I notice as to the item for highway bridge across the Potomac River and the Georgetown bridge across the Potomac River that the opposite ends of those bridges are in the State of Virginia. Does the State of Virginia pay any part of the cost of maintenance? It paid none of the cost of construction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit me to answer, I will do so by controverting the statement that the far end of the bridge is in Virginia. It has been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States that the line between Maryland and Virginia is at high water mark on the Virginia side of the river. Therefore the bridge in its entirety is in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. But the approaches, at least, maintained by Congress, come from the State of Virginia onto the bridge.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That depends on what may be called approaches. But there is no provision in this bill for the maintenance of anything except the bridge.

Mr. BLANTON. The State of Virginia is very fortunate in having the services of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], because elsewhere wherever a river is the dividing line between two States a bridge going across the river is maintained jointly by the two States. It is built by the two States jointly at their expense. Where a stream is the line between two counties in a State, a bridge across that stream is built jointly by the two counties and maintained at joint expense by the two counties. But all of our splendid bridges crossing the Potomac, leading out of the District of Columbia into Virginia, have been paid for by the people of the United States and maintained by the people of the United States. Virginia does not have to pay any part of the expense at all.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think that at the time this arrangement was made Virginia must have had some Representative equal in ability to the present very able Representative from that Virginia district [Mr. MOORE]?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. TILSON. And it was so arranged that Virginia would not have to pay for the maintenance of those bridges.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. But the continuation of the exemption is, I presume, largely because of the activities on the floor of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] whenever District matters are under consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Texas will further permit, he has just stated that where a river is the dividing line between two States a bridge across the river is constructed and maintained at the expense of the two States. That is not always the case. As I have just said, the high-water mark on the Virginia side is the line between the District of Columbia and Virginia, and so the normal low-water mark of the Ohio River on the Indiana side is the line between Kentucky and Indiana. The jurisdiction of Kentucky extends to the Indiana banks.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. It extends to low-water mark.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We do not use the terms "high" and "low" in the same sense there as here, because there is no tide in the Ohio.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. The Supreme Court of the United States decided in a case which I argued myself that the boundary line is low-water mark on the Indiana side.

Mr. BLANTON. The Potomac River is a navigable stream.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. So is the Ohio.

Mr. BLANTON. The Federal law usually applicable to navigable streams is that the dividing line is the center of the stream, but of course in these particular cases, in order that Virginia may not have to pay any part of the cost of maintenance, we have other provisions with regard to the Potomac.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREES AND PARKINGS.

For contingent expenses, including laborers, trimmers, nurserymen, repair men, teamsters, hire of carts, wagons, or motor trucks, trees, tree boxes, tree stakes, tree straps, tree labels, planting and care of trees on city and suburban streets, care of trees, tree spaces, maintenance of two motor trucks, and miscellaneous items, $50,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item does not include appropriation for the purchase of trees. Does the Government nursery raise all the trees required for planting in the streets of the District of Columbia? And what is the total cost for raising, planting, and taking care of the trees in the highways of the District of Columbia?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Government has a nursery out northeast and raises a great many trees. My assumption is that they raise all the trees that are needed and that there is no purchase of trees.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The appropriation would be available for the purchase of trees, would it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think so.

Mr. WATSON. Under this appropriation?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think so.

Mr. WATSON. It does not thus provide.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It says "contingent expenses"; among those things included is the word "trees."

Mr. WATSON. But not the purchase of trees, simply the planting of trees.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Why limit it to anything outside of purchasing?

Mr. WATSON. This clause does not provide for purchasing trees, only for planting and the taking care of them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Those words are not in the item.

Mr. WATSON. There is no item here giving power to buy trees.

Mr. CRAMTON. Colonel Sherrill stated before the committee that only a small portion of it is devoted to the setting out of new trees. The care of all of the trees on the streets in the District is upon the city, rather than upon the property owners. They state, however, they expect to plant a few new trees from year to year, and he says they have not enough money to set out the number required to keep up with the loss of trees from decay. They have nurseries, of course.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the purpose to continue planting trees in the streets?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; to continue to replace the trees lost through decay.

Mr. WATSON. Are they not taking away the trees in some of the commercial streets?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is only a limited amount of that. There may be circumstances where that is done.

Mr. WATSON. Then it is practical to plant trees and to continue so to do in the streets of Washington?

Mr. CRAMTON. It appears to be, and I think that is one of the beauties of the city.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the commissioners to carry out the provisions of existing law governing the collection and disposal of garbage, dead animals, night soil, and miscellaneous refuse and ashes in the District of Columbia (no contract shall be let for the collection of dead animals), including inspection and allowance to inspectors for maintenance of horses and vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed for each inspector $20 per month for a horse and vehicle; fencing of public and private property designated by the commissioners as public dumps; and incidental expenses, $825,000: Provided, That any proceeds received from the disposal of city refuse or garbage shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in the same proportions as the appropriations for such purposes are paid from the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be available for collecting ashes or miscellaneous refuse from hotels, places of business, and apartment houses and large boarding houses having a central heating plant.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 33, line 20, after the word "further," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That this appropriation shall not be available for collecting ashes or miscellaneous refuse from hotels and places of business, or from apartment houses of four or more apartments in which the owner furnishes heat to tenants."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, that is merely a redrafting of the proviso carried in the bill. It is drawn after having the advantage of language submitted by the engineer commissioner, and, I think, puts it in more workable form.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It changes the substance of it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not materially.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What is the change?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a more workable definition as to the class of buildings that would be exempted.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It says apartment houses.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. You have changed it to designate certain apartment houses and to leave out others.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What is the reason for that?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is, those apartment houses with four or more apartments, where they get their heat from a central plant, where it is furnished to them by the owners.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And you except them?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. They can collect ashes from the small apartments.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. But they can not collect them from apartments having more than four apartments?

Mr. CRAMTON. No. The present law is more stringent than this. This is somewhat of a relaxation.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The way it is drawn, it provides that the appropriation shall not be used——

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman desires to know what the current law is, it provides that ashes, and so forth, shall not be collected "from hotels, places of business, apartment houses, and large boarding houses." An apartment may have perhaps two or three apartments in it, and each apartment may have its own heating plant, coal stove, and so forth; but they can not collect ashes from that little place, and it is not really big enough for anyone in it to handle a wagon. The result is that it works a hardship that is not desirable.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And the gentleman's amendment liberalizes that?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; and still does not go so far as to take care of large apartment houses. It was suggested that "large" is an uncertain term.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And the word "large" in the bill now would apply only to boarding houses, and apartment houses are cut out altogether?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. You liberalize it by including certain apartment houses.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I invite the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the word "owner" in the amendment. I suggest that that word be stricken out and in its stead some such word as "proprietor" be used.

Mr. CRAMTON. Or lessor?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Because it is frequently the case that the owner of the house is not the landlord of the tenants who occupy it.

Mr. CRAMTON. What would the gentleman think of using the word "lessor"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Would it not be better to use the word "landlord"?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Why not omit all reference to the character of the proprietor or owner of it and simply say "where heat is furnished for a central heating plant"?

Mr. CRAMTON. There are some complications connected with that. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by striking out the word "owner" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "landlord."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 20, after the word "further" strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That this appropriation shall not be available for collecting ashes or miscellaneous refuse from hotels, places of business, or from apartment houses of four or more apartments in which the landlord furnishes heat to tenants."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of a site now occupied by Hoover Playground, located in square 546, containing 65,000 square feet, at 25 cents per square foot, $17,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph as being legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. This item proposes the purchase of a site for playground purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman is going to continue to take up all legislative matters and consider them in the Appropriations Committee, we might just as well do away with the District of Columbia Committee entirely. While under the rules the District is permitted to have a District day, the chairman has not claimed it here for months.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, he has made some expressions he wanted it.

Mr. BLANTON. Expressions do not amount to anything.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit me, I understand it is the Hoover item to which the gentleman refers. The Hoover item has been used as a playground since 1916 under a lease, and it is now proposed to buy it at a price that seems very reasonable to insure its continuance. Now, as to the point, the item is subject to a point of order, and if the gentleman insists upon the point of order it will go out.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to reserve some little work for the District of Columbia to do.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, and he has been very kind to yield to me, let me complete this statement. This is subject to a point of order if the gentleman insists upon it. I hope very much that the point of order will not be insisted upon, because there is an opportunity to buy this land at a reasonable price. It is being used, and we want to continue to use it for the same purpose. Now, as to the matter of this committee encroaching on the prerogatives of the legislative committee, we have not done so except in very few cases. We have been very careful to avoid encroaching upon the preserves of the legislative committee. We have only done so where it is closely connected with an expenditure. There are no purely legislative provisions, but we have some appropriations which are not supported by existing law where it was for the purpose of extending work in progress. There is no basis for it, and I can not make an argument as to the parliamentary situation, but, in effect, we have these playgrounds and they are being used, and this is simply a part of that operation which is legitimately before us——

Mr. BLANTON. Not only this item but the next one, and item after item in this bill are legislative matters that should be presided over by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has a reputation of being liberal. He is not hidebound on this proposition.

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me make a connected statement here. I know there are several items, one went out yesterday, and that was the extension of the existing library system, but this is an extension of the existing playground system and the purchase of land now being used for playground purposes, and which will be used until somebody throws them out bodily, because we do not buy it. Now, there are some school items of which perhaps the same thing can be said. We have not gone beyond that in a purely legislative provision. Yesterday on the floor, the gentleman will remember, a distinguished Member of this House, one of the most active members of this committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], from the floor criticized this committee very strongly because we had not gone further and put in certain legislative propositions that are within the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia Committee. There was a question of changing the law as to days of service for firemen and policemen and various other——

Mr. BLANTON. That is just as important as this.

Mr. CRAMTON. That was purely legislation, and this is simply acquiring land we are now using.

Mr. BLANTON. It is all right to make the policemen and firemen work seven days out of seven days.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to point out to the gentleman that the gentleman from Texas criticized us severely yesterday for not going further and encroaching on the prerogatives of that committee, and we now are criticized because we went as far as we did.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made against the paragraph. The Chair feels he has ample precedent to support the ruling of the Chair, which is that the point of order is well made.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of a site at Twenty-seventh and O Streets NW., in square 1238 (lot 803), containing 10,000 square feet, at an estimated cost of $5,000; and for the purchase of lot 804, square 1238, containing 3,840 square feet, at $3,000; in all, $8,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I will only express my great regret that the little children of the District are to be endangered as to their use of the playgrounds. As to the parliamentary situation, I admit it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. The District Committee will take care of them.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS. Has this been acted upon and recommended to the gentleman's committee by the District of Columbia Legislative Committee?

Mr. BLANTON. They ignore the District Committee and come and appropriate——

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask for information.

Mr. CRAMTON. In none of these instances where we have put an appropriation in is there any controversy about the policy. There is no one urging that we should not have playgrounds, there is no one urging that we should not have libraries, and so we are trying to carry out what we know is the adopted policy. When it comes to a controversial question, where there is a difference of opinion as to the policies and it lies within the domain of Mr. FOCHT's committee, we keep away from it.

Mr. STEPHENS. But has this committee recommended this particular item?

Mr. CRAMTON. They have not.

Mr. STEPHENS. Would it not be advisable for them to do that in order that the position you take might be secure?

Mr. CRAMTON. I want the children to have the playgrounds, and I repeat that where there is any controversy about it or where the District Committee wants a chance on it we will keep off it. But as to matters on which there is no controversy we think they want us to go ahead and get action.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Who is it that asks for this?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas made a point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman reserve it for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will discuss the point of order without going into the merits I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. This came to us from the District Commissioners and from the Budget office.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There does not seem to be any understanding on the part of the people who are asking for this in the District as to where they should go for relief. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is perfectly within his rights in making these points of order or any points of order against legislative matters carried in an appropriation bill, looking at it purely from a legislative standpoint. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that when these requests are made to the Committee on Appropriations for matters involving new legislation, matters of great importance to the children who want the playgrounds, in case of playgrounds and other matters of importance to other people in other District affairs, it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to inform the people who ask for that relief that their committee has no power to give relief, and it is their duty to suggest that they go to the District Committee for relief. Those people desiring relief ought not to be compelled to wait until the last moment and——

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me suggest this: In this bill there was an item proposed by the Budget, an item to establish a white branch of the Industrial School for Girls. That was a proposition as to which there might be controversy, concerning the need of the institution or the location of it, and so forth. That the Committee on Appropriations did not allow. It was a legislative proposition of a character which we felt we ought not to fool with, and it will be interesting to see how long it will be before there is legislation that will authorize something of that kind.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, pending the reservation of a point of order by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Will my friend from Indiana yield for a moment?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he does not think the situation has grown out of the fact that, notwithstanding each committee is urged to legislate, they do not do so even when some one like the gentleman from Texas, who evidently is making a record here by taking things out of bills on points of order, insists on points of order? They know they can go right over to the Senate and get them all put in.

Mr. BLANTON. Then why does not the whole District Committee let the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] go back home? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOCHT. He is going.

Mr. DENISON. They know that these items will be put in over in the Senate, so that this process of knocking out paragraphs on points of order is not accomplishing anything in the end.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not know. I think the gentleman who makes these points of order against legislative matters is entirely within his rights and may be ultimately serving a good purpose, although he may not be in the particular case.

Of course, the gentleman in talking while the reservation of the point of order was made did not explain just when these pupils are to be permitted to use the playgrounds. We ought not to take away the playgrounds from the pupils when they have been used since 1916. But when a situation has arisen where they are going to be driven off the playgrounds unless they get legislation, then the people who ask for this relief ought to be sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and they ought to be sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia by the Committee on Appropriations.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] says they are very discriminating, and if it is a matter involving controversial legislation they do send such people to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is not up to the Committee on Appropriations to determine what is controversial legislation. They have no authority over any legislative matters, and these legislative matters ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and if those people were urged to go to that committee, and if pressure were brought to bear on that committee, that committee would get action on the floor of the House.

The trouble is we go along here and the Committee on Appropriations determines that they are going to reach out and encroach on another committee's jurisdiction, and then if a gentleman gets on the floor of the House and asserts his rights and makes points of order against legislative provisions he is criticized.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What assurance is there that the Committee on the District of Columbia will bring up these matters in preference to other matters about which there is a hot controversy?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. This House under its rules has declared that legislative matters shall be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and that the District of Columbia Committee shall act upon them.

Mr. BLANTON. The children are not being run off this property. They will continue to stay on these playgrounds. This is simply a proposition of selling this property to the Government without any legislation whatever.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Then the gentleman does not agree that this is one of the propositions that are not controversial?

Mr. BLANTON. The children are playing on this land now. It ought to be passed upon by the District of Columbia Committee.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The point I make is that the Committee on Appropriations has no right or authority or jurisdiction under the rules of this House to determine when it is going to reach out and take jurisdiction.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, notwithstanding the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in regard to these matters the difficulty arises primarily from the fact that they proceed without proper consideration of the desires of the people of the District of Columbia, that desire being expressed through the various agencies appointed for such purposes. The Board of Education have made various investigations. You say you are going to make appropriations without authorization of law. You do it simply because the Committee on the District of Columbia has not had an opportunity to present these measures on the floor of the House and obtain that authorization.

The bills are there, 125 of them; but they have been forestalled, interfered with, hamstrung, I might say, until we have to come here supplicating before the majesty of this great Committee on Rules, appealing to them to give an opportunity to the people of this town, who do not have representation, who must hang on in this haphazard way to secure legislation. Now, the orderly and proper way to do this thing is to consider these District of Columbia bills that we bring here and put on the calendar. Why, think of it! This great question of increased salaries for school-teachers, we bring it on the floor, and if we pass it the only way they can get the money is under a deficiency bill. The appropriation bill for the District of Columbia will have passed and gone its way, and the only chance we have is to authorize it and then appropriate the money as a deficiency. That is not the orderly way. There should be no controversy here this morning, and this question of playgrounds is not a controversial one. Everybody knows we ought to have playgrounds for the children of the District of Columbia; in fact, must, and are going to have them, but the Committee on the District of Columbia should have a chance to send a subcommittee there to determine the location and desirability, and whether these playgrounds are worth the money that is asked for them, and if they are not to condemn them. But as to the necessity of them there is no controversy. But there will be a controversy and there will be a break somewhere with the manner in which this thing has been conducted. I know the power is with these gentlemen. I can do nothing more than come here and appeal to you and wait until they are through with everything else, until every other chairman is through with all his bills. Yet here is a great city that ought to be the pride of every man's heart, that must walk on a crutch and limp behind the procession until we get through with everything else from Wyoming to Nova Scotia.

Mr. SNELL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] made the same senseless tirade against the Rules Committee yesterday, and I did not say anything in reply. I do not know that the Rules Committee has anything to do with keeping him or his committee off the floor. I do know this, however, that on two separate Mondays this year we were looking for something to take up the time of the House and no member of the District of Columbia Committee was here ready to present its business on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman ought not to say that, because one member of the committee has always been here. The chairman of the committee may not have been here.

Mr. SNELL. Was any member of the committee here ready to present the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLANTON. Only the chairman does that. I will state that I have been here every Monday, but I have no authority to call up bills from that committee.

Mr. SNELL. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman will yield to me, will he not?

Mr. SNELL. When I finish my statement. I say the Rules Committee are not to blame because the Committee on the District of Columbia have not presented their business on the floor of the House. They had two opportunities this session, that I know of, that they did not take advantage of.

Mr. FOCHT. As far as I am concerned as chairman of the committee, there was but one opportunity that we had when I was not here to avail myself of it.

Mr. SNELL. There were two Mondays that we were looking for business, and the gentleman was not here and did not attend to it.

Mr. FOCHT. This is the first time I ever heard anyone connected with the Rules Committee say they were looking for the Committee on the District of Columbia to present any business. We have been here 20 times asking for an opportunity, compared to the one time when I was not here.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any resolution before the Rules Committee at the present time providing for consideration of District of Columbia business?

Mr. FOCHT. No; everybody in the House knows the power of the Committee on Rules. We submit to it. We can do nothing else. We understand the reason.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the provision beginning on line 14.

Mr. BLANTON. Against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Against the paragraph. The Chair sustains the point of order, and in doing so refers to the several precedents in Volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, section 3790, section 3791, and section 3792, and also to many decisions rendered by the Chairmen when presiding over the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union considering the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

So much of any balance remaining after the purchase of sites for playgrounds authorized by this act as is necessary to clean up, grade, drain, fence in, and place such sites in safe and suitable condition for the purpose intended, may be used for such purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against that paragraph. Of course that will go out, too, because that is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order against the paragraph beginning with line 20.

Mr. CRAMTON. We might as well let that go out anyway because the other has gone out.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for one minute?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee whether he knows of any legislation that has been proposed so far by the Committee on the District of Columbia relating to the purchase of sites for these playgrounds? Is there any legislation on that subject on the calendar, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. CRAMTON. Each year we have been buying playgrounds just in the way that we proposed to buy these playgrounds, and neither the gentleman from Indiana, nor the gentleman from Pennsylvania, nor the gentleman from Texas, any one of them raised any question about it. We started the consideration of this bill with a panning by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] because we did not put all his pet hobbies into the bill, although they were admittedly legislation. Now here are some items that are not hobbies of anybody, that everybody wants, and we simply have passed along what the Budget recommended. My judgment is that you can have two Mondays a month for the Committee on the District of Columbia and you will not get any more playgrounds for the District unless they are carried in an appropriation bill. It is perfect nonsense to say that every time we want to buy $40 worth of land the Committee on the District of Columbia must go out and see whether it is worth the price or not. That is a ridiculous proposition. What the District of Columbia Committee ought to have done 20 or 30 years ago, before there was any Budget, was to have brought legislation into the House providing for a system of playgrounds, and then let the appropriations be made from time to time as they are necessary for the development of that system of playgrounds.

That is a function of the District of Columbia Committee that for half a century they have neglected. They should provide authorization for a system of playgrounds, and the Committee on Appropriations should not be citicized because, in the absence of any such authorization, it endeavors to take care of a very pressing need to which nobody objects.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have looked through the calendar and I do not see a single bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia relating to playgrounds now pending before the House.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would suggest that the District Committee was perhaps too busy trying to pass a law licensing pawnbrokers, permitting them to charge 36 per cent interest, to have time to consider playgrounds for the children.

Mr. BLANTON. But some of them have been rather busy keeping that law from being passed.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The reason the Committee on the District of Columbia does not do that is because the Appropriations Committee is seeking to come in and take it out of their hands.

Mr. BLANTON. And get mad when you try to stop them.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And get mad when you try to stop them, and then go over to the Senate and see that it is put in.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for playgrounds, $136,032, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that lines 5 and 6, on page 36, should be corrected, in so far as the totals are concerned, to correspond with the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct all totals in the bill to conform to the amendments that have and will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct all totals in the bill to conform with adopted amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ELECTRICAL DEPARTMENT.

Salaries: Electrical engineer, $2,750; assistant electrical engineer, $2,000; inspectors—one $1,000, four at $900 each; electrician, $1,200; two draftsmen, at $1,000 each; four telegraph operators, at $1,000 each; repairmen—expert $1,200, three at $900 each, one $840; telephone operators—chief $900, four at $840 each, one $720, ten at $600 each, one $540; electrical inspectors—one $2,000, one $1,800, one $1,350, four at $1,360 each; assistant electrician, $1,200; clerks—one $1,400, one $1,200, two at $1,125 each, one $1,050, one $750; assistant repairman, $620; laborers—two at $600 each, two at $540 each; messenger, $630; storekeeper, $875; in all, $55,655.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in line 10, after the word "electrician," I move to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,560."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 36, line 10, after the word "electrician," strike out the figures "$1,200" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,560."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this is to correct an inequality that has happened through accident in the previous drafting of the law. This electrician is in charge of certain work and under him are four inspectors who are drawing in this bill $1,360. They are drawing more pay than the man who has charge generally of their work. The man who has charge is getting $1,200 and is doing work of a more specialized character, involving the handling of special and more difficult matters, requiring more thorough and painstaking examination and frequently the working of more exact testing and measuring instruments, and it appealed to the committee that this change should be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting: For purchase, installation, and maintenance of public lamps, lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures of all kinds on streets, avenues, roads, alleys, and public spaces, and for all necessary expenses in connection therewith, including rental of stables and storerooms, livery and extra labor, this sum to be expended in accordance with the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912 and with the provisions of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, and other laws applicable thereto, $450,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. Does this include the street lighting?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I have inquired several times and have tried to get some information as to under what kind of a contract we are operating in respect to furnishing electricity to the city, and what price is paid for it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Potomac Electric Power Co. furnishes the electricity.

Mr. SNELL. I notice that for a small part of the supplies you have competitive bids. I wondered if there were any competitive bidders for lighting the streets, and what price is paid in the District of Columbia for the average street lamp.

Mr. FOCHT. The street lamps are gas mostly, and the price paid for electricity is 10 cents per kilowatt hour. It is a price arbitrarily fixed by the Public Utilities Commission. They have allowed 7 cents to the company and are retaining 3 cents pending a decision of certain matters by the Supreme Court.

Mr. SNELL. Then there is no competitive bidding or a chance for it? Is it governed by the Public Utilities Commission?

Mr. FOCHT. I think they fixed the price arbitrarily, somewhat in relation to the charges in other cities.

Mr. SNELL. And what is the price per kilowatt hour?

Mr. FOCHT. Ten cents per kilowatt hour. They are allowing the company only 7 cents. Three cents have been set aside under order of the court until a decision is rendered, and then it will be determined whether or not the company can retain that amount, which is held in escrow, amounting now to more than two and a half million dollars.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman means that we are paying 7 cents per kilowatt hour for the electricity that the District is using?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is referring to what private consumers pay.

Mr. SNELL. I had reference to the price that the District of Columbia pays.

Mr. FOCHT. A large part of the street lighting is by gas.

Mr. SNELL. There must be a very large consumption by the District of electric light.

Mr. CRAMTON. The relative expenditure for gas this year is $188,500, and for electricity, both incandescent and arc lights, $227,500, but I have not at hand the information as to what the rates are.

Mr. SNELL. Did the committee take that up at all?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; we did not.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think it is a very important matter? That is one of the large expenses of the District, and there is opportunity for some careful work in connection with it. I feel that the time has come when we should know definitely what we are paying and under what kind of a contract we are operating. I do not know that there are competitive bidders.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, there is no one in the position to furnish the light except the people who are furnishing it, unless you erect a new plant, and there would not be any economy in that.

Mr. SNELL. I would not be in favor of that, but I feel that is a matter that the committee should go into.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course the Public Utilities Commission passes upon the rate to be charged to private users, and my judgment would be that the Public Utilities Commission probably have authority to fix all of the rates.

Mr. SNELL. Well, I suggest that when the committee have hearings next year that they get more definite information.

Mr. CRAMTON. I appreciate it, and I will say to the gentleman from New York that he knows it is a little hard to learn everything there is about every item in the bill. Last year, with regard to the Interior Department bill, the gentleman from New York asked a lot of questions I could not answer; so this year in the hearings we took pains to get all of that information for him, and yet we read page after page of those items without a question from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. The Chairman informed me that he could answer them, so I saw no need to ask. I really think it is important that we know the prices we are paying.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will get the information and put it in the RECORD, if I may have unanimous consent.

Section 6 of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913 prescribed the maximum rates to be paid during that fiscal year for lighting the streets, roads, and so forth, of the District of Columbia. It is my information that the rates prescribed in that act are being paid to-day, wherever applicable. I quote them from that act:

For mantle gas lamps of 60 candlepower, $18.40 per lamp per annum.

For mantle gas lamps of not less than 120 candlepower, $27 per lamp per annum.

For street designation lamps, using flat-flame burners, consuming not more than 2½ cubic feet of gas per hour, or 8 candlepower incandescent electric lamps, with posts and lanterns furnished by the District of Columbia, $10 per lamp per annum.

For 40 candlepower, 50 watt, incandescent electric lamps on overhead wires, $15 per lamp per annum.

For 40 candlepower, 50 watt, incandescent electric lamps on underground wires, $19.50 per lamp per annum.

For 60 candlepower, 75 watt, incandescent electric lamps on overhead wires, $17.50 per lamp per annum.

For 60 candlepower, 75 watt, incandescent electric lamps on underground wires, $23 per lamp per annum.

For 80 candlepower, 100 watt, incandescent electric lamps on underground wires, $26 per lamp per annum.

For 100 candlepower, 125 watt, incandescent electric lamps on underground wires, $27.50 per lamp per annum.

For 150 candlepower, 187 watt, incandescent electric lamps on underground wires, $36.50 per lamp per annum.

For 200 candlepower, 250 watt, incandescent electric lamps on underground wires, $46.50 per lamp per annum.

For 4-glower Nernst lamps on underground wires, $52.50 per lamp per annum.

For 6.6 ampere, 528 watt, direct-current, series-inclosed arc lamps, $80 per lamp per annum.

For 5 ampere, 550 watt, direct-current, multiple-inclosed arc lamps, $80 per lamp per annum.

For 4 ampere, 320 watt magnetite, or other arc lamps of equal illuminating value acceptable to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on overhead wires, $59 per lamp per annum.

For 4 ampere, 320 watt magnetite, or other arc lamps of equal illuminating value acceptable to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on underground wires, $72.50 per lamp per annum.

For 6.6 ampere, 500 watt magnetite, or other arc lamps of equal illuminating value acceptable to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on overhead wires, $84 per lamp per annum.

For 6.6 ampere, 500 watt magnetite, or other arc lamps of equal illuminating value acceptable to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on underground wires, $97.50 per lamp per annum.

For flame arc lamps, 500 watt, General Electric type, or other arc lamps of equal illuminating value acceptable to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $150 per lamp per annum.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Salaries: Superintendent, $6,000; 2 assistant superintendents, at $3,750 each; director of intermediate instruction, 13 supervising principals, supervisor of manual training, and director of primary instruction, 16 in all, at a minimum salary of $2,400 each; secretary, $2,000; financial clerk, $2,000; clerks—1 $1,600, 2 at $1,500 each, 2 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each, 4 at $1,000 each (one of whom to carry out the provisions of the child labor law); 2 stenographers, at $1,000 each; messenger, $720; in all, $73,620.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment; in line 2 strike out "$6,000" and insert "$10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 2, strike out the figures "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$10,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BEGG. All I have to say is this, that there is no law that prohibits the change of a salary. There is no law prohibiting the House itself from raising the salary of any official. The fact that a law established a position and fixes the salary does not certainly take away the right of the committee to increase that salary if it sees fit to do so.

Mr. CARTER. The Appropriations Committee?

Mr. BEGG. And I will cite the Chair's attention to the ruling the Chair made the other day with reference to the Department of Agriculture bill when the amendment was identically the same.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a statutory salary.

Mr. BEGG. It does not make any difference if it is.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman maintain that we could increase a statutory salary in the committee by any Member offering an amendment?

Mr. BEGG. I maintain that if we want to spend $10,000 for the salary of the superintendent of schools, we have the same right to do it as we did the other day under the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SNELL. But that is not the question I asked.

Mr. BEGG. That is an answer to the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to continue the discussion of the point of order?

Mr. BEGG. The only proposition I make is this, that there is nothing in the law that prohibits our appropriating $10,000 for the office of superintendent of schools.

Mr. CARTER. It is only under Rule XXI.

Mr. BEGG. Rule XXI does not——

Mr. CARTER. It provides in reference to changing existing law if we have a statutory law.

Mr. BEGG. Rule XXI has been so badly lacerated and mutilated by the decisions of the present occupant of the chair I want to see what he will do this time.

Mr. SNELL. I would like very much for him to get it, for he is a constituent of mine and a very worthy one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from New York stated the crux of the matter when he referred to the statutory provision in reference to salaries. The Chair assumes from the remarks of the gentleman in charge of the bill that the law fixes the salary at $6,000, and, as the amendment presented proposes an increase of that salary, it therefore proposes a change of existing law, and is contrary to the rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FOCHT. Suppose there is no statutory law provision for $6,000; there is no statutory law and there has been no statutory law since 1906 and there have been increases since then done in this very way.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there no statutory law the Chair would hold differently. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For contingent and other necessary expenses, including equipment and purchase of all necessary articles and supplies for classes in industrial, commercial, and trade instruction, $4,500: Provided, That no part of the appropriations for night schools shall be available for teaching any person over 21 years of age without payment of tuition.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TOWNER: Page 45, line 19, after the word "tuition." strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "This proviso shall not apply to those receiving instruction under the Americanization work and instruction of foreigners as hereinafter provided in this act."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment, which I understand is not objected to by the committee, is to make it really in harmony with the purpose of the Americanization provision which is on the next page. That provision is that "the Americanization work and instruction of foreigners of all ages in both day and night classes, including the principal, who, for 10 months, shall give his full time to this work." And so forth.

If this proviso is adopted without the amendment which I suggest, then all foreigners who desire to take night-school work will have to pay tuition. It is difficult, Mr. Chairman, sometimes to induce these men, whom we are very anxious, indeed, shall take this night-school work, to enter those classes, and the Americanization work is carried on with the expectation that it will be largely carried on by this night-school work because of the fact that these adults are engaged in work during the day and can only attend the night schools. For that reason I think the amendment is perfectly justified and makes the provisions harmonize with each other.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. I want to state at the outset that I have no objection to the provision to which the gentleman refers, but it occurs to me it will be a very poor precedent for Congress to set to charge our own American citizens tuition and to permit the foreigners to come in free. Now, personally I do not favor any proposition of that kind. I think probably this Americanization work is all right and justified, but I suggest that the gentleman move to strike out the whole provision if he is going to do the thing he asks.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, if this provision is adopted—and the gentleman thinks the whole provision ought to go out, and I agree with him that perhaps it would be better—let me call the attention of the gentleman to the provision over on the other page. There are two things: The Americanization work is one thing, although they are joined together, and the instruction of foreigners of all ages at day and night schools is another. The provision is not an exclusion of Americans from the provisions of the act. It will allow Americans who are trying to Americanize themselves to receive this instruction; for instance, those preparing for becoming intelligent enough to read and write, so as to become good citizens of the United States.

That is all I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, unless some one asks another question.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the chairman of the subcommittee give heed for a moment? I have not had time or opportunity to read the hearings in the case, but I would like to get some information from the chairman as to the reason for the following proviso on page 45, line 16:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation for night schools shall be available for teaching any person over 21 years of age without payment of tuition.

Now, has there been any abuse of that privilege that would justify the provision in the item?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not myself made the investigation that would enable me to give the gentleman that definite information which perhaps he would like, but I know it has been alleged that there has been abuse and that schools were being conducted which were patronized very largely by adults, rather than by children. I am not sure whether my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is better informed than I on that point. But it was because it was brought to the attention of the committee that there was some abuse that this limitation was put on.

Mr. BLACK. The reason I ask the question is on account of the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], that will permit foreigners who are over 21 years of age to attend these night schools without the payment of tuition. I have no objection to that, but I would not like to go on record as favoring it. It does not appear to me to be a sound thing to do to permit foreigners over 21 years of age to get free attendance at these night schools and close them to our own citizens.

Mr. CRAMTON. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, as I understand it, proposes a proviso in the section concerning night schools that the limitation shall not operate to interfere with the attendance of foreigners who are adults in the Americanization work that comes later in the bill. I understand that as to night schools, outside of the Americanization courses, there is to be no distinction made, even if the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is agreed to, between foreigners and our own people.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman from Iowa give us information as to whether his amendment would be restricted to that extent—to the extent that the gentleman from Michigan suggested?

Mr. CRAMTON. I ventured to suggest that the gentleman's amendment would not have any effect as to the night schools except to protect adults in the Americanization courses.

Mr. TOWNER. That is expressly stated in the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I probably did not hear the language clearly.

Mr. TOWNER. It is made not to apply in so far as the Americanization work is carried on, as hereafter stated in the act.

Mr. BLACK. I have no objection to that.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LOWREY. I am not sure that there is justification for a law anywhere forbidding people over 21 years old to enter the public schools. With all the effort that is being made throughout this country now to remove illiteracy and all the money we are spending for education, I should welcome the repeal of the laws everywhere fixing the public-school age at 21. I should rather see an amendment prevail to strike out that proviso entirely and at least put this Congress on record in regard to that law as to the 21-year limit for public-school age.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWREY. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman think that the general rule prevailing all over the country is a wise one, that we limit the public-school benefits to the children of the country, and when they get to be adults and are supposed to be earning money to pay their own way they should be allowed to pay their own way? We ought not to treat grown people as children.

Mr. LOWREY. You know there has been a great deal done to remove illiteracy in the various States in dealing with people beyond 21 years of age.

Mr. DENISON. I believe the way to remove illiteracy at public expense is to confine ourselves to children and not reach beyond the age of 21. Let those others educate themselves at their own expense.

Mr. LOWREY. Is there not the same reason for forbidding foreigners over 21 from entering public schools? I believe we permit them.

Mr. DENISON. We do that for the purpose of giving them an education in order to Americanize them.

Mr. CRAMTON. They are admitted to the Americanization courses, which are especially open to foreigners.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to agree in principle with the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY]. I believe that the best possible way to carry on Americanization work is to give these people an education, and it seems to me that right here in the city of Washington we ought to set an example to the rest of the country by furnishing instruction in our night schools to those men and women who have been so unfortunate as not to have had an opportunity before to acquire an education of any sort whatever.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. LOWREY. Would it not be a good principle also of American citizenship in making American citizens to remove the ignorance of those that are American born as well as those who are alien born?

Mr. TILSON. I believe that everybody should be admitted to this privilege. If we can, by furnishing night schools, give these people an opportunity to learn something, thereby removing as far as possible their handicap, I believe that we should do so. Of course, attending the day schools is an entirely different matter. These people are supposed to work and earn their living after they arrive at that age; but if, after they have done their day's work, they are willing to attend an evening school, it seems to me every opportunity for doing so should be given them. I know that in most of our cities in the North and East with which I am acquainted we give liberal opportunity of this kind by furnishing free night schools, and there is no limit of 21 years.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think that in a democracy there is a peculiar responsibility resting upon the Government, where we have practically universal suffrage, to provide means for education and place at the disposal of any person who by reason of citizenship or prospective citizenship will have the responsibility of taking part in the affairs of the Government?

Mr. TILSON. I think so; and I think that where we have the buildings and equipment already available, and the only expense involved is the comparatively small expense of hiring teachers, it is our duty to give these people an opportunity to remove to some extent the handicap under which they labor.

Mr. STEPHENS. In the city of Cincinnati they have night schools in the lower grades, in the high schools, and in the university, open to all citizens regardless of age, and the night-school system there gives an opportunity for all to get an education. I do not see why the great city of Washington can not provide the same.

Mr. DENISON. What does the gentleman think of applying the provision of compulsory education to grown people, and making them go to school and get an education?

Mr. TILSON. That is an entirely different matter, to compel anyone; but where a person is willing to go it seems to me that it is as little as we can do to furnish an opportunity for them to do so without regard to age.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Let the amendment be reported again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the proviso.

Mr. TOWNER. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order at the present time. I am in favor of it, but perfecting amendments must be disposed of first. I will be glad to vote for the gentleman's proposition when it is in order.

Mr. TILSON. Of course, the gentleman's amendment takes precedence, as perfecting amendments come first.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to strike out the proviso. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY].

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this last motion to strike out the proviso. It is a wonderful thing to Americanize the foreigner. It is our duty to do so as far as we can; but there is a vastly wider field than that, and it is to Americanize the Americans. There are hundreds of thousands of Americans who are not Americanized. In the city in which I live you will find people 60 years old attending night schools, and it is almost pitiful to see the eagerness and earnestness with which some of them try either to make up for the opportunities that were squandered by them in the past or the opportunities that they never had. I hope this Congress—because it is the Congress acting now and not the city of Washington—will see to it that this city, which belongs to the whole American Nation, is not left away back at the end of the procession when it comes to the advancement of educational facilities for all the people.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment to strike out the proviso. It seems to me we are going pretty far in paternalism when at the Government expense we furnish schools free for grown men and women. It is entirely a different idea from the public-school system. We try to educate the youths of the country at the public expense because they are children and ought to be educated at the public expense; but after people become grown men and women, why should you and I and the rest of the public be taxed in order that they may have some instruction free at public expense? It seems to me that is going far along the road to paternalism for us to enter upon a policy of that kind. Every time any proposition comes up here for an expenditure of money in the District of Columbia we are met with this same argument, that we want to make this city a model for the rest of the world. That argument is being worn threadbare. If we ought to furnish this education to men and women 60 years old or less free, suppose they are not able to buy text-books? Are you going to carry out your public-school idea and furnish them text-books free? If you are going to apply the public-school theory, why not apply the whole thing and make their education compulsory? If education is justified, then you are justified in making them go to school. We are getting too sentimental here in these matters, and I think we are going too far when the United States and the District of Columbia furnish schools at night free to grown men and women.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I will simply say this in answer to the gentleman's question, that the reason for doing this is not one of sentiment but for the public safety.

Mr. DENISON. I am not afraid of the old men and women who do not happen to have an education, and I do not think we have to give it to them free in order to be safe. Let them pay for an education if they want it.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I am very far from being a believer in the soviet form of government. Personally, I think it is a relapse toward barbarism; but I had a very interesting talk a night or two ago with Miss Mason, a prominent woman educator who lives in my district and maintains a large and very successful school at Tarrytown. She has recently returned from abroad, and she told me something about what the Russian commissar of education had done to remove illiteracy in the city of Petrograd. He devised the plan of compelling those who knew how to read and write to teach those who did not know how to read and write. He put that plan in operation, with the result that within a comparatively few weeks, Miss Mason said, every citizen of Petrograd, man, woman, and child above the age of five or six years, was able to read and write. If they can remove illiteracy in the city of Petrograd under the soviet form of government. I think we at least in the enlightened city of Washington can go so far as to admit adults to night schools for the purpose of removing illiteracy without making a charge for their attendance. [Applause.]

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to answer the suggestion of my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] to the effect that when we permit persons over 21 years of age to attend schools which are free schools we are entering upon a field of paternalism. The gentleman seems to forget that in most of our State universities the States furnish the necessary funds for free schools without charge, except sometimes a little library fee or something of that kind, to persons of all ages entering the school. It seems to me that the amendment to strike out the proviso ought by all means to be adopted.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make some explanation of the status of this matter, so that the committee will not misunderstand it. This provision of the act is for night schools within the District of Columbia, and there is an appropriation made for carrying on night schools which is not limited except as it may be limited by general law. It includes janitors for the night schools, teachers of industrial, commercial, and trade instruction, and teachers and janitors of night schools may also be teachers and janitors of day schools. There is a proviso attached to that stating that no part of the appropriation for night schools shall be available for teaching any person over 21 years of age without payment of tuition. Of course, I would like to see that go out, but there is a great deal of difficulty in getting a matter of that kind out of the bill. I was particularly anxious that it should not interfere with the Americanization work which is very interestingly and successfully carried on in the city of Washington. Therefore I limited my amendment to that. This motion, however, will carry not only the proviso but will carry my amendment with it if it be adopted. I am perfectly willing that that shall be done, because if the proviso goes out my amendment goes out, and there is no such restriction, which I favor. I would be very glad, not only in the city of Washington but throughout the United States, to do everything that can be done to see that there is no illiterate person in the United States. I think that the work to wipe out illiteracy in the United States is one of the most necessary and essential things before the American people. As you all know, I have been interested in that work for some time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall, and I want the gentleman to correct me if I am in error, this amendment was debated in committee a year ago, when it was proposed by the commissioners to educate these rather superannuated inhabitants of the District—persons 50, 60, or more years of age. It was not with the thought to interfere with the proper function of the night schools in giving free education to those of educational age; but, as I recall the discussion, there was strong opposition to the attempt to educate very aged people, people much beyond middle age of life.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not remember as to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that is the origin of a proviso of a year ago.

Mr. TOWNER. I have no knowledge regarding that, Mr. Chairman, but I am quite clear upon the general proposition. I favor everything that can be reasonably done in removing illiteracy, whether it is in a child or a middle-aged person, or an octogenarian.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. If we are going to turn the public schools over to people of all ages without regard to whether they are grown men and women——

Mr. TOWNER. The night schools only.

Mr. DENISON. Why limit it to night schools?

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman now asks a question which, it seems to me, he is intelligent enough to answer for himself.

Mr. DENISON. I want the gentleman from Iowa to give me his idea about it.

Mr. TOWNER. It would take more than the time I have to answer completely. But this is the condition: There are a great many adults that through misfortune have never had opportunity of attending any schools, and yet they are desirous of becoming Americanized to the extent of becoming intelligent American citizens. Every facility to enable them to do that is just as binding upon us as it is to educate children.

Mr. DENISON. Why not let them go to the day schools?

Mr. TOWNER. I would not object to that; but the gentleman knows that that is an impracticable proposition. These men are at work during the daytime, and that is the reason that the night schools are established.

Mr. DENISON. If they are not at work, or if they are working at night—and a lot of these men work at night—why not let these men go to school in the daytime?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am in entire sympathy with anything that will eliminate all or any portion of the illiteracy that exists in this country, but I want to call attention to what happens when you strike out this proviso. You absolutely open up the doors of the night schools to whom? Not only to the illiterates, but you open them up to the men who are already trained in the fundamentals of education and who are seeking an occupational training. There is no one on the floor of the House who wants to advocate any such doctrine as that. I have had a little experience myself in public-school work, in city superintending. I know who will come to these night schools if you throw the doors open like that. I know that 90 per cent of the time of the teachers will be occupied in training people in vocations they ought to pay for.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I am in entire sympathy with throwing the doors open to a foreigner who can not read and write, but I think we should safeguard it in the name of all that is reasonable.

Mr. TILSON. This has not been a part of the law heretofore. Has the gentleman any figures to show how large a percentage of the people who attended these schools are over the age of 21?

Mr. BEGG. I can not give the figures in this city.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman think there will be any large number?

Mr. BEGG. Suppose there were two young men, the gentleman and myself. We have just finished our elementary education. The gentleman wants to study dentistry, and I want to become an expert accountant. If I can go to night school and get my expert-accountancy education for nothing, while the gentleman can not get his education in dentistry for nothing, yet he is just as much entitled to get it as I am my expert accountancy. Your expert accountancy can be taught in the high schools, and the boys and girls are qualified from the commercial work being given in the night schools and the day schools of the country; but if we are to do that, why not give your dentistry for nothing? If you strike this out, you ought to limit the basis of training to be offered in these night schools to the fundamentals of reading, writing, English, and mathematics.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the Clerk proceeds with the reading of the bill, the Chairman desires to make a statement. The Chair rendered a decision a few moments ago upon a point of order on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] which proposed to increase the salary of the superintendent of public schools. The Chair made his ruling based upon what he though was a statutory provision that the salary was fixed at $6,000 per year. To fortify his opinion the Chair has sent for the law and finds, somewhat to his surprise, that the statutory provision is for $5,000 a year, not $6,000, which completely alters the proposition.

Does the gentleman from Michigan know of any law which makes the salary $6,000 as set forth in this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, it is an office which has a fixed statutory salary. Now, I take it that the Chair is correct that the amount carried in the bill was not identical with the statutory salary, but it is an office that has a statutory limitation fixed. The gentleman from Ohio proposes to go $4,000 beyond the bill and $5,000 beyond the limitation.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman contend that the $6,000 was in order?

Mr. BLANTON. No; it was not.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; it was not. It would have been subject to the point of order.

Mr. BEGG. The very fact——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit, the Chair will state his position. The Chair wants to be entirely fair in his ruling. The Chair made his ruling based upon what he thought was a statutory provision, namely, a salary of $6,000. The amount put in the bill was $1,000 above the law, and it would seem to the Chair that that provision of the bill would have been subject to a point of order if it had been made.

Mr. BLANTON. But nobody made it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will kindly permit the Chair to proceed. It seems to the Chair that that provision of the bill was clearly subject to a point of order if it had been made, but it was not made. In accordance with the procedure, when any provision which is subject to a point of order is allowed to remain, then any germane amendment is in order, which, standing by itself, would have violated the rule. Therefore, if the Chair's position is correct, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio would have been in order and should not have been ruled out a moment ago, as no point of order was made against the provision in the text of the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. A point of order should have been sustained against the original paragraph at $6,000, but it was not made, and when that was passed that became the statutory amount.

Mr. BLANTON. For this year?

Mr. DOWELL. For this year; and the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio raised a distinct question, and it was subject to the point of order.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. How could that become a statutory amount until this Congress had approved of it?

Mr. DOWELL. Because it was approved when it was passed and not subject to the point of order so far as the question of order was concerned.

Mr. CRAMTON. I take it that the Chair has stated the position——

Mr. DOWELL. Now, I do not want——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I will yield, as the gentleman from Michigan has taken the floor from me.

Mr. CRAMTON. I thought the gentleman from Iowa had finished. The committee does not want any Member to be cut off from his rights; and while I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, I ask unanimous consent that we may return to the paragraph in question in order that a vote may be had upon the gentleman's amendment, and for no other purpose.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman need not do that as far as I am concerned.

Mr. DOWELL. The question of order is an important matter here; and I would have to object to going back, because I am very confident that the amendment the gentleman from Ohio offered is subject to a point of order. I do not believe it would be in order if we returned, and therefore I would respectfully object to returning to the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Regular order!

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio stated it is agreeable to him to continue the bill without returning, and therefore I withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, is pleased that the matter has terminated as it has, and the Chair does not criticize the gentleman from Michigan or intimate that in any manner whatsoever he intended to deceive the Chair in regard to the statute; but the Chair wants, in all fairness to himself, to state that he was not fully informed at the time and in error ruled out of order the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, which, in the light of the law and the procedure, the Chair feels was a proper amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. As a matter of fact, the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan was based upon the impression that there was a statutory salary, and it later developed the statutory salary was even less than carried in the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not understand the Chair is now attempting to base a parliamentary ruling upon the point of order proposed some time ago, and it is that now before the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if he had possessed the knowledge he now has, he would have held the amendment in order, and would have felt that the committee should have returned to the paragraph to consider the amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Fortunately for the House the Chair has not the opportunity.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The Chair merely stated it was a statutory salary which could not be raised in the amount, so the ruling was correct from the facts upon which the Chair made the statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE DEAF, DUMB, AND BLIND.

For expenses attending the instruction of deaf and dumb persons admitted to the Columbia Institution for the Deaf from the District of Columbia, under section 4864 of the Revised Statutes, and as provided for in the act approved March 1, 1901, and under a contract to be entered into with the said institution by the commissioners, $20,250.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not familiar with the statute mentioned here, but it seems to me $20,000 is a very large appropriation merely to instruct the deaf and dumb from the District of Columbia, unless there are quite a number there. Has the chairman that at hand?

Mr. CRAMTON. This is an appropriation to pay their expenses.

Mr. WATSON. It is only an instruction.

Mr. CRAMTON. Maintenance and instruction.

Mr. WATSON. Not maintenance, merely instruction.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I think they are maintained in the institution. In any event——

Mr. WATSON. It does not state here, but simply says instruction.

Mr. CRAMTON. There may be both classes. This institution happens to be maintained in the District, and there is a per capita charge, so much per capita for each child in the institution.

Mr. WATSON. Are colored people admitted?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is in the next paragraph.

Mr. WATSON. I did not know whether this paragraph carried colored or not. Are the deaf and dumb children of foreigners also permitted to enter this institution under the statute?

Mr. CRAMTON. I suppose if they are residents of the District of Columbia they are. The gentleman means those not citizens of the United States but residents of the District of Columbia?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think they would be admitted. I will say that the law is that "hereafter all deaf-mutes of teachable age of good mental capacity and properly belonging to the District of Columbia shall be received and instructed in such institution."

Mr. WATSON. But there is no maintenance mentioned in that statute?

Mr. CRAMTON. They are received. That is an institution, I will say to the gentleman, that the Federal Government maintains here, and it is a college for deaf-mutes. There are schools for the deaf and dumb throughout the country, but this is a college, and from various parts of the country children can be brought into that institution, and this provides for the instruction of those from the District. I assume that the maintenance is also provided for.

Mr. WATSON. Then this appropriation is movable? It depends on the number of students?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. There is a per capita charge, and this is anticipated to be sufficient to take care of the number.

Mr. WATSON. What is the per capita cost?

Mr. CRAMTON. The per capita cost is $500 a year.

Mr. WATSON. Is there any difference in the case of deaf-mutes in the next paragraph and those in the other?

Mr. CRAMTON. One is white and the other is colored. I presume the sections were drawn at different times by different people.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For instruction of blind children of the District of Columbia, in Maryland, or some other State, under a contract to be entered into by the commissioners, $10,000: Provided, That all expenditures under this appropriation shall be made under the supervision of the board of education.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee to explain what that provision means, for the instruction of blind children in other States. Does it mean those from the District of Columbia in other States?

Mr. CRAMTON. No. We have no institution for the instruction of blind children in the District of Columbia, and this permits the blind children in the District of Columbia, both white and colored, to be taken to some institution outside for such instruction. The present contract is with the Maryland Institution for the Blind, and we are maintaining there 17 for that purpose.

While I am on my feet, if the gentleman does not mind, I will state that as to the preceding item, in which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] will be interested, there are 8 deaf-mutes cared for at that same Maryland Institution for the Blind, and in the Columbia Institution for the Deaf there are 44 whites.

Mr. DENISON. Is there no institution for the blind in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMUNITY CENTER DEPARTMENT.

For salaries of directors, supervisors, teachers, clerks, and other employees for civic, educational, recreational, and social activities under the direction of the Board of Education; for payment of janitor service; for equipment and supplies; for lighting fixtures; for maintenance of automobiles (employees of the day schools may also be employees of the community center department); in all, $35,000, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided, That not more than 60 per cent of this sum shall be expended for salaries of directors, supervisors, teachers, clerks, and janitors.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order in order to get some information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] a question with regard to the complaints that are being heard now with reference to this enterprise. I do not know whether his committee or other members of the committee have any knowledge of it, but I have heard that entertainments are provided for and advertised and when the adults and children go there they are either charged an admission fee or a collection is taken up to which they are supposed to make contributions; and they are placed in bad standing if they do not contribute. And then I have heard that after the collection is over there is a fight between some officials as to which one shall take charge of the money. Has the gentleman any knowledge of that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that I have no knowledge of what he has just stated, neither has any testimony of that character been produced before the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman heard of any such thing?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I have heard of it.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee did not investigate it to find out how this $35,000 was being spent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman can refer to the hearings. The Director of this Community Center Department appeared before the committee and made a statement, and it was the only testimony offered.

Mr. BLANTON. Did this paragraph meet with the entire approval of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As a member of the subcommittee I did approve it.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question? I have heard many complaints that contracts are made by the year for music with certain parties, and——

Mr. CRAMTON. May I ask the gentleman whether he has heard the complaints, or read them?

Mr. BLANTON. I have heard them. I have not read them, but I have heard them; and I will say that a very distinguished Member of this Congress brought some of the complaints to my attention this morning. If it had not been from such an authentic source as that I would probably not have paid any attention to it. But if we are providing $35,000 for an entertainment fund for the school children and their parents in the District of Columbia, they ought to get the benefit of that money absolutely free, without any admission charges and without any collection being taken up.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I would suggest that if it were not for this collection you would have to put up more than $35,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I can imagine how a child, or its mother or father, would feel as a recipient of an entertainment when the collection was taken up and others were contributing, and they were not in a position financially to make a contribution. I can imagine how they would feel and of the kind of treatment that would be accorded them. It is not right. In a public matter of this kind there ought to be no charge or collection taken up. There ought not to be any admission charge. It ought to be for the ones who are not able to pay as well as for the ones who are able to pay the admission charge.

Mr. CRAMTON. I take it the gentleman wishes to get an answer to his question.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I should like to get some information. The matter is subject to a point of order. I do not want to make a point of order against it if the people really are getting the benefit of this $35,000. But if just a certain class of them are getting the benefit, then it ought to go out of this bill on a point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Two or three years ago while we were considering one of these bills I made quite an investigation of the subject of these community centers and visited some of them and went into the matter in the hearings at length. The gentleman will find a very full statement of it in the hearings on the District bill about two years ago. My impression then gained was such that we did not need to go into it very extensively this year. The report of the Board of Education on pages 38 and 39 this year carries the rule for the conduct of these community centers, approved by the Board of Education January 10, 1922, which I will be very glad to furnish to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I have a copy of that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will only call the gentleman's attention to the provision on page 39 that "admission fees and club dues and donations to cover expenses not met through public appropriations may be authorized by the general director. The community or executive secretary under the direction of the general director shall be responsible for the supervision and control of receipts and expenditures of the private funds of the community center. The general director shall specify a uniform method of records and accounting for all funds." So that there is an authorization under certain conditions for making charges.

In connection with that I only want to submit this to the gentleman for his consideration. I was rather actively opposed to this appropriation at that time, and I think, perhaps, I am as much responsible as anyone for its never having gone beyond $35,000. Previous to that time it had been doubling up about every year, but for the past two or three years it has been held at this amount. There is back of this community-center work the idea that we have a large investment in public buildings and that the community in the neighborhood of the buildings should have the use of them. Now, in getting the fullest use some of the activities that are carried on are free of any expense to those who attend, but there are some other things that the community wants to put on. Instead of having all the expense of it carried in this appropriation, which would not be enough to permit of all the desired activities, the community says: "Well, we will take care of some of this ourselves, and we will charge an admission fee that will cover the expense of these gatherings, and those who go and get the benefits of them can pay that fee." The gentleman can understand that there might be abuses sometimes, but I do not think the principle is objectionable.

Mr. BLANTON. This matter having passed the close scrutiny of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] as well as the chairman [Mr. CRAMTON], I will withdraw the reservation.

Mr. SISSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph to strike out the figures "60" in line 7 and insert "70."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SISSON: Page 47, line 7, strike out the figures "60" and insert in lieu thereof "70."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering this amendment has been explained to the members of the subcommittee having charge of this bill, and they have no objection to the change. The most of the money carried in this item is paid in salaries. There has been considerable embarrassment in paying the salaries necessary properly to supervise these buildings. If an entertainment is given in one of the school buildings it is proper that somebody should be there to see that it is conducted in an orderly and proper manner, and in all the cities of any size throughout the United States having similar activities I think that is done. I believe there will be better supervision if we can have more money spent in salaries. The other expenses do not amount to very much.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I will only say that this limitation was put in at the time we were trying to put the lid on this proposition.

Mr. SISSON. To put the brakes on.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. In 1918 they spent $5,000, in 1919 $21,000, in 1920 $25,000, in 1921 $35,000. That was when we commenced to give some attention to this item, and it seemed that everybody in a community who wanted to turn a hand toward this sort of thing wanted to be paid liberally for it. So we wanted to put a stop to that and we inserted the limitation. I want to say that it is very possible that the limitation now in the section is too rigid. So I have yielded to my splendid friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] to permit this relaxation; but it is not with the idea that they will hotfoot over to the Senate to get a further relaxation there.

Mr. SISSON. I agree very heartily with the gentleman in that. There ought to be a limitation, because unless it is put on by Congress there is no limit to the amount that might be expended in this sort of work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee regarding the matter as it now stands. With the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi and the original phrasing it makes it mandatory that 30 per cent of this sum be expended for equipment, and so forth. Now what is included in that term "equipment"?

Mr. CRAMTON. Supplies and equipment.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In one of the schools it might be advisable to expend some of this money for what might be known as a permanent improvement to the school; for example, leveling the floor of the auditorium for the use of the school and the community center. The Comptroller General has ruled that that could not be done. Under his ruling it must be only temporary equipment. I think he stretched the interpretation by ruling that such an improvement could not be made in case the money were available. What does the gentleman think about it?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Comptroller General is the authority to decide that, but I can see a justification for his decision. Schools and their repairs are cared for in certain items in this bill. Now, here is an item to carry on a special work, not to build or repair schoolhouses, not to attach to them permanent equipment, but to carry on work of a temporary character. I can see the justification for his ruling that out of this appropriation money should not be taken for school repairs.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I should think it would be much better if the ruling were exactly the other way, that this equipment should have some permanent value to the school. He might well make such a ruling as that but I can not understand his ruling for temporary improvements only.

Mr. CRAMTON. As a matter of fact under the present situation they will not have available a very large amount of money for school repairs. I do not think it will prevent their buying school equipment, perhaps some athletic equipment or some supplies that are practically of permanent use to the school.

I do not think those should be eliminated, and so much is taken up with salaries that I do not think they would have much available for the things the gentleman suggests. As a matter of fact, I indorse the idea that the community service should not have the privilege, and I do not think the board of education ought to let them rebuild our schoolhouses for some such temporary purpose. They had a program outlined in this community service matter two or three years ago involving two or three hundred thousand dollars for the rebuilding of schoolhouses to accommodate this community center work. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The question I brought up was a specific one, and I think the Comptroller General has taken a position which is not justified by the phrasing of the law, although very little rebuilding could be done on the entire amount involved, of course. I am in favor of this community center program. I believe it is a splendid thing to give the adults of the community a chance to get together in their own building. Where there is an opportunity, it seems to me an expenditure might well be made for the adapting of an auditorium to community uses where it does not injure but rather improves it for school purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance of free dental clinics in the public schools: Eight dental operators, at $700 each; 4 dental prophylactic operators, at $900 each; equipment and supplies, $1,000; in all, $10,200.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My attention has been called to the appropriation provided for in this paragraph, and it has been asserted that it is not doing the children of the public schools any particular good, for the reason that no provision is made for the examination of the children's teeth or for taking care of them in any way. I should like information from the committee just as to what is being done in the way of providing free clinics and free treatment for the children in the way of caring for their teeth. The information that I have obtained may not be correct, but I know there has been considerable complaint made.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I can only say to the gentleman that I have not attended the clinics or made any personal investigations, but while this item is not a large amount and perhaps is not enough to do everything that should be done along this line, still, on the other hand, you will find some who urge that nothing should be expended by the Government upon this.

The expenditure for that includes a small amount of equipment and replacement, it is for the salaries of dental operators mentioned in this section, and I suppose these dental operators have their offices in some one or more of the buildings, and the children go there for that attention, or they may go to the schoolrooms and consult the children there; that is, make the preliminary examinations.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. In some States dentists are provided who visit the schools and actually examine the teeth of the children in attendance. I am wondering whether anything of that kind takes place in the city of Washington, or whether these dentists provided for simply sit in their down-town offices and expect the children to come to them.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, no. I have the impression, although I do not speak with certainty, that they go to the rooms and make a preliminary examination at any rate, and that they have their quarters at some one or more of the buildings, where the children can go and have attention.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I wanted to get at the facts for my own information, as well as for others who are interested.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture, including pianos and window shades, for additions to buildings, equipment for kindergartens, and tools and furnishings for manual training, cooking, and sewing schools, as follows: Eight-room school at Ingleside, $5,156; eight-room addition to the Lovejoy School, $5,156; eight-room addition to the Garrison School, $5,156; new Chain Bridge Road School (two rooms, $1,514; three kindergartens, $3,000; two sewing schools, $1,200; two housekeeping and cooking schools, $3,000; two cooking schools, $2,000; two manual-training shops, $3,000; in all, $29,182.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting some information upon something that has escaped my mind on several occasions before. I am sorry that I have overlooked it until this time. In the item just read there is an appropriation of $1,514 for furniture in the new Chain Bridge School. Am I correct in the understanding that that school will not be ready for a couple of years yet.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman is correct in his recollection that when the school authorities were before us, the municipal architect, the superintendent of schools, and the commissioners, it developed that the expectation at that time was that that building, authorized by the act of June, 1922, would not be available for school use until September, 1924.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. 1924 or 1925?

Mr. CRAMTON. 1924. That would be two years and three months after the law became effective. It developed in that discussion we had in the hearings, on that general subject, that there were two schools, I think junior high schools, that the officers at that time expected would not be ready for use until two weeks after the school opens in September, 1923. The contract was not to be let until January, but a few days later I noted by the press that the contracts for those two schools, instead of being deferred until January, were let about the 10th or 12th of December, so that that will make possible, we hope, the opening of those two schools when school opens with the other schools in the fall of 1923. If the discussion which we had in the committee will have the same effect as to the Chain Bridge School, it seems that that will be ready for opening in the fall of 1923. There is no reason why it should not.

The Clerk read as follows:

The children of officers and men of the United States Army and Navy shall be admitted to the public schools without payment of tuition.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire some information about a provision which has been passed, for maintaining dental clinics. Is there any provision anywhere for maintaining eye clinics for the children of the District?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is not.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Is there not some agency of the District of Columbia to look after defective vision in the children?

Mr. CRAMTON. The only thing that there could be would be under the chief medical and sanitary inspector, who makes a medical inspection of these conditions in the public schools, and with him are certain graduate nurses, but outside of any attention that the medical inspection would give, there is no eye clinic.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Is not that being recognized as essential in most of the up-to-date schools of this country now?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman probably is a better authority on that than I am.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question. I notice on page 50 that we made quite an appropriation for textbooks and school supplies for the use of pupils of the first eight grades. In view of the amendment that was adopted by the committee a while ago in which we open up the schools, the night schools particularly, to pupils of all ages and all grades, why limit these free textbooks to pupils of the first eight grades? Why not let the old people get the benefit of these books as well as the young? Does not the chairman think that ought to be amended in conformity with the idea prevailing in the amendment adopted a few moments ago?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not think that that amendment stipulated the grades that must be attended by these adults. The language of the bill is such that any pupil in the first eight grades, regardless of age, would have the advantage of this. The minors who are in the high schools do not get free textbooks.

Mr. DENISON. Why not?

Mr. CRAMTON. That has not been the practice. The furnishing of free textbooks has only been for the first eight grades. For the first eight grades I assume that they are furnished regardless of the age of the pupil.

Mr. DENISON. There would not be very many of those old people who go to school at night who would be in the first eight grades. Most of them would be over that, it seems to me.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, it is so limited——

Mr. DENISON. Is there any similar provision in the night schools?

Mr. CRAMTON. The night school provision is cared for independently. It has a contingent fund including equipment and purchase of all necessary articles, supplies, and so forth, for classes.

Mr. DENISON. Does that include textbooks?

Mr. CRAMTON. It may in some cases; I am not advised, but I will say this, that the item in question does not carry anything for textbooks for night schools. Everything the night schools get comes out of their appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Continuing the construction of an addition to the Armstrong Manual Training School, $200,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I want to say, if I may be permitted to do so, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who is almost in charge of the great Rules Committee, is usually accurate in all his statements. But when he insisted that the District Committee had had two days and had not called up any bills here on the floor and there was no Member who had made any attempt to call them up, he ought to have gone further and stated that there was but one member of the committee authorized to call up any of those bills, and that was the chairman. No other member of the committee can call up a bill from the District Committee except the chairman. He is the only one authorized.

Mr. SNELL. When it was called to my attention, I made the correction.

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to be sure in regard to the correction. He ought to have been fair to the chairman and to the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit, is not the gentleman mistaken in his assertion that only the chairman can call up a bill? Whenever the Committee on the District of Columbia, for instance, has authorized any Member to report a bill, can not he call it up?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; but no Member was thus authorized. I was going to state, in every instance where a bill has been reported out by the District of Columbia Committee, the chairman only is the one who was authorized to call it up; and it was not fair to the chairman [Mr. FOCHT], who has been in the hospital for some time. As a matter of fact, the District Committee has had no day. The gentleman from New York stated that the District Committee had two District days, but they have not had any. The two days these bills could have been called up were on unanimous consent day each time, and not on District day. Those bills appeared on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and upon objection were taken off, one after another, and each time I would get up and ask that they be permitted to retain their places on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and Member after Member would object, and so they went off the Unanimous Consent Calendar. The gentleman ought to have been fair.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is getting down to facts. My statement was we were looking to the chairman of the District Committee to present some bills on two different Mondays I knew about. I did not say——

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will look up the record——

Mr. SNELL. There is no record——

Mr. BLANTON. There is a record. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania was turned down by the steering committee and told he could not have a day, I got up here and stated to the Speaker that I wanted to know whether there was a District day and whether the District Committee could come in and claim it, and the Speaker said they could not unless the Chair saw fit to recognize the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SNELL. I do not speak for the steering committee, as I am not a member; I was speaking individually.

Mr. BLANTON. I was speaking of one of the most powerful Members of this House who is going to be chairman of the great Committee on Rules. Mr. Chairman, I made these observations at the beginning of these new construction projects, because there are a number of legislative propositions in this bill that ought to come out on points of order, not because they may not be meritorious, but because they are in bills now pending before the legislative Committee of the District of Columbia, many of which are reported and others under investigation, and unless we are going to disband this District Committee that legislation ought to be considered by the District Committee. I offer this in explanation of the points of order that I am going to make against these new provisions. I do not know whether the Chair is going to sustain me or not, but I know they are matters of new legislation, uninvestigated, that ought to come out of this bill.

I make the point of order against the paragraph containing the $200,000, same being new construction and legislation unauthorized. I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law; that it is for new construction unauthorized by law, and regardless of the verbiage of the paragraph seeking to make it a continuing addition, I submit to the Chair it is nothing in the world but new construction entirely and it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the particular item, I take it, which the gentleman makes the point of order against——

Mr. BLANTON. Is the $200,000 item.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is for continuing the construction of an addition to the Armstrong Manual Training School.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it is to build a new school building.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say that in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the current year there is this language which I will read to the Chair:

For beginning the erection of an addition to the Armstrong Manual Training School and alterations thereto, to include an assembly hall, additional classrooms, shops, and laboratories, within a limit of cost of $500,000.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what act?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the current appropriation act for 1923, the District of Columbia appropriation act.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the appropriation act?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; the appropriation act. I will complete the reading:

Within the limit of cost of $500,000, of which there is hereby appropriated $100,000, and the commissioners are authorized to enter into a contract not to exceed $500,000.

There is a work, then, in progress for this school, within a total limit of cost of $500,000, of which $100,000 was appropriated in the 1923 act, and this present bill proposes to appropriate $200,000 more. It is therefore, Mr. Chairman, an appropriation to continue a work in progress, and is within the limit of cost fixed for that project. Clearly it is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels very clear in regard to this point. He looked it up before the point was raised and after it was raised. There are precedents for it, and the Chair overrules the point of order. Precedents are found for it in Hinds' Precedents, volume 5. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For beginning the remodeling of and the construction of an addition to the Western High School, to provide a new assembly hall, a gymnasium for boys, a gymnasium for girls, and additional classrooms, $100,000, and the commissioners are hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for said remodeling and extension at a cost not to exceed $550,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words in line 2, "or contracts."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 52, line 2, after the word "contract," strike out "or contracts."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it was the desire and intention of the committee to strike out those words wherever they appeared in the bill which came to the Committee on Appropriations, for the reason that it had been deemed wise, and it appears in this bill that a contract for any one of these schoolhouses shall be let in one contract in its entirety. The necessity of that limitation was brought about by the way the Eastern High School was managed. It is not worth while to rehash that now, because it has been gone over many times here, and the House is familiar with the facts. But if those two words are left in, then they will be in conflict with the limitation which appears in another place in this bill, and beyond all sort of question those two words ought to go out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] desire to be heard on the amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of a site on which to locate a 16-room building between Georgia Avenue and Sixteenth Street NW., north of Park Road, $60,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph that it is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas on the item beginning on line 5?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order for a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman got me to do that a little while ago in order to give me a spanking. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. If I did a good job, I will not repeat it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Michigan, Does this site adjoin another site?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is my understanding that it does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of a new site on which to locate a 16-room building in the vicinity of and to relieve the Tenley School, $25,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that it is legislation unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan permit the Chair to ask him whether or not this proposed site adjoins another site?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is my information that the land adjoins the present site. I went out with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] and looked at the land. It is my information that it does. Doctor Ballou, the superintendent of schools, states in the hearings that "the main building is an antiquated structure," and so forth. It is not expressly stated, but it is my understanding that the land is immediately adjacent to the present site, and the plans contemplate that the present site will continue to be used.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Texas to pass over this item for a moment I will get definite information as to that. I do not want to mislead the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. I will agree to that if it is understood that the point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed over for the moment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done, with the understanding that the point of order is pending. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of a new site for the McKinley Manual Training School, $215,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this adjacent to the present site?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this is an area of land that is immediately adjacent to Government-owned land which is now used for school purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is separate and distinct from this school, and the gentleman knows that.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is the Langley Junior High.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not connected with the McKinley Manual Training School in any way.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is adjacent to Government-owned property devoted to school purposes in the District.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, that is a different proposition. That does not make it in order. It has got to be a part of the particular plant to come within the ruling that the Chair intimated he would follow.

Mr. CRAMTON. The school system of the District of Columbia is a unit. One building will house a number of different activities. One building might include everything from the kindergarten to the twelfth grade. Other buildings might include simply a junior high school—that is, from the seventh to the ninth grades—or a building might be limited in its use, but all these schools are parts of one public-school system. There is a piece of land owned by the Government and devoted to school uses, and now they propose to extend that land, to put upon it a new building for other school uses. Those school uses are a part of the same plan for which the existing site is used.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there a public street or any other land intervening between the present site and the proposed site?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is immediately adjoining. There is no street intervening.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the attention of the Chair to page 239 of the hearings, where under a new subhead, "New construction," it takes in the Armstrong Manual Training School, a site farther north, and it also takes in this identical school. On page 244, under the heading of "New construction," is the McKinley Manual Training High School. That shows that it is to be absolutely new construction and that it comes within the rule that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Texas concluded?

Mr. BLANTON. Let me call the attention of the Chair to this paragraph, showing the testimony of the superintendent:

There is no opportunity to extend this building—

Speaking of the present building—

since it occupies the whole plot of ground at the present time.

It shows that you could not extend that building at all; that this is absolutely new construction on different grounds.

The CHAIRMAN. If this site were purchased, then would it be possible for them to extend it?

Mr. DENISON. That is what they are getting it for.

The CHAIRMAN. If they got the site, it would then be possible to make the extension, would it not?

Mr. BLANTON. That would apply to any school. It is entirely new construction, as shown by the hearings and by everyone who testified concerning it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The McKinley Manual Training School, referred to by the gentleman in what he has read, is the school now located on a site where there is no opportunity for extension. It is proposed to buy a new site and to use the present McKinley Manual Training School for other school purposes and to erect on this new site a new building for a new McKinley Manual Training School. The land on which that new building is to be erected is immediately adjacent to other land now occupied for school purposes in the District.

Mr. BLANTON. The reason I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that instead of coming to the Appropriations Committee, that has no time to go out and make these investigations, these matters ought to come before the proper legislative committee that does have the time to carefully consider them.

When they were claiming that they did not have room in a great many of these schools—that they did not have seats and desks to accommodate the children—I spent a whole week and went to many different schools, visiting them in person, and checking up the vacant chairs and desks in each room, and I found that there was available desk room and that there were available chairs for pupils in practically nine-tenths of the rooms I visited. These new projects that call for large expenditures call for investigation, and it is the District Legislative Committee that ought to make that investigation. The Appropriations Committee has made none at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, to be perfectly frank with the Chair, I visited this tract of land. The superintendent said that the proposal is to locate the McKinley Manual Training High School on the site adjacent to the Langley Junior High School, on T Street NE., near Lincoln Road. There is a large area of land—some 13 acres—involved in this. A portion of it is already occupied with buildings which will have to be removed. It is on the south side and adjacent to the Langley School. Now, it is very possible that there is an alley between the Langley School ground and the grounds that are proposed to be purchased here. I shall have to admit further that there are some streets that intersect the land that is to be bought and which it is proposed to close hereafter, but the land is adjacent to land already used for school purposes. It is quite a large area and a very desirable site.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the statement of the gentleman, it is the intention to buy a new plot of land and build a new McKinley School?

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course, the Chair realizes that the street is in the ownership of the United States.

Mr. SNELL. Granting that that is so, is not that carrying the proposition of the continuation of a public work a little further than it is generally understood that it is to be carried in an appropriation bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Here is what was done the other day: When the Interior Department bill was up it contained an appropriation for continuing the topographic survey. The topographic survey of the whole United States apparently was treated by the Chair as one project, for which there had been appropriations before.

There is no authorization of law for the topographic survey; but, on the basis of its being a continuing work, the appropriation was sustained as being in order.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is a little different.

Mr. CRAMTON. Here we have a school system that is one connected project, the schools all being under one management and serving one purpose. Here is a piece of land devoted to those purposes, and we propose to buy adjacent land, quite an area, to be devoted to the same purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Even according to the gentleman's argument, there will have to be an authorization to build a new building there, will there not?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I think that would need an authorization, certainly a new appropriation.

Mr. SNELL. If you need an authorization to build a new building there, I believe you need an authorization to buy the adjacent piece of land for an entirely new purpose. I appreciate that you can go a long way under this continuation of a public work; but I think we are stretching the point in this case, while I am in favor of the project.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the language read "for purchase, etc."——

Mr. SNELL. But it says for a new site.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the language read "purchase of additional land adjacent to the Langley Junior High School," the gentleman would admit that it is in order.

Mr. SNELL. I think that might be held to be in order; but this states distinctly here, and the gentleman says, that it is for a new proposition.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not say that it is for an entirely new proposition.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman to say that.

Mr. CRAMTON. The distinction the gentleman makes, I do not agree to. I am emphasizing that while the existing school plant is a junior high school, and this land is to be used for a high school, different buildings, they are all part of one connected, unified school system for the District of Columbia; so that the way that I endeavor to justify this item is not that the land we seek now for high-school purposes is adjacent to a junior high school, but that the land we seek for school purposes, if the Chair will permit, is immediately adjacent to land now used and owned for school purposes. Therefore, we are acquiring land adjacent to land we now own, to be used for the same purpose.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman also admits that this is an entirely new project; it is not an addition to something that you have now.

Mr. CRAMTON. We are going to use it for school purposes.

Mr. SNELL. And if the gentleman is talking about a general system, why could you not put a school down in any part of the city, because it is a part of that system?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is just the same as a topographic survey. They can survey an area a mile square, and that will make it a basis for a continuing work throughout the United States.

Mr. SNELL. If you wanted to, you could buy a school lot or site and build a school building in any part of the city.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; but adjacent to land already owned for a similar purpose.

Mr. SNELL. Then we could buy up the whole city without any authorization of law and put it to school purposes.

Mr. CRAMTON. If Congress would provide the money, it would be in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SNELL. In my judgment, that is stretching the original intent and purpose of that rule, and it is going further than we usually go in construing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Gentlemen will appreciate the fact that there are several conflicting precedents. In one precedent it states that the purchase of adjacent land is held to be in continuation of a public work, and in section 3774 of Hinds' Precedents the purchase of additional ground and the erection of an addition to an existing building was held to be in continuation of a public work. The rulings have been very liberal in the matter of the continuation of a public work. In the opinion of the Chair, if this proviso were to include the purchase of land adjoining the Langley School the Chair would have no hesitancy in saying that it is in order; but it seems to the Chair that this is practically a new work being undertaken. Perhaps that is a narrow interpretation for the Chair to take, but the Chair does feel that this is a new work, and therefore it is a new site. In the opinion of the Chair it is in violation of the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 52, after line 10, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For the purchase of additional land for school purposes adjacent to the Langley Junior High School, $215,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, not authorized by law. The Chair is already cognizant of the fact that the purpose of this appropriation is not to continue the use of the Langley School; it is not to build an addition to the Langley School or to repair the Langley School; but if the Chair will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, he will admit that it is for the purpose of buying the new site on which to build a school known as the McKinley High School.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I have just made inquiry of Colonel Keller, the engineer commissioner of the District, and I am advised that this item, and also the Tenleytown item, is immediately adjacent to land now owned for school purposes by the Government.

As to the point of order, I would like the Chair's attention to this proposition. One section has been ruled out by the Chair on a point of order and that is out of the bill. The Chair is not now ruling upon that other proposition. The proposition that I offer now provides an appropriation to buy land adjacent to land now occupied for school purposes by the Langley school. It is a very desirable piece of land. It can be used to advantage for many purposes. We do not authorize, in the amendment that I have offered, the erection of a McKinley high school on that site. We do not provide for the erection of any high school on that site. We simply buy the land that is adjacent to the Langley high school. Whether there can be an argument as to the desirability of buying that land adjacent to the Langley school will be determined by the committee after the point of order is decided, but as to the legislative authority to entertain an amendment to purchase additional land immediately adjacent to the site that we already have, I do not see how there can be any question. All reference to a new high school is eliminated. I submit that it comes within the obiter dicta of the Chair a few minutes ago and is in order.

Mr. SNELL. Is this additional land you want to buy absolutely essential to the proposition that is there at the present time? It seems to me that that is the vital question.

Mr. CRAMTON. That goes to the merits of the question. It is desirable.

Mr. SNELL. Is it absolutely necessary? Would it be, if you were not going to build a new building?

Mr. CRAMTON. That has nothing to do with the point of order. It is land that is immediately adjacent, and no building can be put up until Congress authorizes it.

Mr. SNELL. I think when the gentleman admits that he can not put up a building until Congress authorizes it, that he admits away his proposition.

Mr. CRAMTON. It may be used as an athletic field, or as a drill field, or as a playground. Until Congress authorizes the money no high school could be erected, unless the building is also contiguous to the adjacent building.

I am simply asking authority to buy land that is immediately adjacent to land we have now without any reference to any new educational proposition.

Mr. SNYDER. There is no emergency demanding it.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is for the committee to decide.

Mr. SNYDER. What committee?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SNYDER. It seems to me that is for the District of Columbia to decide as to the necessity.

Mr. CRAMTON. We are talking about the parliamentary situation.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, is it not true that it has been ruled already that adjacent land can be purchased for the building of an entirely new building?

Mr. SNELL. I think that is the point, whether the adjacent land be for an entirely new building or an addition.

Mr. TOWNER. There is authority to that effect, I am quite sure.

Mr. CRAMTON. As applied to the same plan?

Mr. TOWNER. The proposition is this, Can new land be purchased for the building of a new building for school purposes? It has been ruled that it can. Now, whether it can be extended to a case of this kind is the question——

Mr. SNELL. That is the point.

Mr. TOWNER. It does not seem to me how the Chair can view this without taking into consideration what preceded it, not merely on the merits of this proposition that is now placed before the committee, and I do not see how the amendment can be overruled.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, just one word. If the position of the gentleman from Michigan is correct, then there will be no end to the proposition. Under any appropriation bill that could be brought in here every other day you could keep on buying land for school purposes, and you could finally buy up every acre of land in the District of Columbia, because it would be adjacent. But the rule is this, that in order to buy new land it must be shown that it is needed for that particular school project. In other words, that that school needs additional land, that it can not continue carrying on its business without additional land. That is one of the first things the gentleman must do to make his appropriation in order. It is true he could build an entirely new school if the present one needs remodeling. We could tear down and bring in an appropriation to construct an entirely new school, but it must be for that particular school which has been already authorized by act of Congress, but when he goes to construct an entirely new project it will come under the old ruling, which provides that in order to buy land you have to have authorization from Congress.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest this: The rule is clearly expressed that the purchase of adjoining land for a work already established is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Work "already established."

Mr. CRAMTON. There is the work already established, the Langley High School, buildings and grounds, and I am proposing to acquire certain land immediately adjacent to that established work. Now, as to the wisdom of the policy, that is for the committee to consider when it comes up. The Appropriations Committee can not buy it without the assent of Congress. Just now the question is whether the amendment is in order, and that is all. Whether some time in the future Congress might determine to put a new high school on a part of that land, that is not within my knowledge now or that of the Chair. I am asking the insertion of language to buy land immediately adjacent to the Langley High School, an established project. I do not see how there can be any question about it being in order. As a matter of fact, this site will be used; a part of it would be used for playground purposes for the existing institution. It would be all one project together.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to say a few minutes ago he could not tell definitely what this ground would be used for; he did not know whether it would be for school construction or not. I want to call the attention of the Chair to a definite rule, page 365. In discussing an amendment not admissible under this general proposition of continuing a public work, it says:

> And not for the continuation of a work indefinite as to completion and intangible in nature.

If this, according to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan, is not indefinite as to completion and intangible as to nature, I would like to have somebody tell me what it is. He stated he did not know whether there would be a building erected or not and does not know what it would be used for, but that it was adjacent. From that statement and the indefiniteness of the completion and the intangibility of the nature it should be ruled out by the Chair.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is not indefinite; the land is definite, the sum is definite, and part of the use of it would be for playgrounds.

Mr. SNELL. Or the building of a school?

Mr. CRAMTON. The land will be there, but what Congress at some time in the future will order I can not say.

Mr. SNELL. There is no definite building program to state definitely to Congress that this is a continuation of a public work, and for that reason, according to the statement and ruling of the Chair, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that I do not think he could rule this is in order.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the question presented here is this: An item is presented which the Chair has ruled is not in order because it is legislation. Now, we are not talking as though there had not been a ruling; that is, a ruling that had not been appealed from; so it is the law on this question. To avoid that ruling, the chairman of the committee suggests an amendment.

Let us concede for a moment that the language of that amendment would take it beyond the ruling and permit the new language to stand. The question is this: Is the Chair obliged to shut his ears and close his eyes to all that has occurred so far in this matter? Is this, in other words, as though the bill had been presented in the amended form, conceding that in the amended form it would not be subject to a point of order?

I say that that is not so; that the Chair is not bound by any such narrow rule as that; that it is the duty of the Chair to enforce not merely the naked rule in its words and in its verbiage but to enforce the spirit of the rule; and so the Chair is obliged to take into account the whole situation that exists.

And what is that situation? Is it a fact that the intention back of this provision of the bill is to buy a site which is adjacent to and will aid that existing school enterprise? That is not the fact at all. That is not the claim. The Chairman is obliged to be in good faith with the committee, and the committee is obliged to be in good faith with the Chairman, and we have to bear those two things in view in ruling. The real fact is that this site is to be purchased not at all for the purpose of adding to this property but for a new, independent, and separate purpose; and that being the fact, the matter presented before the Chair, or the question presented before the Chair, is precisely the same question as was presented before. In other words, the Chair can not shut his ears and close his eyes and forget what has occurred in five minutes and rule as though nothing had occurred in relation to this matter and as though this printed bill itself does not show that it is a new and independent purpose. On the contrary, the Chair has to recognize the fact that it is a new and independent purpose and that the amendment, while on its face and in its language, if the bill had been framed in its original form, appears to be for a corollary purpose, an additional purpose, to supplement something already existing, yet in point of fact that is not the real situation. He has to rule on all that is before him and not rule simply on the narrow basis of the new language only which is presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the great force of the argument of the two gentlemen from New York, and perhaps if this came before the Chair for the first time this afternoon he would agree to that contention, because the Chair thinks that some of these precedents are entirely too broad. But there they are as a part of the proceedings of this House, and it is the custom of the Chair to comply as nearly as he can with the precedents. In the opinion of the Chair there are one or two cases absolutely parallel with this case where it was held that it is in order to purchase land adjacent to an existing public work. It does require it to be stated that there is an emergency existing, or that the work to be done is to be exactly similar to the work that is already going forward. In view of these precedents the Chair is going to hold this amendment in order and overrule the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair please, I suggest that we return to the Tenley item. The land, as I understand, is adjacent to the Tenley School, and this is a remodeling of the Tenley School.

The CHAIRMAN. On that statement of the gentleman from Michigan the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] that under the language to which he has last referred any land can be purchased anywhere in the District.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Why is not this entire project an educational system for the District of Columbia, under one superintendent, all of it, under one board of education, in a growing city? As Congress knows, we have been legislating for years for that one project—an educational system. And why would it be unreasonable to presume that we could do that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that he designate the land to be purchased, so that this item will not be subject to a point of order? It does not propose to purchase this land, but land in the vicinity. If that were changed, then clearly it would not be subject to a point of order. As it is now it may be.

Mr. CRAMTON. The land in contemplation is immediately adjacent, but if we limit it——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But there is nothing to indicate the land that is to be purchased.

Mr. CRAMTON. I admit that. I was saying to the gentleman that if necessary we could make the language more restrictive, but that puts the commissioners right up against one owner of land, to deal with that one alone. This language is a little broader. If necessary, we could restrict it, but I think it is much better to leave it as it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Chair will be compelled to rule on the language, not on any explanation of it. This speaks not of adjacent land but of land in the vicinity. I offer this suggestion for no other purpose than to facilitate the passage of the item.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I would like to know just what is being cut out and what is not cut out from these buildings and grounds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will indicate the portions that have been adopted and the portions eliminated.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to that, Mr. Chairman; it will take up a lot of time.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have been sitting here watching this proceeding, and it strikes me that we, as a deliberative body, have gotten ourselves into a very peculiar situation. There has been a controversy going on between members of three great committees—the Appropriations Committee, the Rules Committee, and the District of Columbia Committee—during the consideration of this bill, and as a result of it the District of Columbia is going to suffer in its school facilities. As an American citizen and as a Member of Congress, I for one think we should give the District of Columbia all that is asked for in this bill for facilities for school purposes. That is the way I feel about it. I think this body ought to get together and give the District of Columbia what it asks for in this bill, and put the matter in such shape that it will not be subject to points of order. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia has spoken several times during the consideration of this bill in rather loving(?) terms of the gentlemen on the Rules Committee, and the net result of this conflict between these gentlemen on these great committees is that the District of Columbia suffers. This is the first time I have had anything to say in this House, but I have seen this controversy going on here during the consideration of this bill between the members of these great committees, and it has not met with my approval. It seems to me we ought to be able to get together here and get what we want. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection of an eight-room extensible building on the site to be purchased in the vicinity of Georgia Avenue and Sixteenth Street NW., north of Park Road, $130,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that this is unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will withhold his point for one minute, I only want to say that there is a great need for a school in this section, which has been built up perhaps as much as any new section of Washington. If the gentleman makes the point of order, I must admit that the paragraph is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very clear to the Chair that the words "in the vicinity of" make this amendment subject to a point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection of an eight-room extensible building, including a combination assembly hall and gymnasium, on the site to be purchased in the vicinity of, and to relieve the Tenley School, $160,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that this is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For beginning the erection of a 16-room building, including a combination assembly hall and gymnasium, to replace the old John F. Cook School, $100,000, and the commissioners are hereby authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building at a cost not to exceed $250,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order that this is unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of additional land in the vicinity of the Slater-Langston (Cook) Schools, $50,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that this is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to follow line 4, on page 53, for the purchase of additional land adjacent to the Slater-Langston (Cook) Schools, $50,000. That is the same as the existing language, except to make it "adjacent to" instead of "in the vicinity of." It is for the use of those schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 53, after line 4, insert "For the purchase of additional land adjacent to the Slater-Langston (Cook) Schools, $50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of a new site on which to locate a Junior High School between Twentieth Street and Rock Creek and K and O Streets NW., or vicinity, $50,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that this is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry to see this item go out. It is very desirable, but it is a new site.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $1,200,000, to be disbursed and accounted for as "Buildings and grounds, public schools," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That none of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid or obligated toward the construction of or addition to any building the whole and entire construction of which shall not have been awarded in one or a single contract, separate and apart from any other contract, project, or undertaking, to the lowest bidder complying with all the legal requirements as to a deposit of money or the execution of a bond, or both, for the faithful performance of the contract: Provided further, That this limitation shall in no wise apply to contracts already awarded, nor shall it be construed to impair the legal rights or status of any unsuccessful bidder on a contract already awarded: Provided further, That no architect's fee shall be paid or obligated for plans, specifications, or any professional services whatever, unless they are such as will enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or those letting a contract, to secure a legal bid within the amount authorized by Congress for the building or other project: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as repealing existing law giving the commissioners the right to reject all bids.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to invite the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] to the language which begins with the proviso at the end of line 24 on page 23. I am quite sure that it was the intention of the committee to strike out that proviso, including the first half of line 3 on page 54. That language was in last year's bill, when the contracts had been let that might have been disturbed by the limitation. But now no contracts of that character have been let, and that language should go out.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that the effort was to modify it as the committee had agreed and in accordance with the gentleman's suggestion, and the change that was indicated to the clerk has been carried in the bill. If the gentleman thinks that proviso should come out, I have no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am quite sure that the second proviso, beginning with line 24, should go out.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will not oppose an amendment to that effect.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I move to strike out the proviso beginning in line 24, page 53, and ending in line 3 on page 54.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: On page 53, line 24, after the word "contract," strike out the proviso down to and including the word "awarded," on page 54, line 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

SALARIES.

Major and superintendent, $4,500; 2 assistant superintendents, at $3,000 each; 3 inspectors, at $2,400 each; 13 captains, at $2,400 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,400; clerk (who shall be a stenographer), $1,800; 2 clerks (who shall be stenographers), at $1,500 each; clerk—1 (who shall be assistant property clerk), $1,200, 1 $1,200, 3 at $1,000 each, 1 $700; 4 surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $1,600 each, additional compensation for 35 privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $16,800; additional compensation for 14 privates detailed for special service in the various precincts for the prevention and detection of crime, at the rate of $120 per annum, $1,680; additional compensation for 1 inspector or captain and 1 lieutenant detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, at $400 each; 21 lieutenants, one of whom shall be harbor master, at $2,000 each; 56 sergeants, one of whom may be detailed for duty in the harbor patrol, at $1,800 each; privates—582 of class 3 at $1,660 each, 222 of class 2 at $1,560 each, 30 of class 1 at $1,460 each; amount required to pay salaries of privates of class 2 who will be promoted to class 3 and privates of class 1 who will be promoted to class 2 during the fiscal year 1924, $7,960; 9 telephone clerks, at $900 each; 19 janitors, at $600 each; laborer, $720; messenger, $600; motor vehicle allowance for 2 inspectors at $480 each; 20 captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted on horses, at $540 each; 32 lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted on bicycles, at $70 each; driver-privates—35 of class 2, at $1,560 each, 3 of class 1, at $1,460 each; 6 police matrons, at $720 each; in all, $1,693,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, in line 12, page 57, after the figures, strike out the period and insert a colon, and the following:

Provided, That all members of the police force shall be granted one day off each week in lieu of Sunday and be furnished with their uniforms and all required equipment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 57, line 12, after the figures, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That all members of the police force shall be granted one day off each week in lieu of Sunday, and be furnished with their uniforms and all required equipment."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. CRAMTON. I make the point of order that the amendment is very clearly legislation within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which the gentleman himself is a member.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will reserve it for a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if it is right to put other matters of legislation in this bill, there can be none more urgent or needed than that covered in this amendment. We furnish every single employee of this Government one day off each week in lieu of Sunday except the police and firemen. We furnish every single employee of this Government every necessary equipment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman is speaking to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am speaking to the merits of my amendment. The gentleman from Michigan reserves the point of order.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order without any reservation.

Mr. BLANTON. I assure the gentleman from New York that he is not a friend of the police or the firemen.

The CHAIRMAN. It is clear that this is legislation in violation of the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk reads I want to ask the chairman a question about the language beginning after the word "each," on line 6, page 57, of the bill:

Twenty captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted on horses, at $540 each.

What does that mean?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the allowance to them for the maintenance of horses.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Ought it not to be stated in different language?

Mr. CRAMTON. We are continuing the language used heretofore, which has seemed to be effective.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman mean by that that these men are allowed $540 each for sustaining and keeping the horse one year?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is their extra compensation for that purpose. The law provides:

Members of the police force who may be mounted on horses furnished and maintained by themselves shall each receive an extra compensation of $540 per annum.

Mr. SNELL. That includes furnishing the horse and the keep of it?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Ought not the language to state that this is an extra allowance? It is very indefinite, it occurs to me.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think there is merit in the gentleman's suggestion, but they are getting the money all right.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including rewards for fugitives, purchase of modern revolvers and other firearms, maintenance of card system, stationery, city directories, books of reference, periodicals, telegraphing, telephoning, photographs, printing, binding, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, not to exceed $200 for car tickets, furniture and repairs thereto, beds and bed clothing, insignia of office, motor cycles, police equipments and repairs to same, repairs to vehicles, van, patrol wagons, and saddles, mounted equipments, and expenses incurred in prevention and detection of crime, and other necessary expense, $60,000; of which amount a sum not exceeding $500 may be expended by the major and superintendent of police for prevention and detection of crime, under his certificate, approved by the commissioners, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended: Provided, That the War Department may, in its discretion, furnish the commissioners, for use of the police, upon requisition, such worn mounted equipment as may be required.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 58, line 23, after the word "required" strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That all members of the police force shall be granted one day off each week in lieu of Sunday, and be furnished with their uniforms and all required equipment."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is legislation not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be heard for a moment on this point of order. The Chair will note that the last proviso, beginning on line 20 and ending on line 23, is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill. The amendment that I offer is an amendment to that proviso. In other words, while my amendment contains legislation, it is an amendment to a proviso containing legislation, placed in the bill by the committee, and I cite as a precedent the ruling which the Chair made about an hour ago in discussing the Begg proposition, wherein he said that where there appears in the bill language which is legislation unauthorized, an amendment to that legislation is not out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will correct the gentleman. The Chair said any germane amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I maintain that this is germane to this paragraph. This paragraph has to do with the equipment of the police. This has to do with the equipment for the use of the police.

Mr. SNYDER. But it has to do with something else besides that.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him how one day off each week in the police department has anything to do with the police equipment?

Mr. BLANTON. That is something that they ought to have without legislation. It ought to be given to them without authority of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not disputing the justness of that provision. He agrees with it, but he asks the question in order to view the matter from a parliamentary standpoint.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit the matter to the Chair.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is a further consideration, but if the Chair is prepared to rule——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. This amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, is not germane, and on that point the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment, with the one day in lieu of Sunday left out, and in that form I think it is germane to the paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 58, line 23, after the word "required," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That all members of the police force shall be furnished with their uniforms and all required equipment."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the amendment; and, in connection with that, I make it upon two grounds. First, the section in the bill to which it is offered does not contain matter subject to a point of order. I dispute the argument of the gentleman from Texas that the proviso in the section would have been subject to a point of order. It is a retrenchment, which results in a saving to the Government, to issue to the police for their use such worn-out mounted equipment as may be required instead of appropriating money to buy new equipment. That is apparent upon the face of the paragraph. If the section in the bill has in it nothing subject to the point of order, the gentleman's amendment is new legislation and would not be in order upon the paragraph.

Furthermore, if the Chair should chance to disagree with me on that, the new language which the gentleman offers—to issue clothing to the policemen, purchased at the cost of the Federal Government—is not germane to a proposal to buy revolvers, or a card system, or stationery, or books of reference, and so forth, or anything else in the paragraph. It amounts to an increase of salary above the statutory allowance and is not germane to the paragraph in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment on the point of order. While it is permissible under our rules to amend a general provision of law by a specific amendment providing for a special purpose, it is not permissible to amend one specific provision of law by another specific provision of law. And that is exactly what the gentleman from Texas is trying to do here now, and it is clearly not in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that when the amendment was originally offered there was no question of its being subject to the point of order because of the wording which the Chair pointed out to the gentleman from Texas, a provision, by the way, with which the Chair sympathizes. Now the amendment is nearer the line, but the Chair still feels that it is open to objection; first, because it is repugnant to the rule to endeavor to amend one specific subject by another specific subject; second, because, as the subject matter sought to be amended deals with equipment supplied by the War Department and the amendment provides for equipment to be furnished free of expense, the amendment lacks the necessary relationship to make it germane.

A similar proposition was presented when it was sought to amend the war risk insurance act by a free-policy amendment. If the Chair recalls correctly the incident, Chairman TILSON ruled the amendment out of order. The Chair in this instance sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one aerial hook and ladder truck, motor driven, $15,500.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee what is being done toward equipping the fire apparatus with acetylene torches or something of that kind, so they can operate at fires in connection with such disasters as occurred at the Knickerbocker Theater, when they could not cut through the walls and release the people who were suffering and dying there?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not say to the gentleman what they have done. I presume they have since that time been properly equipped in that respect through the War Department or otherwise. There was certainly no mention of it before our committee.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understood some time since that there was a statement that the fire department was to be so equipped and I have not heard anything further about it and I was wondering if there had been any steps taken to meet an emergency and a situation which, in my opinion, ought to be met.

Mr. CRAMTON. My information is that they got their equipment through the surplus property in the War Department; in any event there was no request made and I assume if it was needed they would have come to our committee.

Mr. BRIGGS. If the gentleman will permit another question, and that is in regard to the number of these building inspectors. Has a sufficient number been allowed in this bill upon the request of the commissioners to meet the demand for proper inspection of buildings under erection in this city?

Mr. CRAMTON. We granted all the Budget recommended, and it is my understanding that the Budget granted all that were estimated for by the commissioners. The gentleman will remember in the deficiency act of last spring it gave them an increased amount of $20,000 and we are continuing that force.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is all I wanted to know. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

SALARIES.

Health officer, $4,000; assistant health officer, $2,500; chief clerk and deputy health officer, $2,500; chief, bureau of vital statistics, $1,800; clerks—1 $1,600, 5 at $1,200 each, 4 at $1,000 each, 2 at $900 each, 1 $720; sanitary inspectors—chief $1,800, assistant chief $1,400, 12 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,000 each, 3 at $900 each; food inspectors—chief $1,800, assistant chief $1,400, 6 at $1,400 each, 5 at $1,200 each, 6 at $1,000 each, 5 at $900 each; chemist, $2,000; assistant chemist, $1,500; chief of bureau of preventable diseases and director of bacteriological laboratory, $2,750; serologist, $2,500; 2 assistant bacteriologists at $1,200 each; laboratory assistant, $840; skilled laborers—1 $720, 1 $600; 2 messengers, at $600 each; 2 chauffeurs, at $720 each; poundmaster, $1,400; watchman, $600; laborers, at not exceeding $65 per month each, $3,120; in all, $96,390.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I want to ask the chairman the reason for increasing the salary of the health officer?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is no increase above the current year.

Mr. BLANTON. But there is an increase above the authorized statutory salary, which is the only salary authorized by law.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not examined that, but I will say we continued it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman examine these statutory salaries when fixing a new bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. No.

Mr. BLANTON. He takes whatever they ask?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have generally done that, being careful not to increase the salary above the current law.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman has increased this salary $500 more than the statutory salary. That is legislation, and I could make a point of order against it, but, of course, I will not do it; but the gentleman gave as his reasons for not granting justice to the police and firemen—who are absolutely unprotected and who have had all of their powers of offense taken away when they took away the power of strikes—he said he would not give them relief because it was legislation; but when it comes to the health officer the salary is increased $500 beyond the statutory salary.

Mr. CRAMTON. Our committee continued the salary as heretofore. As to the police, in that case we did not check back to see just what was authorized by law, but we continued the same amount they are getting at the present time. It may be that to some of the police we have given more than authorized, but I think not.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think it is far out of line, and I will not make the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For establishing and maintaining a child hygiene service, including the establishment and maintenance of child-welfare stations for the clinical examination, advice, care, and maintenance of children under 6 years of age, payment for personal services, rent, fuel, periodicals, and supplies, $15,000: Provided, That the commissioners may accept such volunteer services as they may deem expedient in connection with the establishment and maintenance of the service herein authorized: Provided further, That this shall not be construed to authorize the expenditure or the payment of any money on account of any such volunteer service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he does not think that, on account of the importance of the items which we are reaching, we had better have a quorum present?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I had in mind—as we are getting along so rapidly—that we would run until 5 o'clock, and, if agreeable, stop at 5 o'clock.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUVENILE COURT.

Salaries: Judge, $3,600; clerk, $2,000; deputy clerk, who is authorized to act as clerk in the absence of that officer, $1,480; financial clerk, who is authorized to act as deputy clerk, $1,200; stenographer and typewriter, who is authorized to act as a deputy clerk, $1,080; stenographer and typewriter for judge's work, and to aid in keeping records in clerk's office, $1,080; probation officers—chief, $2,000, assistant chief (who shall also be investigating officer for children's cases), $1,500, two at $1,200 each, one for adult cases, $1,200, five at $1,000 each; investigating officer for juvenile work, $1,400; investigating officer for adult cases, $1,200; record and information clerk for probation office, $1,200; clerk for probation office, $900; two bailiffs, at $900 each; telephone operator, $600; messenger, $600; janitor, $600; charwoman, $240; in all, $31,080.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. How much has the salary of the juvenile judge been raised over the statutory salary?

Mr. CRAMTON. So far as I know, none. We are continuing the salary contained in the 1923 bill, and, as far as I know, that is the statutory salary.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not speaking of what was carried in the last appropriation bill. Is not the salary $3,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no information as to that. I can only state what salary the lady is getting at the present time, and we have continued the same salary she is getting now.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a quite amusing incident happened in connection with this particular juvenile court. An attorney was appointed by the court to defend a certain case, and after the case was decided he was asked about the facts of the case on the outside, and he gave his opinion—just merely recited what had transpired in the court—and in the next few days he was cited to appear before the court and show cause why he should not be held in contempt for reflecting upon the action of the court, after the case had been finally disposed of and when he was merely acting under the appointment of the court. If the judge of the juvenile court is exercising such jurisdiction, threatening attorneys and threatening to take away their licenses, maybe her salary ought to be raised above the statutory allowance. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. That will do; that is all right. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of jurors, $10,000: Provided, That none of the money appropriated by this act for the payment of jurors' fees in any of the courts shall be available or used for that purpose unless the actual cost of the trial jury in each case first be ascertained and fixed by the court and taxed as part of the costs and judgment rendered therefor against the defendant in a criminal case against whom a verdict of guilty has been rendered; nor shall any such money be available or used for that purpose until execution has been issued and a return of nulla bona thereon has been made by the proper officer. Neither shall any of the money appropriated by this act for the payment of jurors' fees be disbursed or used to pay any juror's fees whatsoever unless the actual cost of the trial jury be ascertained and fixed by the court and taxed as costs and judgment rendered therefor against the defendant where either the United States or the District of Columbia is plaintiff, and the defendant is unsuccessful in the suit. However, no person shall be imprisoned because of the nonpayment of the aforementioned costs.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against all of that paragraph, beginning on line 14, with the word "Provided," down to the end of the paragraph on page 71, line 8, on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I think it is unnecessary to argue the point of order, for the reason that it is strictly and unqualifiedly a limitation upon the expenditure which, under the rule, is unquestionably permissible. It is so plainly a limitation that I feel it is unnecessary to argue it before the Chair.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I invite the attention of the Chair to page 458 of the hearings on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, in which Mr. Justice McCoy states as follows:

Now, in conclusion, might it not be better to have the whole subject investigated and to have some legislation on it from the District Committee?

That is referring to this provision. He goes on then to say:

I would have been perfectly willing, Mr. EVANS, to go before the District Committee on some such proposition as that. As I say, I do not know what the policy of Congress will be, or what policy Congress wants to adopt as to making the costs heavy or light. If they want to throw the costs upon the litigant in the civil case, then we can make some suggestion about costs in there. As I say, I know nothing about it in criminal cases, but the policy of the code is that the United States shall not be at any expense in criminal cases.

Now, I also invite the attention of the Chair to page 457, in which Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky makes a statement to show that this is entirely new legislation. He says:

Here is the situation: The bootleggers and whisky runners are demanding jury trials with the hope they can get a fellow bootlegger or a fellow whisky runner on the jury and hang it, and they are clogging the courts by their demands for juries.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What has that got to do with the rules and regulations of the House—a statement showing what this man says before the committee?

Mr. HILL. It shows what the situation is. This is an attempt at legislation.

Mr. SNELL. This is a pure limitation on an appropriation bill which is always admitted.

Mr. HILL. Even if this is a limitation on an appropriation bill, this is not a limitation on the expenditure, but on the action of the person. I submit that it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the chairman of the committee any recollection of whether or not this item has been carried in previous bills in this form?

Mr. CRAMTON. It was carried in the current year, but in a different form. This is carried as a limitation, and in the bill for the current year there was a similar limitation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Ten thousand dollars is carried for the payment of jury fees. The limitation is that none of that money shall be paid unless the jury fees shall be assessed as costs. It is clearly a limitation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know how it is in Kentucky, but in the State of Texas, both in civil and criminal cases, a nominal jury fee of $5 is assessed against the losing party. Say 12 men are drawing jury fees, and on a case of two or three weeks their expense is never assessed, either in civil or criminal cases. Is not that the same rule that applies in Kentucky?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Much the same rule. But, Mr. Chairman, a new condition has arisen here. The courts, particularly the police court, are being clogged by men who are not willing to be tried by the judge, but who demand a jury. I am informed that most of those demands for jury trials come from alleged bootleggers, who find their way so successfully and so easily from adjacent cities to the District of Columbia, and they demand a jury with the hope of getting somebody engaged in the same business on the jury with a view of hanging the jury.

But that is no reason why the point of order should either be sustained or not sustained. If this is not a limitation on the expenditure, then I do not believe it possible for one to be written.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's own remarks show that this is an attempt at legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I admit that it is an attempt and that it is legislation by limitation, for the purpose of reducing the expenses of the Government.

Mr. HILL. I invite the Chairman's attention to the words of the concluding part of the paragraph on page 71:

However, no person shall be imprisoned because of the nonpayment of the aforementioned costs.

That certainly is no limitation. It has nothing to do with the application of the money. It is a change of the substantive law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is not a change of the substantive law, if the gentleman will pardon me, because it is already a law.

Mr. HILL. The sixth amendment to the Constitution guarantees even to bootleggers a fair and impartial trial by jury, and this is to limit the right of trial by jury.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an important question. The Chair will ask the chairman of the committee if he will allow this to go over until Monday, so as to permit him to finish the reading of the bill to-night?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TILSON as Speaker pro tempore having assumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4030. An act for the relief of Capt. Murray A. Cobb; to the Committee on War Claims.

S. J. Res. 259. Joint resolution authorizing the President to abrogate the international agreement embodied in certain Executive orders relating to the Panama Canal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES.

Mr. MADDEN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 13696, Rept. 1349) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order on the bill.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday next week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the business of Calendar Wednesday next week be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Interior Department appropriation bill (H. R. 13559) may be taken from the Speaker's table, the amendments of the Senate disagreed to and a conference asked for, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Interior Department appropriation bill, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this request is made after conference with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And it is satisfactory to him?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is satisfactory to him.

Mr. BLANTON. I objected this morning when this request was made, but I have had a conference with the gentleman from Michigan, and I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair will appoint the conferees.

There was no objection, and the Speaker pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. FRENCH, and Mr. CARTER.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore made, adjourned until Sunday, January 7, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

897. A letter from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting the annual report of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for the year 1922; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

898. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a list of useless executive papers which have no permanent value and which should be disposed of; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

6770. By Mr. SANDERS of New York: Petition of 42 residents of Dale, N. Y., and vicinity, to repeal the tax on ammunition and firearms contained in paragraph 7, section 900, internal revenue law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6771. Also, petition of 49 residents of Cowlesville, Strykersville, Johnsonburg, N. Y., and vicinity, favoring an appropriation to extend relief to the famine-stricken people of the German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, January 7, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. WILLIAM A. RODENBERG, a Representative from the State of Illinois, who caused to be read by the clerk the following communication:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 7, 1923.

I hereby designate Hon. WILLIAM A. RODENBERG to act as Speaker pro tempore to-day.

F. H. GILLETT.

Rev. Page Milburn, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, our help in ages in past, our hope for years to come, we worship Thee, we dedicate unto Thee our life, our love, our service, our faith, our hope. We thank Thee that in this day of Christian civilization we know somewhat of representative citizenship, of men dedicating their lives unto the service of mankind and of the world. And as we remember this day the life, character, and service of one who has passed away, may our hearts be inspired to do more and more valiant service for our fellow men, for our Nation, and for the world. In Thee we live and move and have our being. We are dependent upon Thee. We look to Thee in hope this day, and ask that Thou wilt forgive us our sins and use us to Thy glory. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the reading of the Journal will be deferred.

There was no objection.

THE LATE JONAH KUHIO KALANIANAOLE, OF HAWAII.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the special order for the day.

The clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. BALDWIN, by unanimous consent—
Ordered, That Sunday, January 7, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. J. KUHIO KALANIANAOLE, late a Delegate from the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Hawaii offers a resolution which the clerk will report.

The clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 478.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. JONAH KUHIO KALANIANAOLE, late a Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, there are several Members who wished to pay tribute to the late Mr. KALANIANAOLE to-day who are unavoidably absent, and I ask unanimous consent that they may extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman include all Members who desire to extend their remarks?

Mr. BALDWIN. Certainly; all Members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, we are here to pay tribute to the late Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, Prince JONAH KUHIO KALANIANAOLE, and I feel highly honored in that the privilege falls to me of briefly outlining incidents and achievements in his career.

He was born on the island of Kauai, Hawaiian Islands, on March 26, 1871. His father, Kahalepouli, was a high chief and the son of the last King of Kauai; his mother was Princess Kinoiki Kekaulike, sister of Queen Kapiolani, consort of King Kalakaua. His boyhood was very different from that usual to an American. As a member of the royal family he was brought up in the court of his uncle, the King, and took part in all official functions and receptions at the palace. At the age of 13 he was created a prince by royal proclamation. His early education was in Honolulu at the Royal School and Punahou College. He then spent four years at St. Mathews College of California. Later he was a student at the Royal Agricultural College in England, winding up his education in a business college there. At the conclusion of his college days he spent a year as the guest of the Japanese Government, his uncle, King Kalakaua, hoping that he would marry a princess of the royal house of Japan.

Although he grew up to early manhood as one of the royal family, with the probability ever before him that he would some day be the King of the Hawaiian Islands, he was democratic by nature, taking part in all athletic sports and excelling in football and rowing. He was an expert horseman and there was nothing he enjoyed more keenly than going with the cowboys after wild cattle and horses on the rugged slopes of Mauna Kea, or spearing wild boars from the back of a horse. He was a polo player of no mean ability. He also was fond of yachting and game fishing—sports which he enjoyed almost to the day of his death.

An excellent marksman with either rifle or shotgun, he was a welcome member of shooting parties. Golf was also a favorite pastime—in fact he was an all-around sportsman.

After his return to Hawaii from Japan he took a position in the Department of the Interior of the Hawaiian Government in order to obtain practical experience. In this position he made a good record for industry and efficiency.

Of royal lineage and a probable future king, his outlook on life and his prospects were brought to an abrupt change by the overthrow of the Hawaiian monarchy in 1893, when the Republic of Hawaii was established.

The young prince was then 21 years of age. Two years later there was a revolution of the Hawaiians, with the object of reinstating the ex-Queen, and Prince Kuhio, true to his beliefs, took part in this revolution. For this he and other leaders were arrested as political prisoners and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. While he was in prison he became engaged to a young chiefess whom many of you know as his gracious princess wife. They were married soon after his release and left shortly for a tour of the world, among other places visiting Africa, where he hunted big game. He was there during the Boer War and took part on the side of the British.

He returned to his island home in the fall of 1901, and in 1902, after urgent persuasion, became the Republican candidate for delegate to Congress and was in that year elected for his first term. I was a member of the convention which nominated him and can bear witness to his great reluctance to enter the field, for he believed he could do more for his people at home than he could 5,000 miles away here in Washington.

Characteristically, after having made up his mind as to his path of duty, he never swerved, and was elected to Congress for 10 consecutive terms notwithstanding that he continued at the head of his party's ticket at great personal sacrifice. In all of these elections he was loyally supported by the great majority of the white residents of Hawaii, as well as his own people. During the 19 years of his membership of this body, always uppermost in his mind was the welfare and prosperity of his constituency and especially that of his own people. I do not wish to convey the idea by this that he was not in every sense of the word an American, for he was, unqualifiedly. He lost no opportunity to preach the doctrines of Americanism to his people and to impress upon them their great good fortune in being citizens of the United States, the greatest country in the world. To illustrate his loyalty to the stars and stripes, I quote from a speech he made on the floor of this House June 23, 1917, when he spoke of the death of several Hawaiian boys drowned when the steamer Aztec was torpedoed by a German submarine. He said: "Two thousand and odd miles out in the Pacific are the islands that constitute the Territory of Hawaii. Our fame for a beautiful, wonderful country is world wide; but Hawaii is more than a playground, a retreat for tourists; it is the western frontier of our Republic. We Hawaiians guard the western doorway. While Hawaii stands, our coast line from Alaska down the long stretch to the Panama Canal Zone is safe from successful invasion or attack." This shows the man—a loyal 100 per cent American.

A pure-blooded Hawaiian, a member of a diminishing race, it was natural and greatly to his credit that he devoted much serious thought and energy to their rehabilitation—it was a work of love on his part. He saw the tendency of his people to flock to the larger cities where their life in crowded tenements, learning the vices of the white man, was leading to racial extinction, and he devoted himself to getting them back to the land. His efforts in this line culminated in the passage in 1921 by this Congress of the Hawaiian Homes Commission act, a measure to provide homesteads for native Hawaiians for an indefinite term at a nominal rental and for government loans to the settlers. The Prince was made one of the commissioners and took great interest in the practical carrying out of his dream. At his death his wife, the Princess, was appointed to his place on the commission. The project is in good hands; Mr. George Cooke, a close friend of the Prince, is the executive head and the prospects are that it will work out successfully and the hopes of the Prince will be realized. A few days before his death, when he knew that he could not live long, he remarked to one of his most intimate friends, a Hawaiian:

> John, I hope you boys will stick together and try to agree to the best of your ability to meet this most important problem—the rehabilitation of our race.

Although it was known that Prince Cupid, as we loved to call him, was seriously ill, his death came a year ago to-day as a grievous shock to his host of friends in Hawaii.

His death was as he wished it to be—in his beautiful home at Waikiki and among his home friends. To quote from a Honolulu newspaper the day after he breathed his last:

> At Pualeilani through the night of vigil, while the Prince was sitting in his armchair, himself knowing that death could not long be barred from entrance to his chamber, he sat with his face toward the open door facing Kalakaua Avenue, his lessening vision drinking in deeply of the green verdure across the way in what was formerly the great acres of his aunt the Queen Dowager Kaplolani, in whose home he had spent so many happy days of his boyhood and young manhood. Sitting by his side was Princess Kalanianaole. She held his hand closely. The Prince smiled often as his eyes met those of his sweetheart Princess and he appeared to be hoping that her last view of him would be a memory of him still smiling.

He was the last titular prince of his line and his funeral was the last royal funeral that will be held in Hawaii. He was buried with all the pomp and pageantry of ancient Hawaiian royalty in the royal mausoleum. Officials of our own and foreign Governments were present in their official capacities and throngs of friends of all nationalities came to pay the last tribute to the departed.

The beautiful silver mounted koa casket was placed in a catafalque and drawn by 200 stalwart Hawaiians from the former palace to his last resting place, a distance of over a mile. In the funeral procession the Army was represented by a considerable section, departments of Government, organizations of various kinds, schools, and thousands of friends and admirers all marched in the procession. The services at the palace and at the mausoleum were indeed impressive and will dwell in the memory of those who witnessed it until death shall have claimed them also.

Prince KALANIANAOLE was a prince indeed—a prince of good fellows and a man among men; a man of sterling sincerity and strong convictions—he always stood for what he deemed right—yielding to no weakness, and manly always.

He will long be mourned in his native land where a plan is now under way to build a monument as a memorial to him that will go down to the ages—a great and beautiful stadium, crowned by a statue of the Prince to be known as the "Kuhio Stadium."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, Prince Cupid, as his friends loved to call him, was a prince by nature as well as by royal proclamation. He entered this House as the Representative of the Territory of Hawaii in the Fifty-eighth Congress. It was my good fortune to become acquainted with him at that time. Early in my service here I visited Hawaii. At that time I became better acquainted with the Prince and with the people whom he loved and so well represented here. The Representative of Hawaii [Mr. BALDWIN], who has just spoken so eloquently of the life and character of JONAH KUHIO KALANIANAOLE, has referred somewhat to the chief ambition of KALANIANAOLE as the representative of his people. While in Hawaii visiting the different islands making up that Territory the Prince never failed of an opportunity to impress upon his native people the importance of maintaining their race and of establishing and maintaining homes of their own. His ambition was the passage of the bill to which the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. BALDWIN] has referred.

The passage of that bill was a realization of his great ambition in entering this House. His purpose was to perpetuate as long as possible the vanishing race of the Hawaiians. They were a great people. When Napoleon was thundering across the continent of Europe, Kamehameha I, the first king of the Hawaiians, a soldier and a statesman, was organizing the kingdom of Hawaii. He united all the islands of that splendid group and created a monarchy that was known and recognized throughout the world and had representatives in and diplomatic representatives from the Governments of the world. No monarchy in Europe failed of having a representative at the court of Honolulu. Honolulu and the monarchy of Hawaii had representatives in every kingdom and country of the world. The decisions of the admiralty court of Hawaii were recognized and commented upon and quoted by the admiralty courts of every other country. The Hawaiians were not, as they have sometimes been represented to be, a meager and inferior people. They were a great people, great in statesmanship, great in war, and great in their social life. It is doubtful if any man of that time made a greater impression than Kamehameha I. He typified the Hawaiians. Some time during the early part of his reign some French soldiers visited the islands and taught Hawaiians how to distil liquor. Up to that time distilled intoxicating liquors had never been introduced into the islands or known to the island people. Upon one convocation of the chiefs of Hawaii Kamehameha himself partook too freely of the beverage that had been distilled. He did not appear at that convocation of the chiefs whom he had assembled as the dignified and imposing chieftain that he was by nature. Soon after that he ordered the construction of a new building in which he assembled all the chiefs of Hawaii and all the officials in authority, and there made proclamation that from that day and forever in the Kingdom of Hawaii there should not be a still or distilled liquor; and during his entire reign as the monarch of Hawaii that proclamation was enforced.

That was characteristic of Kamehameha, and is an exemplification of the characteristics of the Hawaiian people. They have always had high purpose and they lived up to that purpose. One of the sad things to-day is that this race is diminishing. The diminution of the race gave Prince Cupid many hours of anxiety. They are a splendid people, who love music and flowers, who live in a land of unusual beauty and of incomparable climate; a people who are hospitable to a fault, and who have made themselves known to every traveler who has crossed the Pacific, and made a favorable impression upon every one who has visited that splendid territory. They have a fault, they give while they have anything to give. The desire to possess anything that belongs to a Hawaiian is a command to the Hawaiian that he give it, and he does so. It is in this way that they have given up their lands, that they have given up their territory, that they have given up that which was theirs, while those who have come to their islands are possessing the most delightful spot in the Pacific and one of the most cherished parts of our great of all beloved country.

Prince Cupid, in his address in 1917 on this floor, declared the truth that Hawaii is an outpost in the Pacific that stands guard of this great Republic and its western coast. Those who have known Prince Cupid love his memory and his people—Hawaiians. He was a true and a noble son of a splendid race.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, we are met to-day to commemorate the life and public services of the late Delegate from the Territory of Hawaii, the Hon. JONAH KUHIO KALANIANAOLE.

Often we meet thus to memorialize the passing of a friend and colleague, and at no time so much as on these occasions do we feel the utter futility of words, the paucity of speech that makes it impossible to speak adequately of the departed. Particularly do I feel so on this occasion.

The departed held a place in the heart of the Congress that was peculiarly his own and it can never again be filled by another. And he holds a place in the history of Hawaii that no other man has ever held and very likely no one will ever share it with him.

A Royal Prince of Hawaii, a Delegate to the American Congress, a patriotic Christian gentleman, a kindly, generous, patient friend is gone. He was the only prince of royal blood who ever served in the American Congress. Had the Territory of Hawaii remained a kingdom he would at the time of his death have been king. Yet there was no one more intensely American, and his greatest and oft expressed pride was his American citizenship. He sincerely believed in the American system of government. He would not have permitted the return to monarchial government under any circumstances, and I firmly believe were a monarchy reestablished he would have gone forth among his own people as a knight in his vigil at arms and led them forth to overthrow the monarchy and reestablish Hawaii as an American Territory in order that he and they might regain the knighthood of American citizenship.

In the early days following the American annexation and administration of the islands there was bitter feeling among the native Hawaiian people. Their lands had been confiscated even before annexation and they had been badly treated in many ways. Prince Kuhio was thrown in jail, where he remained a year.

The first delegate was Hon. Robert Wilcox. He was elected by the Home Rule party, a party peculiar to the Territory itself.

The Prince went forth among his people in all of the islands upon his release from prison, argued, pleaded with them, and persuaded them that the proper course for them to pursue was to accept American annexation, become good and loyal American citizens, and make the Territory of Hawaii an American Territory in the highest sense and a respected and favored part of the American Nation. No other person would have succeeded in this effort as he did. He was a polished orator, beloved by his people, and one of the reasons that so many of the native Hawaiians at that time objected to their new situation was because they wanted him for their future king. He preached the gospel of American citizenship and Republicanism and taught them the precepts of our form of government. His mission was wholly successful.

The following year he was drafted, against his will, and elected Delegate to Congress on the National Republican ticket. He served continuously until his death. Had he lived to complete his term of office he would have rounded out 20 years' service, and that was his ambition. He had built a beautiful home in the Territory to which he had planned to retire and devote the remainder of his days to the promotion of the happiness, welfare, and advancement of his own people.

I shall not dwell on the intimate features of his life and history. Others here are better qualified than I to touch on that. I want primarily to speak of his service as a Delegate. I have been a member of the Committee on Territories during my entire career in the Congress, and for the past four years I have been the chairman of that committee. Accordingly I have been closely associated with the Delegate from the Territory of Hawaii, for it is this Committee that deals with legislation affecting the Territory.

From a military outpost of the Pacific in the early days of American occupation, the Territory of Hawaii has become in a brief span of years the Paradise of the Pacific, the mecca of the tourist, the playground of the Nation, where the hospitality of the people is so much a part of their nature that the very mention of the Territory makes the heart of the continental American who has been so fortunate as to visit there glow with pleasure. But above and beyond this it has become one of the great commercial assets of the Nation, richer by far than many of our States.

This phenomenal development has been due in very great measure to Prince Kuhio, for it was he who persuaded the people to accept gladly their American citizenship and to work whole-heartedly and enthusiasticaly for the development of the Territory as an integral part of the American Union. And it was he who sponsored the legislation that made this development possible and certain.

The greatest single thing that he did for his own people, aside from inducing them to willingly accept American citizenship, was in sponsoring and passing through the Congress the act creating the Hawaiian Homes Commission. The Hawaiian race is a dying race, because they had been driven from their lands by settlers from overseas and were of necessity compelled to adjust themselves to unaccustomed occupations and habits of life. The Hawaiian Homes Commission act returned in part these lands to their rightful owners and provided the machinery to finance the Hawaiian people in settling on them. It is hoped and believed this will make possible the rehabilitation of the race.

I recall the day in my office when Delegate KALANIANAOLE first broached this subject how delighted he was when I told him I would favor the legislation. I recall the committee meeting when this legislation was under consideration, when, past midnight, the project had been under attack, he left his place at the committee table, and standing by my side, his voice aquiver with emotion, his head held high, proudly, he spoke of his race, of their valor and their high honor, of their almost child-like faith in their fellow men, of their kindliness and their generosity, of their intense Americanism.

He pleaded that the act be passed in order that a grave injustice might be rectified even at that late date. I never heard a man speak more sincerely or with greater feeling. When he had concluded his plea the committee was unanimously in favor of the project. When the commission was created he was named a member by the governor, and he had planned to retire from Congress at the end of this Congress and devote the remainder of his days to this great work.

Upon his death his widow was appointed to fill the vacancy on the commission. It is her purpose to carry out his well conceived and carefully outlined plans of this great work, with the details of which she is very familiar.

It is futile in the brief time alloted to go into the details of his legislative record. It was a record filled with high achievement over a long period. Suffice to mention what I believe to be his stellar achievements. First the Americanization of the Hawaiian people, his great services in developing the magnificent resources of the Territory, and his efforts to rehabilitate his race and correct the grave injustice that had been done the Hawaiian people in the early days following annexation.

On account of his lovable nature he was given the sobriquet of Prince Cupid by his first teacher. It was a term of affection they applied to him all through his childhood, and he came to be known by all of his intimates by that name. It was well applied to him, for he was, indeed, the Cupid who similingly pierced the hearts of America and Hawaii with his arrow and welded them together so firmly that they can now never be separated, and this is for the mutual welfare and happiness of both.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Territories I had the privilege of serving for a short time with the deceased Delegate, and to me nothing has occurred since I have been in the House that has appealed to me as more pathetic than the passing of KALANIANAOLE, as has been said, the last representative of a royal family, and a dying race.

The present city of Tupelo, Miss., where I live, is situated almost on the identical site of the ancient capital of the Chickasaw Nation, the most enlightened, the most highly civilized, and the most friendly, so far as the English speaking race is concerned, of all the Indian tribes of America. They maintained their territorial integrity and the respect of their neighbors to such an extent that adjoining tribes would refuse to go to war without the consent of the Chickasaws. In their fight with the Spaniards about 1540, they overwhelmingly defeated De Soto and his men, in one of the first, if not the first, pitched battles between the white people and the Indians on American soil. They did not provoke the battle, which was forced upon them by the Spaniards, but when hostilities began, they defended their homes with a valor and determination that would have done justice to the legions of ancient Rome.

Two hundred years later they resisted and disastrously defeated the French under Bienville and again saved themselves from subjugation at the hands of a ruthless enemy. But they were never known to draw the blood of an English speaking white man. In the War of 1812, they were instrumental in preventing all the tribes of that country, including the powerful Choctaws, from yielding to the persuasions of Tecumseh and going to war on the side of the British Empire, and in that way possiby saved to the United States the lower Mississippi Valley.

Andrew Jackson and his army marched through hundreds of miles of their territory, and passed right through the Chickasaw capital, on their way to New Orleans, where they were warmly welcomed by all the Indians of the Chickasaw Tribe.

But when the time came for the white man to migrate to the beautiful country of the Chickasaws—a country rich in resources, as Grady once said, with "a gentle climate above a fertile soil that yielded to the husbandman every product of the temperate zone," a land traversed by beautiful streams, with rolling plains and vast fertile prairies, the cupidity of the white man overcame his better attributes, and he could not resist the temptation to take that which belonged to another, and deprive the Chickasaws of their lands. As a result, a great people practically disappeared. Unable to resist the white man, whom they had befriended, in his insatiable greed for territory, the Chickasaws at last gave way before the pressure, extinguished their camp fires, and moved away toward the glow of the setting sun, to become a memory, to live thereafter in the traditions of their destroyers.

Sinister annihilation of a primitive civilization! Implacable destruction of a human race!

I have often thought that there is a striking analogy between the history of the Chickasaws, and that of the Hawaiians. Of all the people discovered in the New World, none were more friendly, none more free from immorality, none further from oppression and all of the evil traits that characterized a great many primitive tribes than were the people of Hawaii. They were brave and generous, especially in their treatment of the white man.

Unfortunately we have not been as generous toward them as they were toward us. When the white man first invaded Hawaii the population of those islands amounted to possibly a half million of people. To-day they have dwindled to a population of less than 44,000, including all those who have in their veins a trace of Hawaiian blood.

As I say, I served on the committee with Prince KALANIANAOLE, and I witnessed his fight; I participated in it, and supported him in his efforts to stay the hand of destruction that is threatening the last remnant of his race by the passage of that bill which has been referred to to-day in the interest of the homes of Hawaiians. He was the last of his royal blood, and possibly one of the last, if not the last, representative of his race who will ever occupy a seat in this Chamber. I was bound to admire the fight that he made, and I thought when I learned of his death that he had set an example which ought to be a beacon light to the Hawaiian people in what I sometimes fear to be the dark night that stretches out before them. Certainly the American people, the white people of America, could not do better than to take a lesson from and heed the examples set by the services here of this man KALANIANAOLE.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and Colleagues: My services in the House of Representatives will afford no dearer memories than those connected with my friendship and association with Prince J. KUHIO KALANIANAOLE. While my acquaintance with the Prince was confined to the last five years of his life, there were many pleasant meetings and conversations between us during that period of time.

I visited the Hawaiian Islands in 1917, with the congressional party, and there learned to know the Prince at his best, where he was among his own people and on the soil that he loved so dearly. Prince KALANIANAOLE was a member of the royal family of Hawaii, and had the monarchy continued would have worn the crown. Notwithstanding his high position among his people, he was never anything but democratic and cordial with everyone he liked. An analysis of the character of our lamented friend and colleague necessarily leads us to inquire into the history and characteristics of the people to whom he belonged and whom he represented so faithfully and conscientiously in this body for 20 years.

It was estimated that at the time Captain Cook discovered the Hawaiian Islands, then known as the Sandwich Islands, there were 400,000 pure-blooded Hawaiians on the eight islands. The most vicious habits of civilization were then introduced to the good natured, friendly, tropical natives. Intoxicating liquors and diseases were introduced with deadly effect upon a healthy race who had little power of resistance.

When the missionaries went to the Hawaiian Islands in 1818 the ravages of these scourges brought by the Europeans were alarming. Since that date the encroachment of hardier races of people has slowly driven the Hawaiian from his natural way of living and he has not been able to adapt himself to his new surroundings. The Japanese and other races, more inured to hardship and strife have gradually taken the places of the Hawaiians in almost every field of endeavor and to-day there are but a few thousand pure-blooded Hawaiians on the islands and a surprising small number of mixed Hawaiian blood.

When annexation took place the Crown lands became a part of the public domain of the United States, and much of it was leased for sugar and pineapple growing. Much of the best land was already in private hands. Hawaiians who really were fitted for agriculture and who desired to engage in it found it difficult to find a suitable site. The life efforts of our deceased colleague were spent in trying to secure allotments of land in small plots for the use of his people. It became the passion of his life, and he unselfishly devoted the better part of his years to this task. How well he would have succeeded in actually getting his people in possession of the land if his life had been spared we can not say, but we do know that the Hawaiian people have had no more faithful or devoted contender for their rights and for better opportunities for them than our beloved friend, who for so many years urged upon Congress the necessity and duty of better providing for the protection of this race of splendid people who are fast passing away.

The Hawaiian, from our first knowledge of him, possessed the sunny-hearted languor and indifference of the tropics. The blue skies, the colorful waters, gorgeous vegetation, and unequaled scenic beauty had impressed themselves upon his character to the extent that he was a dreamer, filled with a sense of real appreciation of the beauties and bountifulness of nature. He was of a peaceful and deeply religious character. The overshadowing and overwhelming influence of the volcanic disturbances of the islands had also left their deep impressions. The Prince possessed the highest and noblest traits of the character of this wonderful race of people. He was loyal to a friend with the same degree of loyalty and devotion that he showed for his people. There was no guile in his heart. His friendship once given, there were no mental reservations; generous to a fault, he was often imposed upon by the unworthy. Grateful himself for the blessings of life, which he enjoyed so much, he loved to see gratitude show in the faces of those who shared his generosity. No one who has ever associated with him could but be impressed with his devotion and faithfulness to his wife, who survives him, and I have often heard his friends pay glowing tribute to his singlehearted and intense devotion, loyalty, and love to the princess, who was truly a fitting companion for our beloved friend.

My memories of Waikiki will always include as its brightest spot the beautiful home of love and joy amidst the palms and tropical verdure which our Prince loved with all the intensity of his loving disposition. The Pacific with its wonderful panorama of changing colors, Diamond Head, The Punch Bowl and The Needle with their majesty and beauty of form and verdure, the clouds unexcelled in form and color, all may still charm and enthrall the admirer, but without the cheerful greeting and the warm handclasp of our genial friend that Little Paradise on the Pacific, to me, can never be the same. Mr. Speaker, with the passing of Prince KALANIANAOLE has gone forever one of the most splendid men of a splendid race. Shorn of the power and prestige that was his by birth, he uncomplainingly made the most of his life for himself and those he loved. His efforts were not in vain, because those who knew him and knew how he personified the best characteristics of his race hold everlasting regard and respect for the Hawaiian people. After annexation the Prince was a loyal and true American. He had respect and reverence for our Government and its people, and tried at all times to make his people feel that American ideals were worthy of emulation. Let us hope, my colleagues, as his remains rest to-day in the royal sarcophagus in the beautiful Nuuanu valley that his spirit has been gathered into the arms of the God of his people and that there he enjoys eternal bliss with the immortal ones of his race who have with him lived up to the highest standards of Hawaiian traditions.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker: I can not permit this occasion to pass without offering a few words in commemoration of the life and character of our departed friend and colleague, J. KUHIO KALANIANAOLE.

It was my good fortune, soon after entering Congress, to meet and become well acquainted with him. He had represented the Territory of Hawaii here for a number of years, in fact, almost from the time the Hawaiian Territory became a part of the United States of America. He belonged to the Hawaiian race, and was created Prince in 1884, and would have succeeded to the throne of that Government had the Territory not become a part of the United States. He was a Delegate from the Territory for nearly 20 years, and during this time was ever interested and alert in everything which pertained to the prosperity and development of the Hawaiian Islands.

He was exceedingly modest, quiet, unassuming, and gentle in his work and in his relations with all men; but he was ever watchful and persistent in his efforts for his Territory and for his people.

As a Delegate from the Territory he was not permitted to cast a vote on any question in the House of Representatives, yet he wielded a wonderful influence here in obtaining needed legislation for his people.

While the Territory he represented is separated by many miles from the mainland of the United States, and while the Territory has but recently become a part of the United States, our departed friend, by his devotion to and deep interest in his people, through his long service here, was enabled to create a deep interest in the Congress in this Territory and in its development.

It was largely through his influence that high officials of the Government and Members of both branches of Congress visited these beautiful islands, and no one has returned from visiting this Territory without loud and enthusiastic praise of these islands and of this people.

We have read and heard all manner of things and reports about the beauties and wonders of these islands, but no one has ever yet been able to properly describe or portray the sublime beauty and grandeur to be found there. One can only know by visiting and seeing, and when one has visited and seen this delightful country he is overcome not only by the beauty and grandeur of the surroundings but by the wonderful reception of this wonderful people.

Prince KALANIANAOLE was a real and true representative of his race. He lived, labored and died, earnestly striving in every way within his power to educate, elevate, and perpetuate his race. One of the last acts of his public career, in fact one of the last acts of his life, was to secure the passage through Congress of what is known as the "Rehabilitation and Colonization of the Hawaiians in the Hawaiian Territory."

Just before he returned to his home the last time, in a talk with him on this floor, he told me of his plans to quit his work as Representative of his people in the Congress of the United States. He told me he hoped to devote his entire energies during the remainder of his life in the upbuilding of his race. He soon returned to the islands, but his work had been done, and he has left to others the high responsibility to carry on the great work he had so well begun.

Prince KALANIANAOLE had the esteem, respect and confidence of every Member of the House. To know him was to love him, and I believe no man ever more fully earned or more fully received the complete confidence of his people.

After nearly 20 years of faithful service as representative of his Territory in the Congress of the United States, and after devoting his life in the interest and for the benefit of his people, he returned to the beautiful Islands of the Sea, where he had spent so many happy days; and there he will forever rest among his people he loved so well.

His life was so gentle, so honest and pure; his character so good, so generous and true; his deeds, so kindly, so honorable and just; that the whole world can truly say of him, "This was a man."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, in our journey through this life we form friendships that remain unbroken until severed by the ruthless hand of death. Soon after coming to Washington to take my seat in the Sixty-fifth Congress it was my good fortune to meet the late J. KUHIO KALANIANAOLE, the Delegate from Hawaii, whose untimely death we are commemorating to-day, and we then formed a friendship that continued until he set out on his journey of exploration into "that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns." I was particularly attracted by his innate courtesy, affability, and good nature. He was truly a gentleman in every sense of the word. Never have I seen him ruffled or perturbed. Passing tempests interested him not at all, and he was oblivious to the wrangles and quarrels that sometimes attend the sittings of this body. His was a lofty and noble nature that was all the more charming by reason of his modesty and diffidence. That the people of Hawaii understood and appreciated his good qualities is best attested by the fact that he was for 10 consecutive terms elected to Congress as Delegate from that Territory, and we, who were his colleagues, know with what fidelity and sincerity he served them. He loved his people in a way that only a noble character such as his is capable of. Had the old Hawaiian monarchy been maintained he would have become king of the islands upon the death of his cousin, Queen Liliuokalani, but never once have I heard him express regret over the turn of the wheel of fortune which took from him his royal inheritance. He was not given to speaking of the days when his family ruled over the fortunes of the Hawaiian people. To him it was a closed chapter, and he had but the kindliest feelings toward the great American people. In fact he was one of us in spirit and in deed, and in his passing we lost a friend and colleague who was as gentle and constant as the limpid waters of the mighty ocean that playfully kisses the shores of the land which he loved and venerated—Hawaii. Farewell, friend and colleague, until we meet again.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I would be untrue to myself if I failed to take advantage of this occasion to pay tribute to one whom I was proud to call my friend.

I became acquainted with Prince KALANIANAOLE soon after his election to the Fifty-eighth Congress, and that acquaintance fast ripened into lasting friendship. I knew him well and esteemed him highly. On all occasions and under all conditions he was a courteous, affable, genial gentleman—a gentleman of very high character.

He was devoted to his island home and never for a moment neglected to serve the best interest of his constituents. I can not express my appreciation of the splendid qualities of Prince KALANIANAOLE better than to incorporate in my remarks, with hearty approval, an address delivered in this city on March 27, 1922, by my colleague and friend, Hon. WILLIAM A. RODENBERG, in which he said:

Through the thoughtful courtesy of Mr. Walter F. Dillingham, of Honolulu, we are to be accorded the rare privilege to-night of having reproduced on the screen the picturesque ceremonies incident to the funeral of the late Prince JONAH KUHIO KALANIANAOLE, who for almost twenty years was the Delegate in Congress from the Territory of Hawaii. I have been requested by Mr. Dillingham to make a few remarks regarding the life and character of the Prince before the picture is thrown upon the screen.

Prince Kuhio, or Prince "Cupid," as he was familiarly known to his legion of friends, was born on the Island of Kauai on March 26, 1871. He was educated in Honolulu, the United States, and England. He was a cousin of the late King Kalakaua and Queen Liliuokalani and was a nephew of Queen Kapiolani, who was the consort of Kalakaua. At the age of 13 he was created a prince by royal proclamation, and in the absence of annexation he would have succeeded to the throne and would have become King of Hawaii upon the death of Queen Liliuokalani.

On the 7th of January of this year, at his home on beautiful Waikiki, whose shores are forever kissed by the murmuring waters of the mighty Pacific, his kind and gentle soul took its flight to God.

The funeral ceremonies lasted an entire week. When he realized that the end was approaching the prince, who was the very soul of modesty and simplicity and who desired to spare his wife a most trying ordeal, requested that his funeral be simple and free of all pomp and ostentation and in this he was joined by his beloved and devoted wife. But the native Hawaiians who are among the most affectionate and sentimental of peoples and who fairly idolized the prince insisted that full regal honors conforming to the ancient historical customs of Hawaii be paid to the last and by far the most popular member of the royal family. Owing to their insistence the princess finally consented with much reluctance and in accordance with the custom that is always invoked at the burial of Hawaiian monarchs, the body of the prince was removed at midnight from his home to the principal native church. There it lay in state for one week constantly attended by a guard which was changed every 30 minutes. At midnight, on January 14, one week after his death the body was removed to the old throne room of the palace, where it lay in state on the very spot where he had knelt as a boy when he was created a royal prince of the realm.

At high noon on the following day, January 15, he was removed to the mausoleum of the Kalakauas, where he now sleeps the sleep of eternity awaiting the dawn of resurrection's morn.

No death in all the annals of Hawaii's touching and pathetic history caused more profound sorrow or called forth more expressions of deep and genuine regret than did that of Prince KALANIANAOLE. The entire population without regard to creed, color, or nationality united in doing honor to the memory of a brave and manly man who unselfishly consecrated his life to the upbuilding of his beloved and devoted people.

The Army furnished a military escort appropriate to a general and the Navy furnished an escort similar to that at the burial of an admiral. Guns were fired from Punchbowl at intervals of one minute during the time that the body was being transferred from the palace to the cemetery. Every member of the Government, Territorial, county, and municipal, executive, legislative, and judicial, voiced his grief by taking an active personal part in the ceremonies. And well they might.

I was perhaps as intimately acquainted with the Prince as any man who served with him in Congress. I have visited Hawaii on three different occasions and I first met him while on a visit to Hawaii 22 years ago. That acquaintance was renewed when the Prince became a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress. Instinctively attracted by a personality that radiated sincerity and good fellowship, I soon formed an attachment for him that ripened into one of the warmest friendships of my entire congressional career. To-night, as I recall that intimacy of two full decades unmarred by a single unpleasant incident, I feel myself again under the spell of that kindly, genial smile; I feel again the hearty, sincere handclasp; I hear again the cheery word of greeting, "Aloha." Methinks I can see him now, erect, courteous, chivalrous, unaffected—one of God's noblemen.

My friends, it is not given to mortal man to comprehend the mysteries of life and death. We can not quite understand a dispensation that removes from the activities of life one who was in the very prime of vigorous manhood and at the zenith of his intellectual powers, with years of usefulness still stretching out before him. With a faith that has its foundation in our belief in the immortality of the soul we bow to the Divine Will and accept the decree. It is this sublime and sustaining faith, a faith that "rises triumphant o'er our fears," that dispels the mists of gloom and unfolds to our enraptured gaze the glories of the coming dawn. For him the great mystery has been solved and the future stands revealed.

"After life's fitful fever he sleeps well."

Knowing him as I knew him, I know that death had no terrors for him. I know that he approached the end calmly, unflinchingly, majestically. He lived and died a prince and a gentleman, and in the memory of his many noble deeds nobly done he has reared for himself a monument that will endure so long as sentiment abides in the hearts of men.

At this point the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. BALDWIN] took the chair.

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr Speaker, the news of the death of Prince KALANIANAOLE in his beloved island home, which occurred one year ago to-day, was a distinct shock to official Washington, where he commanded the full confidence and respect of all with whom he came in contact during his distinguished service of almost twenty years as the Delegate from Hawaii. It is fitting and proper that on this anniversary of his untimely passing we should pay tribute to his many noble qualities of head and heart.

Almost twenty-two years have passed since my first visit to the Hawaiian Islands, and it was on the occasion of that visit that I became acquainted with our departed friend and that acquaintance later on developed into one of the most pleasant friendships of my congressional career.

Prince KALANIANAOLE was an unusual man. There was much of the magnetic about him. He possessed a kindliness and a courtliness that instinctively attracted people to him and made him a most welcome guest at every gathering. While his was the philosophy of optimism and he always looked with confidence toward the future, still it seemed to me that there was ever present the element of pathos in his fine character.

The tragic story of his beloved Hawaii had left its impress upon him and there were times when he appeared to me as the last surviving hope of the gentle race that is now so rapidly vanishing. He seemed to be the living embodiment of all their aspirations and desires. Earnestly and passionately he pleaded the cause of the Hawaiians and pressed for the recognition of their just demands. When finally he succeeded in securing the passage of an act having for its purpose the rehabilitation of Hawaii and giving to his people the opportunity to acquire small parcels of land in order to make themselves self-supporting, he felt that the one great mission of his public career had been accomplished. I recall a conversation I had with him shortly thereafter in which he informed me that it was his purpose to retire from Congress and to devote the remainder of his life to putting into force and effect the provisions of the rehabilitation act for which he had labored so diligently and which he felt meant so much for the future happiness of his people. No man ever served a constituency with more zeal or greater fidelity than did PRINCE KALANIANAOLE. His affection for Hawaii and the Hawaiians was pathetic in its intensity and that affection was returned in kind by the people whom he served. The Prince was the idol of his race. He lived and had his being in the hearts of his constituents. They looked upon him as their one never-failing friend, the protector of their rights, the beacon light of their hopes and expectations. I remember making a tour of the islands some twelve years ago in company with our departed friend, and I recall vividly the joyful demonstrations of genuine affection which greeted him on every hand. I remember, too, the kindly, cordial sympathy of his attitude toward his people.

The humblest Hawaiian living in an obscure, weather-beaten hut was given a fervent aloha! by the Prince, and the sincerity of his greeting brought tears of joy to the eyes of his devoted followers. It was a scene that I shall never forget, but having witnessed it, I could readily understand the secret of their deep and abiding faith in him.

Prince KALANIANAOLE was a gentleman of culture and education. As a young man he enjoyed the advantages of a thorough collegiate training, which was later on supplemented by extensive travels. He had visited every civilized country on the globe and had even penetrated into the wilds of Africa in search of big game. His experiences were varied and interesting but, because of his innate modesty, it was always a most difficult matter to persuade him to discuss any incident in which he figured with any degree of prominence. As an instance of this, I remember asking him on one occasion, while being entertained in his hospitable home on beautiful Waikiki, which was decorated with many trophies of the chase, if there were a story connected with a magnificently mounted head of a gigantic animal of the buffalo species which adorned the wall. After considerable persuasion the Prince told me the story. While hunting in the interior of Africa in company with a Scotch nobleman, his companion slightly wounded the animal. Enraged, it charged the Scotchman and gored him savagely. Just as it was about to renew the attack, the Prince, who was an expert marksman, came to the rescue and killed the infuriated beast. The nobleman sent the head to Scotland, had it properly mounted, and presented it to his protector with grateful acknowledgments.

The Prince was the very soul of generosity. His philanthropies were many and sincere because they sprang from his boundless love for humanity. He was never known to turn a deaf ear to an appeal for aid and he was never quite so happy as when performing some kindly, humane act. In all the walks of life he practiced faith, hope, and charity which are the divine attributes of every manly heart. His tender solicitude for his beloved wife was in every way ideal and their devotion to each other presented a perfect picture of domestic happiness. With her hand lovingly and confidingly clasped in his, "calmly, as to a night's repose, like flowers at set of sun," his gentle soul left its tenement of clay to dwell amid the glories of the life everlasting. In beautiful Nuuanu valley amid the ferns and the flowers, beneath the stately palms, under the serene and shining stars of the "Paradise of the Pacific" he now sleeps the sleep of eternity. Peace to his ashes! Friend, colleague, and companion, Hail and farewell! Aloha! Aloha oe!

At this point Mr. RODENBERG resumed the chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in youth created a prince of the royal house by the King of the Sandwich Islands; in young manhood elected a Delegate to the House of Representatives, where he served for twenty years, it was a romantic transformation, and one that speaks for the influence of this Republic, and also for the man.

Here in the House we called him "Prince," not because of his former title, but because he was a prince of good fellows, and one of the most democratic members of the House. He also carried his democratic principles back to the old island kingdom, and spread that influence among his people. I have several times visited Hawaii, and I have seen this influence grow and develop, and I know of no representative who had a more loyal and affectionate constituency than had KALANIANAOLE.

I believe that the Prince of a former kingdom had a considerable part in holding the natives of Hawaii loyal to the jurisdiction of the United States and educating them in the ways of a government of the people by the people. He became a typical American, and as such we mourn his loss to the House. On my last visit to Hawaii I was entertained at the beautiful home of KALANIANAOLE, and it was a combination of the old and the new hospitality, of native simplicity and American culture, and as I saw the affectionate regard of the Hawaiians, not only for the host, but for his American guests, I felt assured that we had been wise and successful in gathering those beautiful islands and their peoples under the American flag. Peace to the "Prince."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, when Divine Providence removed from this world Prince KALANIANAOLE, He took a great and lovable man and one whose place can not be filled. Like all good and great men he made and retained the friendship of others of that type. One of them, former Representative Frank Reavis, of Nebraska, has paid to him a beautiful tribute, a tribute from his heart—not empty words, but an expression of future faith, containing the philosophy of the ages. Each one of us who reads it will be made a better man. He said:

Life is not its own justification. If all we do is just to live, so far as the ultimate scheme of things is concerned, we might as well not have lived at all. The accomplishments of life are the test, and the accomplishments which have an enduring value are those which add something to the sum total of human happiness and, in some measure, aid the race in its struggle onward toward its destiny. Life's justification lies in contribution, not acquirement. As between Christ and Croesus, I choose Christ.

Measured by this test, a successful life passed into the shadows when the prince died. Concerned always with the welfare of his gentle people whom he loved with a love that passeth understanding, he labored without tiring that they might obtain every legitimate benefit that legislation could afford. In the several years of my congressional service I recall no Member more zealous for those whom he represented than this democratic prince of the royal blood.

He became a Member of this body actuated by a desire to contribute to the high office and not because of any thought that the office would contribute to him. He consented to serve his people as Delegate because the position granted him an opportunity for such service, and was superemely indifferent to the thought that either in honor or emolument the office would serve him. He was representative of the highest character within the House in that his constant desire was to give something to the country, rather than to take something from it. His position on all Territorial legislation was the product of an earnest desire to do his part toward securing meritorious bills, and was never influenced nor persuaded by consulting the personal consequences of his official acts. In short, he labored always for his country and never, save in the higher and finer sense, for himself.

It had been recounted that the great ambition of his life met its fulfillment in the passage of the Hawaiian rehabilitation bill; and, feeling that his larger work in Congress was ended, he contemplated retiring to his beautiful island home to devote the remainder of his life to his fast vanishing race. But the fates which guard the destinies of men had decreed otherwise. Death and the prince had made a rendezvous, and death was punctual. We shall encounter this cultured gentleman upon this earth no more forever. Far out in the midst of a lonely waste of waters he sleeps in the arms of the land he loved and served so well.

There are those of us who knew him most intimately who are grateful that a merciful Providence has given to man the faculty of memory which robs the grave of its tenant and permits us to people the present with those whom we have loved and lost awhile.

Ah, Memory, the world would be lonely without you. When the road seems at an end, when the future is dark and foreboding, when grief and anguish and despair are our familiars, how stealthily you come creeping to us with the shadow of dreams in your eyes. How you speak to us in the loved tones of a voice that has long been silent. How you walk with us in the measured tread of familiar steps that have long been still. How you look upon us with the dear eyes from which the light has long since faded. How you create forms from shadows and illumine a dead past with a light that makes it a vivid and enduring present. Without you, O Memory, there would be no history, for there would be no past. Without you, children would look into the faces of parents and call them strangers, love would die from the hearts of the race, and the sons of men would walk a lonely earth without one familiar face in the universe of God.

I do not know what waits at the end of the road; but faith begins where knowledge ends, and I have faith. I do not know that empty arms will hold again the forms that have been lost in the shadows, but I hope and I believe. I do know that when I enter the little green gate I shall seek and shall be disconsolate until I find some men, some women, and many children.

And I think I shall search for you, my friend.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that the condition of my health did not permit my attending the session of the House of January 7, 1923, so that I could say a few words regarding our deceased colleague, Delegate JONAH K. KALANIANAOLE, of Hawaii.

Everyone who knew the "Prince," as he was popularly called, respected and honored him in his position. The people whom he represented in the Congress of the United States by electing him repeatedly as their Delegate showed the whole country in what esteem Mr. KALANIANAOLE was held by the citizens of Hawaii.

I visited the islands in the year 1911. At that time the Delegate felt that he did not care to continue in Congress. The statement was frequently made in Honolulu and other communities in the islands to the effect that the Delegate would not again be a candidate for reelection. Just about that time Mr. KALANIANAOLE had honored me by inviting me to attend a "luau," as they called their native feasts. About 50 of the leading citizens of the islands had been invited to be present. It was during this feast that I was called upon to make a few remarks regarding the Delegate. I told the guests very frankly that, in my opinion, they would do their Territory more good by the reelection of Mr. KALANIANAOLE than by the election of any new Delegate in his place. The proposition was immediately taken up by all those present, including some of the leading Democrats of Honolulu. Everybody voiced an opinion favorable to Mr. KALANIANAOLE. The consequence was that he decided to again become a candidate, to the delight of all his friends in the islands.

I did not always agree with the Delegate regarding legislation for the Territory of Hawaii. That was especially true regarding the matter of American shipping and the exclusion, under existing laws, of ships flying the flags of other countries. Happily, that legislation was never put into effect. The American ships running to the islands gradually increased in number and to-day represent a very efficient and effective force under the American flag.

I am happy to say that I was able repeatedly to help the Prince to get through legislation that his people really wanted. It was always a delight to talk over matters with him regarding various situations affecting the welfare of the islands.

He was, indeed, a very earnest and able advocate of those who had honored him by electing him as their Delegate to Congress.

At the announcement of his death the many Members who had become thoroughly acquainted with him during the 20 years of his service here expressed profound sorrow on the occasion of his passing.

We say in this place and at this time as a further mark of affection and respect, "Aloha!"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any other gentleman present who desires to make remarks? If not, in accordance with the resolution heretofore adopted, the House stands adjourned until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, January 8, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 8, 1923.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou art indeed good and gracious in all Thy dealings, and Thou art always ready to help us when crucial hours come and when anxiety presses. We ask that this day all shadows may be lifted and in the consciousness of Thine aid service may be rendered for the good of the country and to the glory of Thy name. In Jesus Christ we ask it. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PROPOSED CESSION OF CERTAIN WEST INDIA ISLANDS.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I gave notice that I would address the Senate on Wednesday next on the resolution which I offered regarding the West Indies. I ask unanimous consent that I may at the time of making the address display and place in front of the Vice President's desk certain maps where they may be seen by the Senate. I think the proceeding is a little out of the usual order and I thought I should ask permission of the Senate. The maps will be in the nature of an obstruction temporarily and I do not want to undertake to set them up without the permisssion of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. FRENCH, and Mr. CARTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

PROPOSED SUMMER WHITE HOUSE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary to the President of the United States, transmitting, at the direction of the President, a letter from the Safe Deposit & Trust Co., of Baltimore, Md., executors of the estate of J. Wilson Leakin, deceased, relating to his bequest of $200,000 to buy land and erect a summer White House for the use of the President within automobiling distance of Washington, such legacy being contingent upon acceptance by Congress within 18 months from the death of the testator, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented a resolution adopted by the Fifty-fifth State Convention of Fruit Growers and Farmers of California, favoring the enactment of legislation to increase water-transportation facilities and for the encouragement of American shipping interests, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the San Diego (Calif.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the passage of legislation providing for establishment of a minimum Regular Army of 150,000 enlisted men, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3328) for the relief of Almeda Lucas (Rept. No. 995); and

A bill (S. 3988) for the relief of the estate of Thomas N. Avery (Rept. No. 996).

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (for Mr. ERNST), from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4114) for the relief of Bertha N. Rich, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 997) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 4288) to grant the consent of Congress for the special commission constituted by an act of the Legislature of Massachusetts to construct a bridge across the Merrimack River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 4289) granting a pension to Ellen T. Coughlin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4290) granting a pension to Mary F. Spurling; and

A bill (S. 4291) granting a pension to Thomas Hopkins (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENDRICK:

A bill (S. 4292) granting a pension to Mary Jordan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 4293) granting a pension to John A. McNeil; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4294) for the relief of William F. Conlin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4295) for the relief of A. T. Marix; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 4296) for the relief of the estate of P. F. McCanna; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4297) granting an increase of pension to Emma G. Walker (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

FRANCIS E. BARNEY—WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent for the withdrawal of the papers filed with the Committee on Military Affairs on the bill (S. 1692) to correct the military record of Francis E. Barney, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DIESEL ENGINES ON SHIPPING BOARD VESSELS.

Mr. POMERENE. I send to the desk a resolution, and ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 400) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the following information:

First. How many ships belonging to the United States Shipping Board are now equipped with Diesel engines, and how many of said ships can be thus equipped.

Second. Give best estimate as to the reasonable cost of equipping said ships per ship and as a whole with the best type of Diesel engine, and the reasonable increase in the value and salability of said ships when thus equipped.

Third. Give the best estimate as to the reasonable increase in speed of said ships when thus equipped, and state the number of trips per year between United States Atlantic ports and European ports which can be made by said ships under present equipment and when equipped with Diesel engines.

Fourth. State the saving of fuel capacity and the cost of fuel in the operation of said ships thus equipped as compared with the fuel capacity and the cost of coal or oil used as fuel under the present type of equipment.

Fifth. State what would be the increase in the cargo capacity per ship caused by said change in equipment.

Sixth. What, if any, saving in crew or wage cost of operation would be occasioned by said change?

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator a question? As I heard the resolution, I think the Shipping Board would probably be justified in concluding that the Senator desires to have the facts stated with reference to each individual ship. If that is the case, it would take a great deal of time.

Mr. POMERENE. No; that is not the purpose of it. I have understood that the information can readily be presented. I do not expect exact information, as if we were entering into a contract, but I want the Senate to have the information in connection with the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. General information as to the advantages of the Diesel engine equipment, and so on?

Mr. POMERENE. That is it exactly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

RETIRED RANK OF MARINE CORPS STAFF HEADS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7864) providing for sundry matters affecting the Naval Establishment, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

TRUTH IN FABRIC.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 799) to prevent deceit and unfair prices that result from the unrevealed presence of substitutes for virgin wool in woven fabrics purporting to contain wool and in garments or articles of apparel made therefrom, manufactured in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or transported or intended to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce, and providing penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. LADD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13481, the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Strike out all after line 9, page 29, and insert the following:

"For the investigation and improvement of cereals, including corn, and methods of cereal production, and for the study and control of cereal diseases, including barberry eradication, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $772,505: Provided, That $500,000 shall be set aside for the location and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate and $350,000 of said sum shall be allotted for expenditure in the States affected, and that no additional sum shall be expended in any State until it has, through State or local appropriations or through contributions of organizations or individuals, provided an equal amount: Provided further, That $10,000 of the said sum of $500,000 may be expended for investigations concerning dust-resistant wheat."

REPORT OF INTERCHURCH WORLD MOVEMENT ON STEEL STRIKE.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type an article from today's New York Tribune, by Gilman Parker, which reviews a book just published by Marshall Olds on the report of the Interchurch World Movement on the steel strike. This book, I understand, entirely substantiates the Senate investigation of the steel strike and explains and exposes a new type of radical propaganda in the United States.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

[From the New York Tribune, January 8, 1923.]

CHURCH STEEL STRIKE REPORT DECLARED OF RADICAL BIAS—FINDINGS OF 1920 QUERY FALSE, DISTORTED, SAYS ANALYST—FOSTER'S ASSOCIATE REVEALED AS AUTHOR—INVESTIGATION VEHICLE OF EXTREMIST PROPAGANDA, LEADERS NOW BELIEVE; COMMUNIST HAND SEEN.

(By Gilman Parker.)

The report of the Interchurch World Movement on the steel strike, which created a furore when made public in 1920, which since has been widely used in radical propaganda and which was a prominent cause of the ending of the movement itself, has been repudiated by leading former officials of the organization as a false, misleading, and prejudiced product of radicalism.

This disclosure was made in New York City yesterday by the release to the newspapers of the first copies of a book bearing the title "Analysis of the Interchurch World Movement Report on the Steel Strike," an exhaustive study of nearly 500 pages delving into every detail of the report, and purporting to expose, step by step, the baselessness of the charges, statistics, and other data contained in the document. Marshall Olds, a writer on economic subjects, is the author of the analysis. He was led to undertake the work about two years ago, when, in examining material for a series of articles for the New York Tribune on "The high cost of strikes," he discovered certain discrepancies in the interchurch report. From that time Mr. Olds devoted his entire attention to preparing the analysis.

SPONSORS OF REPORT BACK EXPOSÉ.

One point upon which Mr. Olds lays emphasis is that in preparing the analysis he was given the wholehearted cooperation of many of the interchurch movement's former officials, who, having the true facts as to the report brought to their attention, appeared eager to aid in undoing the harm it has caused.

A brief summary of the book's principal charges, all of them backed, according to the author, by voluminous evidence, follows:

1. That a very considerable number of the statistics and other data presented by the report, upon which its leading radical conclusions were founded, were distorted and erroneous.

2. That practically all evidence favorable to the steel companies, and easily available at the time the report was formulated, was deliberately omitted from the document.

3. That numerous of the statements made in the report's "rock-bottom affidavits," and similar material held up as of the greatest importance, were previously repudiated under oath by their makers in Senate committee hearings and elsewhere, and that a number of the affidavits themselves were supplied by James R. Maurer, president of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor and a well-known radical.

4. That many of the report's conclusions are, for all practical purposes, parallel with the leading declarations of a manifesto issued by the New York branch of the communist party—now outlawed—to the longshoremen on the occasion of their strike three years ago.

WRITTEN BY RADICAL.

5. That the report was written by Heber Blankenhorn, a Greenwich villager, according to the analysis, who was associated with numerous radicals and radical organizations, including William Z. Foster, supreme leader of the steel strike. Blankenhorn and Foster are associated in The Federated Press, recently investigated and condemned by the American Federation of Labor for revolutionary radicalism, and stated in communist reports to Moscow, seized at Bridgeman, Mich., by Government officials, to be supported by the communists.

6. That associated with Mr. Blankenhorn in preparing or supporting the report, directly or indirectly, were such well-known New York radicals and "liberals" as Robert W. Bruere, of the Bureau of Industrial Research; George Soule, of the Labor Bureau (Inc.); Roger Baldwin, of the American Civil Liberties Union; David J. Saposs, who was associated with L. A. K. Martens, the soviet emissary to the United States; and Mrs. D. Willard Straight. [Mrs. Straight, according to three gentlemen intimately associated with the movement, donated $50,000 to the movement, with the express provision that the money was to be used in the industrial department only. They stated that it was generally believed in the inner circles of the movement that the report was completed and published with this money.]

7. That in addition to the staff of field investigators who gathered material for the report, all termed radicals, some of the members of the commission of inquiry appointed to direct the work, most of them ministers, are strongly inclined toward radicalism. Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Methodist, the commission's chairman, is quoted as having said: "Whatever we do, we must keep alive in the church the spirit of prophetic radicalism; * * * a man had better say 1,000 wild things and get some good truth uttered." Bishop Charles D. Williams, Episcopal, is also criticized.

CHARGE "BORING FROM WITHIN."

8. That the report in its entirety represents a new type of radical propaganda, aiming to "bore from within" among religious and social organizations—in addition to utilizing such tactics in the first-line objective of the trade-unions—whether cloaked as "liberalism" or using some other guise.

The analysis begins with a foreword, with the opening statement from the pen of Dr. Jeremiah W. Jenks, research professor of government and public administration of New York University, who was a leading associate in the interchurch movement. This is in effect an apology for the fact that the report was produced, and even that the investigation which produced it was undertaken.

"From the very nature of their business," wrote Professor Jenks, "ministers of the Christian religion have not the training or the experience to make such an investigation, or even to plan and guide such an investigation. * * * Very many of us felt that for the Interchurch World Movement to attempt to intervene in this great strike was probably ill-advised."

There follows one of the most important features of the analysis, the leading statement of repudiation of the report by former officials connected with the movement. This is made by the Rev. William Hiram Foulkes, chairman of the executive committee, the movement's supreme body, which finally approved the report for publication.

CALLS EVIDENCE BIASED.

"I fear from what I have heard after the investigation had been made," reads the statement, "that some of the actual investigators were not as unprejudiced as they should have been and that, personally representing one side of the controversy, their testimony was, therefore, liable to be discounted."

Next is a statement from Stanley Went, a member of the interchurch movement's publicity department, quoting a letter written by him to Tyler Dennett, the department head, accompanying the original draft of the report, which had been given to Mr. Went to edit. Incidentally, Mr. Dennett is quoted later on in the book as declaring the report was "substantially as Mr. Blankenhorn wrote it." Mr. Went's letter follows:

"In accordance with your wishes, I have edited the accompanying steel report as lightly as seemed compatible with the end in view. That end, as I understand it, was to present the report in a form which should give the least possible impression of bias on the part of the investigating committee.

"I would a great deal rather the report was published in its original than its present form, for the bias of the original seems to me so patent that it would make it a comparatively easy matter to discredit the entire report. My feeling, after editing the report, is that even now I have used the pencil too lightly; but I have rather leaned over backward in a desire to present the case of the commission (the commission of inquiry into the steel strike, mostly ministers, appointed by the interchurch movement for the investigation) as much as possible in the way the original writer thought that it should be presented."

FIRST EDITOR SUPPLANTED.

To this Mr. Went adds the following explanation:

"The activities of the Interchurch World Movement came to an end very soon after I had completed that first editing and my connection with the movement ceased. Subsequent editing was done by other hands."

[The "subsequent editing," it is shown further on in the book, was performed under the direction of Robert W. Bruere and his "liberal" Bureau of Industrial Research.]

The first chapters of the analysis deal with wages paid in the steel industry, with many tables of official Government statistics produced to shatter the contention of the interchurch report that "steel common labor has the lowest rate of pay of the trades for which there are separate statistics for laborers."

Example after example of the alleged distortion in the report's figures and arguments are given by Mr. Olds. For instance, the report makes it appear that the United States Steel Corporation had a one year's surplus in 1918 of $466,888,421, and again, in 1919, another one year's surplus of $493,048,201, whereas it is shown in the analysis that the 1918 surplus "represented the cumulative savings of 18 years," and that the 1919 figures were actually those savings plus $26,000,000, the total surplus for 1919.

AFFIDAVITS DECLARED FALSE.

Similarly, the analysis, by the presentation of sworn testimony given in the hearings of the Senate committee which investigated the steel strike, riddles the "rock-bottom affidavits" on which the report's charges of police brutality and abrogation of constitutional rights were based. A good example is in connection with the following excerpt from the interchurch report:

"At the very beginning of the strike charges of brutal assault and attacks were made by the strikers and their leaders against the State constabulary, the deputy sheriffs, and the company guards. The first audible protest against these violations from an outside person came from Father A. Kazinci, of Braddock, when he wrote to Governor Sproul and described in detail the assault of State troopers upon his people as they were coming out of church, and the driving of horses by the same State police upon little children as they were assembled in the school yard. Numerous charges of assaults and attacks were also brought out before the Senate committee."

The testimony of Father Kazinci before the committee, given months before and easily available to the compilers of the report, is cited by Mr. Olds, as follows:

"Senator McKELLAR. Have you seen any persons clubbed by the State constabulary?

"Father KAZINCI. No, sir; I have not.

"Mr. RUBIN (strikers' attorney). Have you seen them after they have been clubbed?

"Father KAZINCI. I have seen one.

"Mr. RUBIN. Describe the wounds.

"Father KAZINCI. He did not show me any of the wounds, but he told me about the incident."

As to the "driving of horses upon little children," Father Kazinci told the committee he "had it from the sisters," and went on to explain that he couldn't bring any of the latter to testify, because "they are under the jurisdiction of the authorities and not allowed to leave their convent without their permission."

In one instance, the analysis points out, the report changed the name of the man making an affidavit so that neither from its own index nor that of the Senate hearings could it be discovered that the "evidence" on which the affidavit was based had been repudiated months before.

The main conclusion of the analysis that the report was written and is now being used as a leading asset of radicalism in an extension to religious and social organizations of "boring from within" tactics is contained in an "afterword."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Broussard	Caraway	Curtis
Ball	Bursum	Colt	Dial
Bayard	Calder	Couzens	Dillingham
Borah	Cameron	Culberson	Ernst
Brandegee	Capper	Cummins	Fletcher
France	Ladd	Oddie	Spencer
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Pepper	Stanley
George	Lenroot	Phipps	Sterling
Gerry	Lodge	Pomerene	Townsend
Glass	McCormick	Ransdell	Trammell
Hale	McCumber	Reed, Mo.	Underwood
Harris	McKellar	Reed, Pa.	Wadsworth
Heflin	McNary	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
Johnson	Moses	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Shields	Warren
Kellogg	New	Shortridge	Weller
Kendrick	Nicholson	Simmons
Keyes	Norbeck	Smith

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily detained on account of serious illness in his family.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent by reason of a death in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

MYSTIC SHRINE CONVENTION.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Order of Business No. 923, being Senate Joint Resolution 247.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Delaware if that is a measure of an urgent character?

Mr. BALL. The joint resolution is of an urgent character. It is designed to provide increased police protection, and so forth, during the occasion of the convention of the Mystic Shrine to be held in Washington in the early part of June. The joint resolution authorizes an appropriation of $25,000. It is estimated that during the two weeks of the convention there will be at least 350,000 visitors in Washington and certainly 10,000 additional automobiles. The commissioners claim that they can not with their present force protect the citizenship of the District and the visitors who will be in attendance upon the convention.

Mr. WARREN. I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution if it will not lead to any extended debate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is there any need for the joint resolution being considered at this particular time?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, it is necessary that the joint resolution should be acted upon by the Senate at the earliest possible moment, for the reason that there will be but two or three more District days in the House of Representatives; and unless the joint resolution shall be passed soon, no opportunity will be afforded of considering it in the other body.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 247) providing funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia June 5, 6, and 7, 1923, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "the sum of $25,000"; in line 4, after the word "hereby," to insert the word "authorized"; on page 2, line 6, after the word "commissioners," to strike out "There is hereby further appropriated the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof," and to insert "and authority is hereby given to use so much of said sum"; and in line 9, after the word "necessary," to strike out "payable as aforesaid," so as to make the section read:

That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, payable in the same proportion as other expenses of the government of the District of Columbia are now paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the revenues of the United States, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in the District of Columbia from the 25th day of May, 1923, to the 10th day of June, 1923, both inclusive, including the employment of personal services; the payment of allowances; traveling expenses; hire of means of transportation; and other incidental expenses in the discretion of the said commissioners; and authority is hereby given to use so much of said sum as may be necessary for the construction, rent, maintenance, and for incidental expenses in connection with the operation of temporary public convenience stations, first-aid stations, and information booths, including the employment of personal services in connection therewith, during said period.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 13615, being the second deficiency appropriation bill. It is a small bill in number of pages, and very few amendments have been reported by the committee. It will take, I think, but a short time to consider it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that I could not catch the request of the Senator from Wyoming, and I wish to ask, Do I understand that the Senator asks unanimous consent that the calendar may be laid aside and that the appropriation bill named by him may be now taken up?

Mr. WARREN. The appropriation bill for which I now ask consideration is one which may be called up at any time, as it has precedence.

Mr. LODGE. A motion to take up an appropriation bill is always in order.

Mr. WARREN. I wished to have the appropriation bill taken up and disposed of, if I could, because it will take, I think, only a short time, and then we may go to the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the rule, this being Monday, it will require unanimous consent to lay aside the calendar, I take it. I am not disposed to raise an objection, but I do not know the attitude of other Senators in regard to the request. There is, however, one bill on the calendar in which I am very much interested, but it is pretty far down on the calendar, and I am not disposed to raise an objection in order to reach the bill. I think it will be reached at some time during the session. I am merely calling attention to the fact which I have stated, that I do not know the attitude of other Senators with reference to the consideration of the calendar; but, so far as I am concerned, I shall not enter any objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming for what appropriation bill he now asks consideration?

Mr. WARREN. It is the second deficiency appropriation bill. It involves some rather urgent matters. As stated, it is a short bill, and I hope there may be no objection to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not wish to enter objection to the Senator's request, but could there be some arrangement whereby the calendar may be taken up later? There is a bill, though it is rather late on the calendar, and might not be considered even though the calendar were taken up this morning, as Senators might object to it, which is of vital importance, because it provides a new rule for the taxation of national banks, and unless it be passed at this session, at least to a considerable extent, the tax laws and tax systems of the States are going to be disrupted. If we may have an understanding as to when the calendar shall be taken up, I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say to the Senator from Minnesota that I shall do everything I can to assist him in having the calendar taken up; but as the appropriation bill, as I have stated, is a rather short bill and will have to go to conference for consideration in order to clear the way for the consideration and passage of other appropriation bills, I hope there may be no objection to its consideration.

Mr. KELLOGG. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is his intention as soon as the bill is disposed of that we may revert to the calendar?

Mr. WARREN. So far as I am concerned, I hope that may be done.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Wyoming, as I understand, does not anticipate any difficulty in passing the bill, there being no controversial matters involved?

Mr. WARREN. I hope not. I do not know of any controversial items, because they are all House items with the exception of additions which have been made for the payment of judgments and audited accounts, and a few Senate items added by the Senate committee, aggregating only $234,835.08 altogether, $7,500 of which amount is for the payment of the widow of a deceased Senator.

Mr. SMITH. If it is understood that as soon as the appropriation bill is disposed of we shall have an opportunity to go to the calendar and consider certain important measures, so far as I am concerned, I shall not object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, having charge of the shipping bill, if the appropriation bill be now taken up and disposed of promptly, I shall be disposed to allow the unfinished business when 2 o'clock comes to be laid aside temporarily, so as to give some additional time for the consideration of bills on the calendar, so that nothing will be lost at any rate out of the two hours.

Mr. SMITH. That is all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the Chair lays before the Senate the appropriation bill the consideration of which is asked for by the Senator from Wyoming.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the pending bill is not a long one, and I hope it may not be necessary to read it twice. So I now ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the bill may be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first acted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as I am obliged to leave the Senate in a few moments, if he will permit me at this time to offer an amendment which is purely verbal, and which, if adopted, will not affect any appropriation or change the law, but which is intended to make the present language of the bill more clear?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. On page 17, line 15, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, line 15, it is proposed to strike out the words "prior year claims, fiscal year 1922" and to insert in lieu thereof "fiscal year 1922 claims and prior year claims," so that the clause as amended will read:

For refunding taxes illegally collected under the provisions of sections 3220 and 3689, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 24, 1919, including the payment of fiscal year 1922 claims and prior year claims, $42,430,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts is offering what has just been read at the desk as an amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I have asked unanimous consent to do so. The amendment merely makes a verbal change; it proposes no alteration in the amount and no alteration of the law. As the bill now stands, it seems to me that the language is very blind and does not express what it is undoubtedly intended to mean.

Mr. WARREN. The clause proposes to refund internal revenue taxes which may have been illegally collected. That is its entire object.

Mr. FLETCHER. Do I understand that the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts is acceptable to the Senator from Wyoming, representing the committee?

Mr. WARREN. It is entirely agreeable to the committee.

Mr. LODGE. My amendment merely proposes a verbal change.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the committee was on page 2——

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the bill may be read. We have dispensed with the formal reading of the bill, but it ought to be read now for amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary is reading the bill for amendment and was reading the first committee amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not heard the Secretary read the bill at all. Has the Secretary read the bill from the beginning?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has read it.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Florida ask that the bill may be read before any of the amendments are acted upon?

Mr. FLETCHER. We have not dispensed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I am not disposed to object, if the Senator wishes it read, but I think it would expedite business if the bill is read only once.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that procedure, but I do not think that we ought to skip to the committee amendments without reading the bill; that is all.

The READING CLERK. At the top of page 2, after line 1, under the head "Legislative," it is proposed to insert the following:

SENATE.

To pay Georgia Durham Watson, widow of Hon. Thomas E. Watson, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay from the appropriation for 1923 for compensation of officers, clerks, messengers and others, to Anna Dawson for services as clerk rendered the Hon. SMITH W. BROOKHART, a Senator from the State of Iowa, from November 10, 1922, to December 1, 1922, at the rate of $2,500 per annum and additional compensation at the rate of $240 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a few days ago I called to the attention of the Senate and the country the fact that the Debt Funding Commission provided for by Congress was composed of five partisan Republicans; that the Democrats were not represented at all upon that commission; and that this was unfair not only to the Democratic Party but to the whole people of the United States. It is a violation of a custom that has long obtained with both parties in Congress. I see in the Washington Post this morning that the debt envoys of Great Britain are in the city and that the United States commission is to hold its first session with these envoys to-day.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] has a bill pending which provides for the appointment of Democratic members upon this commission. When I raised this question before, the Senator from Georgia, who is urging action upon his bill, stated that he thought some of the members of the Finance Committee were favorable to his bill, but that the chairman of that committee, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], was absent at the time. I observe that he has returned to the city, he has been in the Chamber this morning, and I want to know of the chairman of that committee what is being done with regard to taking favorable action upon the bill of my friend the Senator from Georgia. I am going to discuss it briefly now, and on to-morrow morning I will discuss it again. I urged the appointment of Democratic representation upon that commission at the time the commission was created, and I am now heartily in favor of the bill of the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to know, I am entitled to know, and other Democrats here and elsewhere are entitled to know, and the whole people are entitled to know whether five partisans of any party are going to be permitted to sit behind closed doors and carry on negotiations regarding the $12,000,000,000 debt owed to the American people.

Mr. President, on the Committee on Appropriations—one of the standing committees of the Senate—which appropriates the money of the people for various purposes, there are 10 Republicans and 6 Democrats. Even on the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate there are three Republicans and two Democrats. On the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments there are four Republicans and three Democrats. On the Committee on Finance, which has the consideration of measures that tax the American people and impose a tax upon consumption, there are 10 Republicans and 6 Democrats. I submit to the Senate and to the country, if the Senate recognizes the importance of appointing Democrats on the committee that looks after the contingent expenses of the Senate and if it appoints Democrats on the committee that appropriates the money of the people for various purposes and if it appoints Democrats upon the committee that has to do with taxing the American people, why should we not have representation upon a commission that is to consider what shall be done with an indebtedness of $12,000,000,000 owed to the American people?

Mr. President, this money came from the body of the people generally. As I said before, Democrats and Republicans contributed to this fund. That money has been loaned to foreign countries; and when the Republican Congress came to consider a commission to handle this matter it appointed five Republicans and not a single Democrat. I protested against that action at the time. I submit that it is unfair, it is unjust to deny the Democrats representation upon that commission. The Republican Party has already suffered for its conduct in that matter. It suffered for it in the last election. I never discussed anything upon the stump in the States in which I spoke that seemed to me to arouse the people more than the unfairness and the partisanship displayed by the Republican Party in appointing this debt commission. I asked the people who heard me, as I am going to ask the Senate and the country to-day, what right has any political party in control of this Government to arrogate to itself the authority to handle an indebtedness of billions of dollars owed to the whole American people, to have its partisans sit behind closed doors and carry on whispered conversations as to propaganda that may be carried on in order to educate the people of the United States into a frame of mind favorable to debt cancellation? I think the desire to cancel the debt is at the bottom of this one-sided commission provided for by this Republican Congress. I think things are going on behind the screen that they do not want the Democrats to know.

If that is not true, why should we not have representation upon that commission? What reason is there for not appointing some Democrats on that commission? We are part and parcel of this great country. I want to repeat that if President Wilson had been in the White House and the Democrats had been in control of Congress, and we had appointed five Democrats to handle that debt of $12,000,000,000, we never would have heard the last of it from the other side of this Chamber. They are not going to hear the last of it soon in this Chamber unless they right the wrong they have done in this matter.

Mr. President, the people of the United States are tax burdened and debt ridden. They are entitled to have this money that is owed to us by foreign countries collected, or certain parts of it, as soon as possible, so as to reduce taxes here and relieve our own people. These people are vitally concerned. This is their Government. This money belongs to them, and they ought to be heard in the matter as to who shall sit in judgment upon these negotiations; but they are not heard. Nobody but Republicans sit on that commission. The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the ranking member of the Finance Committee of the Senate—the man who will be the next head of the tariff committee, who supported the most obnoxious and oppressive tariff bill ever passed through this body—are sitting behind closed doors upon this commission, and an ex-Senator, Representative BURTON, a very clever gentleman, is the member of the House—five in all, and not a single Democrat upon the commission!

I rose this morning to protest against such partisan conduct. I am going to continue to protest against it, and I serve notice on the other side now that I am going to continue to inquire what is the purpose of that side with regard to this matter. We are entitled to have representation upon that commission. I insist that we have it, and, in hearty cooperation with the Senator from Georgia, I call upon the Committee on Finance to report out his bill, and if that is not done we will on to-morrow take steps to discharge it from the further consideration of the bill that is now before it and ask to have it brought before the Senate for immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Executive Departments," in the items for the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, on page 5, line 11, before the word "motor," to strike out "gasoline"; so as to read:

FOREST SERVICE.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase a motor boat in the administration of the Alaskan forests to replace boat sunk by striking rocks in Sumner Strait, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 18, page 10, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Salaries and expenses of clerks, United States district courts: For salaries of clerks of United States district courts, their deputies, and other assistants, expenses of travel and subsistence, and other expenses of conducting their respective offices, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved February 26, 1919, fiscal year 1922, $10,177.49.

Mr. TRAMMELL. While we are considering this paragraph of the bill, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has considered the question of making an increase in the per diem allowance of deputy clerks and deputy marshals of the courts. Considerable complaint has been made to me in regard to that. It is complained that under the present high cost of living, and with the excessive hotel expenses, these men have not sufficient with which to meet their necessary expenses when they are away from their headquarters. Has that question been brought to the attention of the committee?

Mr. WARREN. Whatever could be done with that has been taken care of in the State and Justice appropriation bill, which passed very lately. It would not belong in this bill at all, because the appropriations for the future are in that bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desired to bring it to the attention of the chairman of the committee, because I have had considerable complaint brought to my attention in regard to it.

Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] had charge of the State and Justice appropriation bill.

Mr. CURTIS. That matter was reported upon by the Department of Justice, and was taken care of in the Department of Justice appropriation bill, which was passed recently. It will take effect July 1 next.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I thank the Senator.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Postal Service, Office of the Postmaster General," on page 14, line 20, to increase the appropriation for payment of rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post-office burglars, robbers, and highway mail robbers, fiscal year 1921, from "$7,750" to "$17,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 17, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

To enable the President to perform the obligations of the United States under the treaties of 1884, 1889, 1905, and 1906, between the United States and Mexico, including not to exceed $900 for rent, in addition to the amount appropriated under this head in the act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, $3,985.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 18, page 17, the last paragraph read being as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

For refunding taxes illegally collected under the provisions of sections 3220 and 3689, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 24, 1919, including the payment of prior year claims, fiscal year 1922, $42,430,000: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress of the disbursements hereunder as required by the act of February 24, 1919.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in the early part of the consideration of the bill, and agreed to, comes in at this place.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to ask what constitutes the major portion, at least, of this appropriation made for refunding forty-two million and odd dollars on account of illegal income-tax collections. Will the Senator give a little information on the subject?

Mr. WARREN. That is an accumulation of claims against the department which are constantly arising and which under the law must be paid. We are also constantly collecting taxes in cases where the returns were incorrectly given. For instance, we are collecting from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 a month additional on prior years' levies. On the other hand, there is the matter of refunds, and this is for an accumulation of illegally paid taxes, largely those paid before the Supreme Court had held unconstitutional the regulation of the department in regard to stock dividends.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That probably constitutes a considerable part of this $42,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. It does, although this covers a matter of some years. This is simply to carry out a law already in existence.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I was apprehensive that this refund of $42,000,000 embraced very largely payments made under the stock-dividend provision of the law, whereby the large corporate interests of this country have evaded payment to the Government, in my opinion, of their just proportionate part of the expenditures of the Government. As far as the committee's action is concerned, of course it is in keeping with the decision of the Supreme Court.

This brings to mind something that has been going on in this country during the last six or eight weeks. We have noticed corporation after corporation converting their incomes into stock dividends, and of course there have been all kinds of reasons given as to why they did so, but one reason stands out paramount—that is, that they are evading the payment of income taxes. While everybody else in this country is required to contribute to the support of the Government on the basis of his income, the big corporate interests of the country are evading the payment of their just proportion of the income taxes. Most of these stock dividends constitute bold, brazen cases of tax dodging.

I read some figures yesterday in regard to this in the Literary Digest, and I regret that I have not the copy with me to present to the Senate. Those figures show the enormous dividends declared by a great many of the corporations of the country, which have been distributed in the way of stock dividends. Regardless of the decision of the Supreme Court, and in justice and in equity, Congress should enact laws which would reach that form of income, and make the interests which are carrying on business that is prosperous, the percentages running into the thousands of per cent of income, contribute their part of the taxes upon their incomes.

To me it is indefensible that we have a system of taxation which permits such evasion of the law on the part of those who in this way are dodging the income tax law. An individual may own a mercantile establishment, for instance, and have $50,000 invested in that establishment. He enjoys a prosperous year and accumulates $25,000 in the business. There is no way by which he can evade paying an income tax upon his net proceeds of $25,000, a return upon his investment. If he decides to enlarge or extend his business and will invest $25,000 in a building, so that he may have enlarged facilities for the purpose of maintaining that business, there is no way by which he can distribute to himself that $25,000 for betterments or for improvements without paying his income tax upon that amount.

A man who maintains his farm or his grove may have had a prosperous year. Upon an investment of $50,000 he accumulates $10,000 net. He says, "I believe I will add a few acres to my farm. I will extend and enlarge my farming operations. I am going to put this money back in the business. It is true it will contribute a little to my increased holdings. I am going to plant a little additional growth and add a few acres to my present holdings." There is no way in which he can distribute that to himself without paying an income tax upon it. Why the discrimination? The system that permits it is all wrong.

If we are hedged about by constitutional provisions so that there is an avenue of escape for the most prosperous concerns in the country by declaring stock dividends, then we need a constitutional amendment so that such procedure may be rendered impossible and that there can not be an evasion of the income tax law or the intent of it as written by the Congress. I am a little afraid that we are not quite as zealous, at least some are not, to make those who are best able to pay and who are most prosperous in the country pay their part of the tax burden as we are to reach those who are less able to pay and who are less prosperous. It seems to me there is a drift and tendency along that line, regrettable as it is and destructive as it is to the advancement and fostering of a prosperous and happy people and a just government. Here we have a bill appropriating $42,000,000 to be refunded for taxes illegally collected. I do not know the exact proportion, but I dare say a very large proportion of it is to be used for the purpose of refunding to those who have dodged the payment of their income taxes under the guise of stock dividends or some other nefarious scheme of that character. I think if we have not a law that will reach them then we should enact one or, if necessary, we should have a constitutional amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any information from the Treasury Department as to the probable losses in revenue to the Treasury Department by virtue of the action of the Supreme Court on the stock-dividend proposition?

Mr. WARREN. I recall that it was stated at the time that it would amount to many millions—$40,000,000 or $50,000,000, or more—but I have not inquired. I think it would be rather difficult for the Treasury to give the exact amount. A great many of the smaller items have not been paid, and of course small corporations as well as large corporations were swept into it. It affected small corporations with their small capitalization, or where they were undercapitalized, as well as the larger corporations.

Mr. SMITH. The reason why I asked the question was that I have seen it stated several times that the Secretary of the Treasury had estimated that the loss in revenue to the Government would be up in the hundreds of millions of dollars, and I wanted to find out from the chairman of the committee if there had been any statement made to the committee or to him as to the probable reduction in revenue caused by the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. WARREN. Judging from the amounts we have appropriated to pay the adjusted claims, and I understand they have been working on them continuously, there would not be the amount the Senator has named. We have not believed that we could get the exact figures, and I do not think we could now; hence we have not asked for them, and have simply taken notice of such claims as have been adjudicated and appropriated therefor.

Mr. SMITH. Are all the claims up to date under that decision of the Supreme Court included in this deficiency bill?

Mr. WARREN. It includes only those that it would cover because of the manner in which those additions to capital were made. There have been recently a very great many stock dividends declared, but those are not taxed, and consequently we have nothing to do with them.

Mr. SMITH. This is the point I was getting at: In the years previous to the decision of the Supreme Court the dividends and surpluses were taxed. Does the $42,000,000 or a percentage of it include all? I understood the chairman to say the larger per cent was to meet the rebate that had to be made under the decision of the Supreme Court. Or has the Treasury Department settled any of the claims outside of those covered by the deficiency bill now before us?

Mr. WARREN. They had the privilege of settling some of the older ones; that is, to allow the use of the overpayment as an offset against new taxes. For instance, when the decision of the Supreme Court was rendered, there probably were individuals who owed for a year's taxes then due, and they were allowed, by virtue of certain legislation which we enacted, to take that amount out of the current taxes due, but these present items of course are sweeping up those which occurred perhaps 10 or 12 years ago and before the decision of the court.

Mr. SMITH. Whatever per cent of this sum represents the rebate required by the decision of the Supreme Court does not nearly represent the total amount that had to be refunded, as the Senator has just indicated, by the process of taking it from the current taxes that the corporation might owe. They just deducted whatever had been collected adversely to the decision of the court.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; for that short time.

Mr. SMITH. So the $42,000,000 does not represent the total loss?

Mr. WARREN. No; the $42,000,000 must not be understood as in correction of the stock-dividend proposition entirely. I said "a large part." The Senator said "the larger part." I think he would better adopt my language, "a large part," as I intended to state it. There have been some appropriations heretofore, one of $12,000,000 or $15,000,000, and we shall probably have some more of them. The Senator is a good lawyer and he keeps posted, and knows when the decision of the Supreme Court came. There has been time enough since, with a large force of inspectors, to cover nearly all of the claims, unless there was some lack of industry on the part of the claimants.

Mr. SMITH. I think it would be very interesting to find out, if it is possible, and I think at some time in the future I shall officially——

Mr. WARREN. I think if the Senator himself would apply to the Secretary of the Treasury for the information, he would get it as nearly accurate as any of us could, and I think he has the same right.

Mr. SMITH. As I was about to remark, I shall, for the benefit of the Senate and the public, ask the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish us as nearly as he can the data as to the amount lost in the form of revenue by the action of the court in that decision.

The Assistant Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading, "Judgments, United States courts," on page 19, after line 18, to insert:

For payment of the judgment rendered against the United States by the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting in admiralty, and certified to Congress in House Document No. 527 of the present session, under the Navy Department, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 20, line 4, after the word "House," to strike out "Document No. 502" and insert "Documents Nos. 502 and 526," so as to read:

For payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and reported to Congress during the present session in House Documents Nos. 502 and 526, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 8, to increase the appropriation for payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims under the Navy Department from "$37,996.44" to "$40,283.78."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 11, to increase the appropriation for payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims under the War Department from "$136,899.60" to "$217,872.73."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 12, to increase the total appropriation for payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims from "$612,033.95" to "$695,294.42."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 35, to insert the following additional section:

AUDITED CLAIMS.

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the General Accounting Office, under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1920 and prior years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in House Document No. 528, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). This completes the committee amendments as printed in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 5, insert the following paragraph:

For an assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations at the rate of $3,000 per annum, from January 1, 1923, to June 30, 1924, both dates inclusive, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I send to the desk another amendment which I ask may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 4, insert the following separate paragraph:

For payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army that have accrued, $85,692.17: Provided, That settlement of such claims shall have been made by the General Accounting Office upon the approval and recommendation of the Secretary of War where the amount of damages has been ascertained by the War Department and payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such damages: Provided further, That this amount shall be available exclusively for the payment of claims in excess of $500 which have been approved and recommended by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 15, after line 2, insert the following paragraph:

For Pauline G. Swaim, widow of Albert W. Swaim, late consul to Hamilton, Bermuda, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment which I now intend to offer does not involve an appropriation but merely the correction of an account. I offer the amendment, knowing that it constitutes legislation, but I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the bill because the account has been left in an unsettled condition, and the department desires that the legislation may be enacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 15, to follow the first amendment after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The general accounting officers are authorized to credit Boaz W. Long, in the settlement of his accounts as American minister to Salvador, with the sum of $2,819.50 or such amount as they may find due on account of furniture and equipment purchased from him in Salvador for the legation building erected by the United States Government at San Salvador, for which an account in the above-mentioned sum has been approved by the Department of State under "Contingent expenses, foreign missions, 1920."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I have, as a Senator, an amendment to offer which involves legislation but is in the direction of economy and efficiency. I send the amendment to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its consideration and for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 15, after the second amendment after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

The compensation of an ambassador to Cuba when hereafter appointed shall be in the sum of $17,500 per annum, and the salary appropriated for the fiscal years 1923 and 1924 for an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Cuba is hereby made available for the salary of an ambassador, and there is hereby appropriated for that purpose for the fiscal year 1924 the additional sum of $5,500: Provided, That the restrictions contained in section 1223, Revised Statutes, shall not apply in filling the existing vacancy at Habana, Cuba: And provided further, That the restrictions contained in the annual appropriation acts for the State and Justice Departments, fiscal years 1923 and 1924, pertaining to salaries of ambassadors and ministers, shall not apply in filling the vacancy at Habana, Cuba.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment just adopted is the last one I desire to propose. The bill is now with the Senate, so far as the committee is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum in order that Senators who wish to be present when the calendar is considered may come into the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	George	La Follette	Shields
Borah	Gerry	McCormick	Simmons
Brandegee	Glass	McCumber	Smith
Calder	Hale	McKellar	Spencer
Cameron	Harreld	McLean	Sterling
Capper	Harris	McNary	Sutherland
Colt	Heflin	Nelson	Townsend
Couzens	Johnson	New	Trammell
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Kellogg	Phipps	Warren
Ernst	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Fernald	Keyes	Robinson	Williams
Fletcher	Ladd	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest that we proceed with the consideration of bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

SERVICE CLAIMS IN NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," approved July 6, 1914, be amended by adding after the word "Army" the words "Navy, and Marine Corps."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that that bill may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real-estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator who introduced the bill and the Senator who reported it from the committee, I suggest that the bill should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] desires to offer an amendment to this bill, and he has it over at his office. I therefore ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside, and that it may be taken up afterwards, at the convenience of the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSPORTATION OF DEPENDENTS OF ARMY FIELD CLERKS, ETC.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This joint resolution has been previously read and considered. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York if he feels that this measure is important now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has been pending on the calendar for a long time. It was reported unanimously by the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know that at one time it was considered important.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It puts the field clerks on the same basis as officers and enlisted men as to travel allowances.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEASE OF FLOATING DRY DOCK.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CALDER. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF PUBLIC-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia, approved January 15, 1920," be, and it hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all teachers who were on the rolls of the public schools of the District of Columbia for the month of June, 1919, if otherwise eligible, and to any teachers who, having reached the age of 45, or who, having taught continuously for 15 years in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and by reason of accident or illness, not due to vicious habits, having become physically or mentally disabled and incapable of satisfactorily performing the duties of teacher, resigned from service or was placed upon an inactive list by the board of education on or before June 1, 1919, if otherwise eligible."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1539) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. DAVID M'D. SHEARER.

The bill (S. 1861) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use by the Government of the United States of certain inventions relating to reinforced concrete revetment and construction and laying of same, made by said David McD. Shearer, and for which letters patent of the United States Nos. 1173879, 1173880, and 1229152 were issued to him, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, which court is hereby vested with jurisdiction in the premises, and whose duty it shall be to hear and determine, first, whether the said David McD. Shearer was the first and original inventor of the inventions described in said letters patent or any of them; and if said court shall find that he was such first and original inventor of any of the same, then to determine, second, what amount of compensation, if any, he is justly entitled to receive from the United States for the use of his said inventions, or any of them, either before or since the date of said letters patent, up to the time of adjudication, and for a full and entire transfer of said several patents to the United States; and in determining the amount of compensation, if any, for the use of said inventions and transfer of said patents, the court shall take into consideration, as bearing on the question of reducing or increasing such compensation if and so far as the facts may warrant, the facts if proved that while the said David McD. Shearer was engaged in perfecting the inventions he was in the service of the United States as a junior engineer superintendent in charge of willow-bank revetment construction under the Mississippi River Commission, and whether and, if at all, to what extent said inventions, or any of them, were discovered or developed during the working hours of his Government service, and to what extent his said inventions for protection of river channels and banks differ from the methods previously used in material, method of laying, permanency, and value, and whether and, if at all, to what extent the expense of making experiments, trials, and tests for the purpose of perfecting said inventions was paid by the United States, and if any such expense was incurred by the United States whether and, if at all, to what extent the United States received compensation for such expense.

Either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States upon any such question where appeals now lie in other cases arising during the progress of the hearing of said claim, and from any judgment in said case at any time within 90 days after the rendition thereof; and any judgment rendered in favor of the claimant shall be paid in the same manner as other judgments of the said Court of Claims; and the payment of such judgment shall vest the full and absolute right to said patents, and each of them, in the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this joint resolution and the bill that follows it on the calendar could not be disposed of under this rule, so I ask that they may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 14) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Washington, this bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutant generals of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has passed the Senate; and a motion to reconsider, entered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], is now pending.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As the Senator from Iowa is not here, I suggest that the bill go over without prejudice until the Senator from Iowa comes in. Possibly it may then be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3254) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that bill will take more time than we will have in which to consider it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1343) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1345) to amend an act entitled "Interstate Commerce Act," approved February 28, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1346) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, including the safety appliance acts and the act providing for the valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved March 1, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT.

The bill (S. 2921) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, an amendment has been proposed to this bill by the Senator from Pennsylvania relating to one feature of the bill in which some people in my State are interested. I have sent a copy of the amendment to them, asking them if it is satisfactory, and I have not yet heard from them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have on my desk a copy of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I shall ask that it be adopted, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that I have sent this amendment to the parties who are interested, to get their views as to whether or not it meets the ideas that they have, and I think I shall hear from them in a very few days. If it is satisfactory, I shall have no objection whatever to the bill; but I shall have to ask the Senator to allow the bill to go over until I can hear from them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COOPERATIVE ORGANIZATIONS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. CALDER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PAIUTE INDIAN LANDS IN NEVADA.

The bill (S. 3384) authorizing an appropriation to meet proportionate expenses of providing a drainage system for Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the Newlands reclamation project of the Reclamation Service was announced as next in order, and the Senate resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has been heretofore considered as in Committee of the Whole, and reported to the Senate with certain amendments. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 171) to extend the provisions of the act of May 11, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the bill be read. I would like to have an explanation of it.

The bill was read.

Mr. DIAL and Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over on objection.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) rejecting bids for the acquisition of Muscle Shoals was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TRADING IN COTTON FUTURES.

The bill (S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think it would be quite impossible to dispose of that bill to-day. I do not rise in hostility to it, but I think the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] will admit that it can not be disposed of to-day on the call of the calendar. There is an adverse report on the bill from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DIAL. The adverse report does not amount to much, and I would like to wipe it out; it is based on a false premise. However, the consideration of the bill may take a little time, and I am willing that it should be passed over to-day, but I give notice that I shall make a motion very soon to take it up, and I hope to get sufficient help to have the bill taken up in place of some other bill and passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2388) for the relief of Augusta Reiter was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. In the absence of the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3858) to define butter, and to provide a standard therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the bill be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 211) to extend the provisions of the pension act of May 11, 1912, and May 1, 1920, to the officers and enlisted men of all State militia and other State organizations that rendered service to the Union cause during the Civil War for a period of 90 days or more, and providing pensions for their widows, minor children, and dependent parents, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3995) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to exterminate bean beetles in the State of New Mexico, and authorizing expenditures therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who undoubtedly has all the information about bean beetles, I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NEW JERSEY SHIPBUILDING & DREDGING CO.

The bill (S. 3515) for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, there is a very large amount involved in this bill, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	Fletcher	Ladd	Shields
Borah	France	Lenroot	Simmons
Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Smith
Broussard	George	McKellar	Spencer
Calder	Gerry	McLean	Stanley
Cameron	Glass	McNary	Sterling
Capper	Harreld	Nelson	Sutherland
Caraway	Harris	New	Townsend
Colt	Heflin	Norbeck	Trammell
Couzens	Johnson	Oddie	Underwood
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Wadsworth
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Kellogg	Ransdell	Warren
Ernst	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Fernald	Keyes	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the bill which has just been reached on the calendar is for the benefit of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co. That company had a contract with the War Department for the removal of some rock at Hell Gate, East River. It appears that one day a naval vessel leaving the Brooklyn Navy Yard for New London, passing through the East River at Hell Gate, collided with this dredge, and the dredge sank within 20 minutes and, as the report indicates, was completely destroyed.

The vessel having been destroyed through no fault of his, the contractor very properly filed a claim with the Navy Department for the value of his dredge and for what the dredge would have earned. After the most careful inquiry the Navy Department reported to the Committee on Claims that there was no doubt of the value of the vessel and the fault of the department, but it raised a question about the profits of this company while the vessel was out of commission. The Committee on Claims recommends that the bill be reduced by something like fifty-odd thousand dollars, which is the profit the ship would have earned, and recommends unanimously that the Government pay $52,278.28, the value of the vessel at the time she was destroyed. There is not the slightest question about the Navy Department being responsible, and the board of inquiry of the Navy Department so certifies.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, was the dredge at anchor at the time of the collision?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; it was moored there, engaged in dredging for the Government.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to ask the Senator what was done about the insurance. I see the vessel was insured for $100,000.

Mr. CALDER. I have no doubt the insurance would be paid over to the Government.

Mr. DIAL. I notice from the report that the boat was 30 years old. Since the Government has so many vessels that we can not sell at any appreciable price at all, I thought perhaps this was a pretty good sum to pay for a boat 30 years ago. According to our Shipping Board we can hardly dispose of ships at all now, and it occurred to me that possibly if the Government was liable at all it could give this concern a boat that would be younger in place of the one that was lost.

Indeed, Mr. President, I confess that I am confused somewhat as to the course the Senate ought to take about many claims. It seems to me to be a very loose way to settle claims to come in here on some report or other, necessarily not very thorough. We ought to refer these matters to some court, and let the people go into court and establish their rights. That is what we have the courts for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated:

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are several Senators who would like to reach certain bills on the calendar; and as they gave way for the second deficiency appropriation bill for an hour or such a matter, I am perfectly willing to lay aside the unfinished business for at least an hour that we may proceed with the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, it seems to me we ought to decide on some definite line of action, some businesslike line of action. I confess that if the Government was wrong and injured some one it ought to compensate the party; but it is a very loose way to come in here, as I said, by sort of an ex parte statement, and attempt to ascertain the damages in that way. I certainly hope we will change the method, because it is unpleasant to oppose such claims when they come before the Senate in this way. It does seem to me this is a very excessive amount for a boat as old as the one involved. Of course, I am not an expert along that line.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will pardon me, the report indicates that two inspections were conducted by the Navy Department, and one of these experts reported the vessel worth $150,000——

Mr. DIAL. Yes; and the other that it was worth $250,000.

Mr. CALDER. We are taking the smallest amount. If the Senator will note the report, he will see that it says the Navy Department assumes entire responsibility for the accident. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. DIAL. Then somebody in the Navy Department ought to be kicked out if they are going about sinking people's ships this way. That verifies the very point I am making. There is a difference of opinion as to the value of the boat. One expert places a value of $150,000 on the boat and another a value of $250,000.

Mr. CALDER. We took the lowest estimate.

Mr. DIAL. The lowest estimate might be several times too large.

Mr. CALDER. The owner of the boat submitted affidavits showing its value. Surely he is not responsible and ought to have his boat back or his money.

Mr. DIAL. I think we ought to give him a new boat, or a practically new boat.

Mr. CALDER. A boat of this character is specially built for the purpose. We can not take any kind of boat and give it to him in place of the one he lost.

Mr. DIAL. Oh, no; and I would not want to do that. I want to do my duty to the taxpayers of the country. I think we should investigate all these claims very carefully. I have had opportunity merely to scan the report, and I notice that one of the experts fixes the value of the boat in the sum of $150,000 and another in the sum of $250,000. I confess that I am not very well prepared to pass on the value of the boat under circumstances of that kind. The matter ought to be referred now to some court.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York what difference in time elapsed between the estimate of $150,000 and the estimate of $250,000?

Mr. CALDER. The report of the Secretary of the Navy to the Committee on Claims states:

> Two inspectors representing the engineers' office in New York, who are constantly employed on the work, fixed the value of the drill boat, one at $150,000 and the other at $250,000. The engineer in charge of the work expressed the opinion that the fair value of the drill boat is $150,000.

That is the value which the Committee on Claims put on it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I think I may be able to clear up a little doubt as to the justice of the claim involved in the bill. The matter was referred to me as a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims and I made investigation of it and made the report. The facts were that the boat which was destroyed was at a certain point at Hell Gate doing some work under contract for the Government. It was run into by a Government boat and sunk, totally destroyed, while it was at anchor. The whole matter was taken up by the Navy Department when claim was made by the owners for compensation for their losses. It was investigated by the Navy Department. Their engineers were asked to arrive at the value of the boat, which they did. I have forgotten just what the amount was that they fixed, but something over $200,000. That amount they fixed as the value of the boat.

That valuation corresponded with the valuation that could be fairly arrived at by the cost to the owners of the boat. The Navy Department after a thorough investigation decided that the navigating officer of the United States ship Lykens was wholly at fault, that the accident was due entirely to his delinquency, and that the owners were entitled to compensation. They fixed the return to the company at $205,000, I think. The figures are not exactly clear in my mind at this moment. The $205,000 included an item of something over $50,000 for demurrage. That was the amount, in other words, that the boat would have earned on the contract if it had not been destroyed. In making the report I struck out the item of demurrage and reported the bill for the amount of actual damages sustained as found by the Navy board and as shown by the cost figures submitted by the company owning the boat. That is the whole story.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, can the Senator explain why, where there is such a difference of opinion as to the value of the boat, the matter is not submitted to the Court of Claims for investigation and finding rather than to come here with a direct appropriation of the amount of damages to be determined according to the judgment of the several Senators who may be connected with the matter?

Mr. NEW. That is a matter for the Senate to determine.

Mr. McCUMBER. I appreciate that it is a matter for the Senate to determine, but where we have two estimates from a department, even admitting that the damages resulted from the acts of Government officials, why should not the question, as has been done in the past in nearly every case, be referred to the Court of Claims for findings of fact in the case and the amount of loss involved?

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, it is a fact that there is a difference of opinion between the experts, but the Navy Department recommended to the Claims Committee the amount fixed by the lowest estimate, and that is recommended to the Senate. The Senator from Indiana has pointed out that the committee cut out of the bill all charges for profits on the part of the vessel during the time she would have been engaged in working.

I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that it has been the usual practice of the Senate to pass such measures when the case seemed perfectly clear. Such cases have only been referred to the Court of Claims when there was some doubt in the mind of the Senate as to whether or not the claim was a fair one.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator a further question. Does he desire us to understand that the matter of damages is perfectly clear? Does the department admit that its one expert giving the lowest value was correct, while the other expert giving twice the value was incorrect?

Mr. CALDER. We settle our private affairs on exactly the same basis. We submit such things in business to men who are supposed to understand and then we adjust the differences, but in this case the lower amount is substantiated by the cost sheets submitted by the owner of the vessel and by affidavits accompanying the same, proving the value of the ship from his standpoint.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not going to make objection, but I desire to suggest again that I think cases of this kind should be submitted to a court to find the facts rather than to take the mere statement of a department as to what the lowest sum may be.

Mr. NEW. I am not objecting to the criticism of the Senator from North Dakota. I attempted to do my duty as I saw it when the matter was referred to me as a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims. I went through the matter very carefully and reached the conclusion in my own mind that the claim of the company was absolutely just, and I based that on the official findings of the Navy Department as much as upon anything else, which, as the Senator from New York said, was sustained by the cost sheets that were submitted by the owners of the vessel. There is no question in the world that the boat was destroyed as the result of negligence or incompetency of somebody operating a vessel belonging to the United States Government. That is the whole question.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Indiana a question? As I understand it, the Navy Department, after having two experts investigate and give their judgment as to the value of the boat, recommended that Congress pay the lowest estimate made. Then the Committee on Claims, of which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] is a member, investigated and unanimously recommended the payment of the claim.

Mr. NEW. The only further comment I care to make as to the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] is that I feel that since the facts seemed to me to be so clearly established and the loss was inflicted by the negligence of the commander of the Government boat, it was hardly fair to expect the company to go without its money for the very long time that would undoubtedly be required in adjusting the matter through the Court of Claims.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that there are only two parties to a claim of this kind. One is the party committing the injury, the Government of the United States in this case, and the other the party who suffered the injury. It has been usual in connection with these claims, where the aggressive party admits carelessness and liability and on investigation admits the amount of the liability, never to send the cases to the Court of Claims but to send to the Court of Claims only those cases where there is a doubt as to the liability or where there is a doubt as to the amount of the compensation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. If I may finish this sentence, I shall then yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

In this case there is no doubt about the liability. While the boat of the company was at anchor early in the morning a Government steamer came crashing into it and sunk it. There is no doubt about the liability, so far as the Government is concerned, because a double inspection was made and the Committee on Claims adopted the lowest amount which the inspectors found. Then they eliminated from that amount an item of $50,000, which had to do with possible profits. It strikes me that it is not fair to a claimant who has a perfectly just claim to say to him, "Yes; the one who did the injury admits the liability; admits that the money is due; the Government admits it; but we will send you to the Court of Claims"—to decide what? To decide a liability that is admitted and to fix an amount about which there is no question.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] are misinformed in one respect in reference to this matter. Actions of this kind can not go to the Court of Claims, for they are actions sounding in tort. Only actions arising out of contracts or judgments can be referred to the Court of Claims. There are only two ways in which relief may be obtained in such a case as this; one is by authorizing a suit to be brought either in the Court of Claims or in a court of admiralty. Since I have been a Member of the Senate we have passed a number of bills authorizing parties to go into a court of admiralty in order to have their claims adjudicated. The other method is to afford relief by a direct appropriation, as is proposed in this case. The Court of Claims, however, without legislation, would have no jurisdiction in this case, because, as I have stated, it is an action sounding in tort.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator from Indiana a question. Did the testimony in this case show that there was any insurance on the boat? What was the fact in reference to that matter? Has any insurance been collected?

Mr. NEW. No; my recollection is that there was no insurance. It has been some time since I prepared the report, but I do not think I am in error as to that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In view of the statement which was made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], I gathered a different impression.

Mr. DIAL. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. On page 3 of the report on this bill it is stated:

> The record shows that she was built about 30 years ago, was necessarily kept in first-class condition by the character of the work in which she was engaged, and was insured for the sum of $100,000.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In view of that statement, if the record so shows, I, with some hesitation and with much deference, wish to submit to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] if he does not think that he could prepare and propose while some other bill shall be considered an amendment which would provide that any sums which have been collected or which may be collected upon any insurance carried upon the vessel shall be deducted from the amount to be paid by the Government? Certainly the owner of the vessel does not wish to be paid twice over; all he is entitled to is reimbursement for the value of his vessel.

Mr. NEW. I certainly do not desire that he shall be paid twice. I desire to remind the Senator from Connecticut, however, that this is not my bill, but is the bill of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that, but the Senator from Indiana said that he was the subcommittee which considered the bill.

Mr. NEW. I was; but, so far as I am concerned, I should think that the kind of amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut would be entirely proper and I should be prepared to accept it.

Mr. CALDER. Such an amendment would be perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the bill may be passed over temporarily.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to move to amend the bill by referring the claim to some court of proper jurisdiction. Perhaps my amendment is in the nature of a substitute. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting:

> That the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co. of Bayonne, N. J., is hereby authorized to bring suit in any court of competent jurisdiction to reimburse them for the loss sustained as a result of the total destruction of drill boat No. 3 through collision with the U. S. S. Lykens in Hell Gate, off Halletts Point, New York Harbor, on September 1, 1921.

I wish to call attention to the statement on page 3 of the report that—

> Two inspectors representing the engineers' office in New York, who are constantly employed on the work, fixed the value of the drill boat—one at $150,000 and the other at $250,000. The engineer in charge of the work expresses the opinion that the fair value of the drill boat is $150,000.

It appears, therefore, that one engineer employed on the work states that $150,000 is a fair valuation of the boat, while another states that it was worth $250,000. There was no opportunity for cross-examining them, nor was there any test of the accuracy of the statements; but $150,000 is the maximum amount which is fixed by the representative of the owners of the boat. In view of that fact and in view of the fact also that the boat was insured, I think the matter ought to be referred to a court in order to allow justice to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CALDER. Just a word in reference to that. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina shall prevail, and the matter is referred to a court, the probability is that the claimant will receive all of the money which he insists is due him for the loss of the boat and also for the loss of profits.

Mr. DIAL. If he is entitled to it, he ought to recover it.

Mr. CALDER. And in the end the Government will probably be out some $50,000 to $75,000.

Mr. DIAL. I have faith in our courts, and if the owner is entitled to the sum claimed he ought to recover it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. DIAL. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The question being put, on a division the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further amendment as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. DIAL. On page 1, line 6, I move to strike out "$205,028.28" and to insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

Mr. CALDER. I hope that motion will not prevail. The Committee on Claims has recommended the payment of $152,000 in this case, which is the amount of the cost of the vessel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee having been agreed to December 5 as in Committee of the Whole, the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will have to be withheld until the bill reaches the Senate or the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will have to be reconsidered. Are there further amendments as in Committee of the Whole? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and now open to amendment. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina is in order.

Mr. DIAL. I renew my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, at the beginning of line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$205,028.28" and in lieu thereof to insert "$100,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CALDER. As I understand, the Senator from South Carolina moves that the Government allow $100,000 for the damages to this vessel. I wish again to inform the Senate that the Navy Department has recommended the payment of $205,000, which includes the demurrage, while the Committee on Claims of the Senate recommends the payment of $152,000, which would be the actual replacement cost. If we are going to allow anything, we ought to allow that; otherwise it would be better to defeat the bill. It would be very unjust to a man who is doing work for the Government and has his vessel sunk through no fault of his own to take any such action as is proposed by the amendment now offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. CALDER. At the end of the bill I offer the amendment which was suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That there shall be deducted from the amount herein set out the amount, if any, received by the claimant from insurance on said boat.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, instead of the words "herein set out," would the Senator object to saying "the amount hereby appropriated"?

Mr. CALDER. I will modify the amendment by changing the words to "the amount hereby appropriated."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether there should not be a further provision subrogating the Government to any further claims arising under the insurance policy?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator mean under any further insurance or other insurance?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think that would be a proper precaution. I had not thought of that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is possible, of course, that payments have been made on the $100,000 of insurance, but that not all of the amount has been paid, so that there may be something still due upon that policy.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Perhaps I did not fully gather the force of the amendment. I thought it provided for any sums that had been or might be received under the insurance policy.

Mr. CALDER. I thought the language made it clear that it covered that amount.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the Secretary again state the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That there shall be deducted from the amount hereby appropriated the amount, if any, received by the claimant from insurance on said boat.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not see how we could deduct from the amount appropriated moneys that might be received after payment under the appropriation had been made.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The point I make is as to subrogating the Government to the right under the insurance policy to any moneys not yet collected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator indicate in what language such a provision should be couched?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should add a further proviso that the claimant shall assign to the Government of the United States any right he may have to any unpaid insurance upon the boat.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That would cover it.

Mr. NEW. That would safeguard it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment submitted by the Senator from New York by adding a further proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That the claimant shall assign to the United States any right he may have to any unpaid insurance on the boat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OVERMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which Order of Business No. 914, being the bill (S. 3515) for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J., was passed. I make the motion in behalf of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who requested me to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill 3515 was passed, and that motion will be duly entered.

THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I now ask that the Senate recur to Order of Business No. 271, being the bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, that bill has been read at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the amendments reported by the committee have not as yet been agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I will make a brief statement in regard to the bill. Its purpose is to afford the Court of Claims better machinery with which to transact its business. As an aftermath of the war, claims are pouring into the Court of Claims at a very rapid rate, and the court needs more help in order to assist in the conduct of its business. The testimony in that court is taken in the form of depositions before examiners, and then the cases are tried by the court. In order to enable the court to expedite the consideration of cases pending, it is necessary to grant authority to appoint more examiners to take testimony.

The other changes proposed by the bill are mainly verbal changes, except in one particular, namely, in the matter of appeals from the Court of Claims. Under existing law a decision can not be appealed by a private litigant unless the amount of the claim exceeds $3,000, while the Government can institute an appeal in any case, no matter what may be the amount involved. This proposed amendment to the law gives both parties—the Government and the claimant—an equal right to appeal in cases involving $3,000 or more, but it provides that the Government may by certiorari bring up cases for a less amount than $3,000. The object of that is this: The Court of Claims frequently has what might be termed a group of cases where the decision of one case will govern in a lot of other cases of which the first case is typical, and this leaves to the Government the right in such cases, where the amount involved is less than $3,000, to take them up by certiorari. Otherwise, the right of appeal is equal on both sides. Under existing law the Government only could appeal in claims as low as $3,000. Now both parties can appeal, the Government and the claimant; and the Government, as I have said, can only take up by certiorari small cases involving less than $3,000.

I do not care to go into any further discussion of the bill, because it does not change the main features of the law in any respect. It is simply to aid in the work of the court. No radical changes are made in the law. Some of the phraseology of the antiquated Court of Claims law is changed. For instance, we substitute the term "marshal" for "bailiff"; we strike out the words "chief clerk" and say "clerk"; and then a slight change is made in the term of court, so as to make it more precise and clear. A little change is made in the time of holding the Court of Claims. Otherwise, there are no changes.

In the bill that we reported we provided a salary of $4,500 for the clerk of the court. The Appropriations Committee has since provided a salary of $5,000, so that that is the law; and, accordingly, I ask to have the bill amended on page 2, line 12, section 140, by striking out "$4,500" and inserting "$5,000." That harmonizes with existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 4, after the word "master," to strike out "or"; in the same line, after the word "commissioner," to insert "or examiner"; on page 3, line 6, after the word "solicitor," to strike out the comma and the words "the comptroller and the auditors"; on page 5, line 17, after the words "taking of," to strike out "proof" and insert "evidence"; on page 6, line 6, after the word "court," to strike out "along"; on the same page, line 9, after the word "hearing," to strike out "thereof" and insert "thereon"; on the same page, line 10, after the word "prescribe," to strike out "nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent the court from passing upon all questions and findings without regard to whether exceptions were or were not taken at the hearings before the examiner"; on page 8, line 3, after the words "of the," to strike out "said court" and insert "Court of Claims"; on the same page, line 5, after the word "section," to strike out "169" and insert "172"; on the same page, line 6, after the word "section," to strike out "146" and insert "147"; and on the same page, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 12. That section 164 of said Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 164. The said court shall have power to call upon any of the departments and upon the General Accounting Office for any information or papers it may deem necessary, and shall have the use of all recorded and printed reports made by the committees of each House of Congress, when deemed necessary to the prosecution of its business. But the head of any department, or of said General Accounting Office, may refuse and omit to comply with any call for information or papers when, in his opinion, such compliance would be injurious to the public interest."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 138 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 138. The Court of Claims shall hold one annual term at the city of Washington, beginning on the first Monday in October and continuing as long as may be necessary for the prompt disposition of the business of the court. Any three of the judges of said court shall constitute a quorum and may hold a court for the transaction of business: Provided, That the concurrence of three judges shall be necessary to the decision of any case."

SEC. 2. That section 139 of said Judicial Code is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 139. The court shall appoint a clerk, who, ex officio, may be a master, commissioner, or examiner; a deputy clerk, if deemed necessary; a marshal; and a chief messenger; and such other employees as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law. The clerks shall take an oath for the faithful discharge of their duties and shall be under the direction of the court in the performance thereof."

SEC. 3. That section 140 of said Judicial Code is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 140. The salary of the clerk shall be $5,000 a year; of the deputy clerk, $2,500 a year; of the marshal, $1,500 a year; and of the chief messenger, $1,000 a year, payable monthly from the Treasury."

SEC. 4. That section 141 of said Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 141. The clerk shall give bond to the United States in such amount, in such form, and with such security as shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury."

SEC. 5. That section 143 of said Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 143. On the first day of every regular session of Congress the clerk of the Court of Claims shall transmit to Congress a full and complete statement of all the judgments rendered by the court during the previous term, stating the amounts thereof and the parties in whose favor they were rendered, together with a brief synopsis of the nature of the claims upon which they were rendered. At the end of every term of the court he shall transmit a copy of its decisions to the heads of departments; to the Solicitor of the Treasury; to the Commissioners of the General Land Office and of Indian Affairs; to the chiefs of bureaus, and to other officers charged with the adjustment of claims against the United States."

SEC. 6. That sections 148, 149, and 150 of said Judicial Code are hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. That section 151 of said Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 151. Whenever any bill, except for a pension, is pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may, for the investigation and determination of facts, refer the same to the Court of Claims, which shall proceed with the same in accordance with such rules as it may adopt and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy, together with such conclusions as shall be sufficient to inform Congress of the nature and character of the demand, either as a claim, legal or equitable, or as a gratuity against the United States, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant: Provided, however, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court upon the facts established that under existing laws or the provisions of this chapter the subject matter of the bill is such that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and it shall report its proceedings therein to the House of Congress by which the same was referred to said court: Provided further, That when any such claim shall have been once referred by one House and reported upon by the court or by it dismissed for want of prosecution or other cause, it shall not again be referred by one House to said court. And all claims or bills now pending in said court heretofore referred by either House of Congress shall be proceeded with in accordance with the provisions of this chapter: And provided further, That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States."

SEC. 8. That section 157 of said Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 157. The said court shall have power to establish rules for its government and for the regulation of practice therein, and to fix the time within which motions for new trial shall be made, and it may punish for contempt in the manner prescribed by the common law, may appoint commissioners, and may exercise such powers as are necessary to carry into effect the powers granted to it by law. In any suit now or hereafter pending on the general jurisdiction docket of the said court the said court shall have power and authority to appoint, upon the motion of either party to the suit or upon its own motion, a competent person as an examiner to attend the taking of evidence and to make report of the facts in the case. Any examiner shall proceed under such rules and regulations as may be promulgated by the court and such orders as the court may make in the particular suit and may have and perform the general duties that pertain to special masters in suits in equity. He may fix the times for hearings, administer oaths, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. Parties to the suit may appear before the examiner in person or by attorney, produce evidence, and examine witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses or for the production of testimony before the examiner may issue out of the court by the clerk thereof, which shall be served by the United States marshal in any judicial district to whom they are directed. The rules of the court shall provide for a finding and report of facts by the examiner, to be filed in court with the testimony upon which the same is based, and for exceptions thereto, in whole or in part, by the parties to the suit, and a hearing thereon within such reasonable time as the court's rules may prescribe. Nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent the court from passing upon all questions and findings without regard to whether exceptions were or were not taken at the hearings before the examiner. The compensation of the examiner and his traveling and other necessary expenses shall be payable out of any amount appropriated for such purpose."

SEC. 9. That section 166 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 166. The court may, at the instance of the attorney or solicitor of the United States, or upon its own motion, make an order in any case pending therein, directing the claimant in such case to appear, upon reasonable notice, before the court or any commissioner of the court and be examined on oath touching any or all matters pertaining to said claim. Such examination shall be reduced to writing by the said commissioner and be returned to and filed in the court, and may, at the discretion of the attorney or solicitor of the United States appearing in the case, be read and used as evidence on the trial thereof. And if the claimant, after such order is made and due and reasonable notice thereof is given to him, fails to appear or refuses to testify or answer fully as to all matters within his knowledge material to the issue, the court may, in its discretion, order that the said cause shall not be brought forward for trial until he shall have fully complied with the order of the court in the premises."

SEC. 10. That section 175 of said Judicial Code is herbey amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 175. The Court of Claims, at any time while any claim is pending before it or on appeal from it or within two years next after the final disposition of such claim, may, on motion on behalf of the United States, grant a new trial and stay the payment of any judgment therein, upon such evidence, cumulative or otherwise, as shall satisfy the court that any fraud in the premises has been practiced against the United States, but until an order is made staying the payment of a judgment the same shall be payable and paid as now provided by law."

SEC. 11. That section 242 of said Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 242. An appeal to the Supreme Court shall be allowed on behalf of either party from any judgment of the Court of Claims where the amount in controversy exceeds $3,000 or where the plaintiff's claim is forfeited to the United States, as provided in section 172, except judgments rendered under the operation of section 147: Provided, That in any case in which there is a final judgment or decree of the said court it shall be competent for the Supreme Court of the United States, upon the application of the Attorney General, to require by certiorari or otherwise that any such case be certified to it for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by writ of error or appeal to said court: Provided further, That when a certiorari is awarded by the Supreme Court the said court shall make and certify to the Supreme Court its findings of fact in the case in which the certiorari is awarded."

SEC. 12. That section 164 of said Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 164. The said court shall have power to call upon any of the departments and upon the General Accounting Office for any information or papers it may deem necessary, and shall have the use of all recorded and printed reports made by the committees of each House of Congress, when deemed necessary to the prosecution of its business. But the head of any department, or of said General Accounting Office, may refuse and omit to comply with any call for information or papers when, in his opinion, such compliance would be injurious to the public interest."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS obtained the floor.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained on official business at a committee meeting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I move to strike out all of the proviso beginning on page 4 of the bill, line 25, in these words:

And provided further, That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States.

Mr. President, it has been some time since I examined this matter, this bill having been reported to the Senate more than a year ago, and this amendment then prepared; and as it involves some former acts in regard to the claims which the amendment is intended to affect, I shall try to be accurate in my statement of that legislation.

The proviso that I move to strike out is in direct antagonism to another provision of the same section of the bill, and the two are irreconcilably in conflict. In fact, the proviso would utterly defeat the object of that section of the bill. A careful examination of section 7, a portion of which it is proposed to strike out, will show that the concluding provision of the section practically nullifies the earlier portion of the section. The concluding provision, which it is proposed to strike from the bill, is that reading as follows. I am going to reread it:

And provided further, That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States.

It will be noted that the first part of section 151 of the Judicial Code, proposed to be here reenacted and which is left intact in this bill on this point, authorizes either House of Congress to refer to the Court of Claims any bill, except for a pension, providing payment of a claim, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty, the court upon such reference to proceed to report the facts; and yet the concluding provision would prohibit the court from taking any action on the matter so referred if the claim is one which is barred by any statute of the United States.

It would seem obvious that if a claimant has such a claim as is not barred by any law, then he will present his claim directly to the Court of Claims in the first instance and will waste no time by presenting his claim to Congress. If his claim is not barred by any law, then he already has a right to take it to the Court of Claims and needs no reference of the matter to the court by either House of Congress.

The claimant who must appeal to Congress for relief in the first instance is one whose claim, for some reason, has become barred by some law, either the statute of limitations or otherwise, or whose claim is not one which would constitute the basis of a legal demand upon the Government, although it may possess such attributes as would appeal to the sense of fairness of Congress as a moral claim upon the Government.

Section 151 of the Judicial Code which, as I have stated, is reenacted in this bill, with the proviso which I move to strike out, was substantially a reenactment of section 14 of what was called the Tucker Act (24 Stat. 505), the principal function of which was to empower either House of Congress to refer to the Court of Claims for judicial ascertainment of facts bills providing payment for any claim save a pension or for a gift, grant, or bounty.

Section 14 of the Tucker Act had been preceded by what was called the Bowman Act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. 485), but the Bowman Act had been found ineffective to relieve Congress of consideration of the facts of many claims, because section 3 of that act contained this same provision, namely:

Nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States.

It was to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to consider cases or bills sent to it by congressional reference that the Tucker Act—section 14—was later enacted, and which was carried into section 151 of the Judicial Code. By the Tucker Act and by section 151 of the Judicial Code Congress could relieve itself of the necessity for determining the facts of claims presented by bill.

Under the Bowman and Tucker Acts many claims were reported by the Court of Claims. By the omnibus claims act of 1899 numerous such claims were paid. In 1902 and in 1905 other appropriation acts were enacted for payment of such claims. Then ensued a period of 10 years during which no appropriations were made. Then came the claims act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 962-996), covering only Civil War claims. The Senate also passed a companion bill for payment of similarly reported claims, other than war claims, but this was done on March 3, 1915, too late for that bill to receive consideration in the House of Representatives.

During consideration of the war claims bill in the Senate, late in the day, March 3, 1915, an amendment was offered on the floor, not being a committee amendment, which was adopted practically without discussion or explanation, the chairman of the Committee on Claims accepting it in order that it might go to conference. The bill reached the House of Representatives only a few hours before the expiration of that Congress, however, and the bill never went to conference, so that said amendment was never really given serious consideration at any time.

That amendment is known as the Crawford amendment, having been offered by Senator Crawford. It reads as follows:

SEC. 5. That from and after the passage and approval of this act the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States based upon or growing out of the destruction of any property or damage done to any property by the military or naval forces of the United States during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, nor to any claim for stores and supplies taken by or furnished to or for the use of the military or naval forces of the United States, nor to any claim for the value of any use and occupation of any real estate by the military or naval forces of the United States during said war, nor shall said Court of Claims have jurisdiction of any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States.

Said Crawford amendment was considered by the Court of Claims in case of Chase, reported in Fiftieth Court of Claims, page 293, and it was held that said enactment not only had the effect of precluding the court from entertaining claims thereafter referred to it which were barred by any law, but also divested the court of its power to consider such claims already pending before it and awaiting decision or findings of fact.

In short, as the law now stands and as it would stand if this pending bill were enacted as reported, neither House of Congress can give the Court of Claims jurisdiction to entertain any claim already barred by any law, and, as above pointed out, that provision renders ineffective the earlier part of section 151 of the Judicial Code.

The concluding clause of section 7 of the bill, amendatory of section 151 of the Judicial Code, being inconsistent with the other provisions of the same section, should be omitted. If retained in the bill, then for all practical purposes section 151 of the Judicial Code might as well be repealed outright, instead of being permitted to stand with a proviso which renders it useless for any practical purpose.

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not I have clearly presented the inconsistency of this bill, and I want to read the two provisions which I say are inconsistent, the latter nullifying the first, so that it may more clearly appear. Section 7 of the bill is in these words:

SEC. 7. That section 151 of said Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 151. Whenever any bill, except for a pension, is pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may, for the investigation and determination of facts, refer the same to the Court of Claims, which shall proceed with the same in accordance with such rules as it may adopt and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated."

This is the part to which I call special attention—including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy, together with such conclusions as shall be sufficient to inform Congress of the nature and character of the demand—

And so forth. That clearly confers jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of any and all claims which either House of Congress may refer to it for a finding of the facts, regardless of whether the claim is barred by the statute of limitations, directing the court to report such facts as might appeal to the conscience of Congress in allowing the claim, regardless of the fact that it may be barred by existing law. That question, upon the facts so reported, is one for the Congress then to pass upon.

Section 151 of the Judicial Code is now the law of the land. It is reenacted here. Yet, at the end of the section of this bill reenacting section 151 comes the proviso:

Provided further, That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States—

Directly offsetting the previous direction to that court to report the facts in regard to such claims. I think the Senator in charge of the bill ought to agree to the striking out of this clause, as the necessity for that is so obvious, and really striking it out would not interfere with the purposes of the bill. I have gone at some length in debating the matter because it bears upon the next amendment which I shall offer. That is all I wish to say about this amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I object to the amendment. This section, in the first instance, refers to cases which may be referred to the Court of Claims by either House of Congress for a finding of facts and report to Congress, without authorizing it to render judgment. My recollection is that that was one of the provisions of the Bowman Act. Beginning in line 10, page 4, after providing that the court shall make an investigation, the bill reads:

Provided, however, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court upon the facts established that under existing laws or the provisions of this chapter the subject matter of the bill is such that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and it shall report its proceedings therein to the House of Congress by which the same was referred to said court.

The proviso I have just quoted gives the court jurisdiction to render a final judgment. The first part of the section relates simply to a reference of claims by either House of Congress to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts and its opinion thereon, but this goes a step further, and authorizes the court to render a final money judgment in those cases. Hence the necessity for the last proviso, to which the Senator referred, and which he criticizes. It is necessary to maintain that provision in the bill.

March 4, 1915, in an omnibus claims bill, by adopting the Crawford amendment, as it is called, Congress took away all the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims in a number of war-claims cases:

That from and after the passage and approval of this act the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States based upon or growing out of the destruction of any property or damage done to any property by the military or naval forces of the United States during the war for the suppression of the rebellion; nor to any claim for stores or supplies taken by or furnished to or for the use of the military or naval forces of the United States, nor to any claim for the value of any use or occupation of any real estate by the military or naval forces of the United States during said war, nor shall said Court of Claims have jurisdiction of any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States.

That is now a part of the law adopted in the Crawford amendment, and we are simply repeating it here:

Nor shall said Court of Claims have jurisdiction of any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States.

We are carrying that language into the provision.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will say to the Senator that I am going to offer an amendment to repeal the Crawford amendment when the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. NELSON. By striking out the proviso to which the Senator refers the door would be opened wide. All we would have to do in that event would be to refer one of the claims for a finding of facts in the first instance.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am offering to repeal it only to the extent of cases which would then already have been referred to and were pending in the court. I would not offer an amendment to open the door wide. But in discussing the amendment which we have before us and which is now under consideration is it not a fact that the proviso is antagonistic to the law which I read in the first part of the act of 1915, giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction of cases that may be referred by Congress?

Mr. NELSON. That relates to cases which are not outlawed, but if the court has no right to render final judgment why should cases be referred there by either House of Congress?

Mr. SHIELDS. It would be for the purpose of finding the facts and allowing them to be reported to Congress, and then the Congress could determine whether in good conscience there were such equities involved as would justify payment of the claim.

Mr. NELSON. But the Senator overlooks the fact that when the case is referred to a court of this kind the court can go on and render final money judgment.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then the proviso ought to be limited so as not to be antagonistic to the previous part of it, withholding from the court jurisdiction to enter judgment, but leaving it with jurisdiction as provided in the first part to consider barred claims and report the facts to the Congress. I am willing that an amendment shall be made to that effect. I am not asking that the door be opened wide as to barred claims.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I believe that the views of Senators with reference to this particular matter may be reconciled by a slight amendment of the proviso which the Senator from Tennessee proposes to eliminate. The main purpose of the bill is to authorize the reference by either House of Congress to the Court of Claims of any claim—that is, any claim, whether it is barred or not—to find the facts and report the same to the house in which it originated. But there is also incorporated the proviso to which the Senator from Minnesota refers, to the effect that if the claim is of such character as that the Court of Claims has jurisdiction to render judgment it may go on and render judgment.

Now no one can find any fault whatever with a statute which would authorize Congress to refer any claim whatever to the Court of Claims to find the facts, whether it is barred or whether it is not barred, the facts to be reported back to Congress for further action by it. But in order to make the statute consistent, of course, with the Crawford Act, we must not give that court jurisdiction to render judgment in a case that is barred by the statute of limitations, because that is excluded by the Crawford Act, being a portion of the act of 1915. The matter would be made entirely clear, it seems to me, if we inserted after the word "claims," at the top of page 5, in line 1, the words "to render judgment as herein provided," so the proviso would read:

And provided further, That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to render judgment as herein provided shall not extend to or include any claim which is now barred by the provision of any law of the United States.

That would leave the matter in the shape that either House of Congress may refer to the Court of Claims any bill, whether it is for a claim barred or a claim not barred, to find the facts and report to the Congress, but the Court of Claims would not have jurisdiction to render judgment on any claim that was barred by the statute of limitations, whatever facts it may find otherwise. With that language incorporated, the statute would be consistent. Then, of course, if the view prevailed that we ought to repeal the Crawford amendment, as the Senator from Tennessee seems to think, of course we should also consider that; but the two would be made entirely consistent by the incorporation of the words which I suggest. Accordingly, it being parliamentary, I move to amend by inserting after the word "claims," on page 5, in line 1, the words "to render judgment as herein provided."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. May I have just one moment on that point?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely want to suggest that it looks like the pending bill may take considerable time. I had hoped we might go through the calendar and dispose of bills to which there is no serious objection. It would not take very much time to dispose of them. That is one reason why I was perfectly willing to go on with the calendar. If the pending bill is going to take considerable further time, I would appeal to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and ask him if he will not let it go over so that it can be taken up on some future day.

Mr. SHIELDS. Before any action is taken, I wish to say in regard to the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that I had just suggested that course to the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. If he wishes to deprive the Court of Claims of jurisdiction of claims that were barred by the statute of limitations, the proviso should be so amended as to withhold jurisdiction—not jurisdiction to entertain the claim but simply to enter final judgment upon the reports made. That is what I think, under a proper construction of the whole act, it would mean.

But it is clearly doubtful because, broad as it is, it would repeal the clause in the beginning of section 151 of the act or section 7 of the pending bill, allowing a reference of claims which may for some cause be barred. I have an impression, as I see it now, that the amendment of the proviso as suggested by the Senator from Montana, and as I likewise suggested to the Senator from Minnesota, would relieve the difficulty.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator would have no objection to the amendment in any event?

Mr. SHIELDS. I would have no objection to the proviso if so amended that it merely applied to the court rendering final judgment.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator would favor the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; I had just suggested it to the Senator from Minnesota. I ask the Senator from Florida, who I understand is interested in the measure, if he does not think that would meet the equities and the demands of the situation?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am inclined to think so.

Mr. NELSON. I understood that the Senator from Montana had an amendment which he suggested.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have suggested to insert after the word "claims," in the first line on page 5, the words "to render judgment as herein provided," so that it shall read:

And provided further, That jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to render judgment as herein provided shall not extend to or include—

And so forth. We would then be entitled to refer any claim from either House of Congress to the Court of Claims, whether it be barred or not barred, to find the facts and report those facts to Congress; but it should have no jurisdiction under any circumstances to render judgment in the case of a claim that was barred by the statute.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think that would remove the antagonism which now exists to the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I do not believe we ought to change it. It is the existing law. It is a part of the Crawford amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I think I can make the matter clear to him. The Crawford amendment did not deal with that section of the statute which provided for referring to the Court of Claims claims upon which a reference was to be made back to the House of Congress in which it originated. The Crawford amendment related only to those claims upon which the court had the power to render judgment. It is perfectly plain from the language of the act.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will call the attention of the Senator to another phase of the Crawford amendment. It was drawn up in a hurry on the floor and presented about 10 o'clock at night. It only applies to claims growing out of property taken during the Civil War, but it is being construed to apply to all claims against the Government, especially where they are barred by the statute of limitations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims under which it is authorized to render a judgment is set forth in what is designated as section 1136 of the United States Compiled Statutes. Under that section there is not any reference back to Congress or any finding of fact or anything of that kind, but judgment is rendered against the United States.

In 1915 we passed what is known as an omnibus claims bill; that is to say, judgment having been rendered by the Court of Claims in a large number of claims—bear in mind, judgment having been rendered—appropriations were made to meet those judgments. As a part of that act the Crawford amendment was tacked on which provides—

That from and after the passage and approval of this act the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States based upon or growing out of the destruction of any property or damage done to any property by the military or naval forces of the United States during the war for the suppression of the rebellion; nor to any claim for stores and supplies taken by or furnished to or for the use of the military or naval forces of the United States; nor to any claim for the value of any use and occupation of any real estate by the military or naval forces of the United States during said war; nor shall said Court of Claims have jurisdiction of any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States.

That is designated as 1136a in the compilation to which I have referred, and it refers back to section 1136, which confers upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to render judgment against the United States.

Mr. President, section 1142 of the Compiled Statutes refers to the reference of claims to the Court of Claims, not to rendering judgment upon them, but merely to find the facts and report back to Congress; and there is no limitation to that section. Touching the statute of limitations, it reads as follows:

Whenever any bill, except for a pension, is pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person—which is exactly the language of the provision that is before us, section 1142 concludes with this proviso:

Provided, however, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court upon the facts established that, under existing laws or the provisions of this chapter, the subject matter of the bill is such that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either pary such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and it shall report its proceedings therein to the House of Congress by which the same was referred to said court.

I have no doubt that when it undertakes to do that it is controlled by the provisions of the preceding section, to the effect that it shall not have jurisdiction over claims barred by the statute of limitations. So we ought not to pass a statute here, as it seems to me, providing for the reference to the Court of Claims of any claim, barred or unbarred, to be reported back to the House submitting it, and then provide that the Court of Claims shall have no jurisdiction—which means no jurisdiction at all—in case of a claim barred by the statute of limitations, but that provision should be made to apply only to jurisdiction so far as it extends to the rendition of a judgment. If the claim is barred by the statute, the court will report that fact to Congress, and Congress will take whatever action in the premises may seem appropriate. So I think the language which I have suggested will make the pending bill entirely consistent with the purpose of Congress as heretofore expressed in the statutes to which I have referred.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana if all the court could do would be to ascertain that the claim is barred by the statute or would the court find the facts? Would it have jurisdiction to find the facts or would it be estopped when it found the claim barred by the statute?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would have jurisdiction to find the facts by virtue of the first part of the section which authorizes Congress to refer any claim there, but it would be deprived of jurisdiction to render judgment in the matter of the claim.

Mr. SHIELDS. That was the existing law.

Mr. NELSON. As I understand, the Senator from Montana has an amendment to the last proviso.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator be good enough to have it stated?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that my amendment may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 1, after the words "Court of Claims," it is proposed to insert the words "to render judgment as herein provided," so that the additional proviso will read:

And provided further, That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to render judgment as herein provided shall not extend or include any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. I shall make no objection to the amendment in that form.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understood it would be out of order to present an amendment while another amendment is pending, but I will accept that as a substitute for the amendment which I offered to strike out the whole section.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understood that the Senator had moved to strike out the proviso, and I thought the proviso should be perfected before the motion should be put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana is correct.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was merely trying to straighten the matter out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I offer another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his previous amendment?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee about how long he thinks it may take to dispose of the pending bill?

Mr. SHIELDS. I presume it will take half an hour. The main contention on which I shall insist is yet to come.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from Minnesota. The Senator from Tennessee states that the main point in which he is interested in regard to this bill is still to come. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether or not he would be willing to let the pending bill go over? As the Senator knows, we took up the calendar in the hope that we would dispose of bills to which there was no serious objection, but not with the idea of taking all the afternoon on any one particular bill. There are several Senators who are interested in bills on the calendar who think they will not take very much time, and I had hoped we might accommodate them.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Tennessee has no objection I am willing to have the bill temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not hear the statement of the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Minnesota states that if the Senator from Tennessee has no objection he will allow the pending bill to be passed over. Of course, I could ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate at any time and thus shut off every other measure, but I do not desire to do that.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will offer no objection to any disposition of the measure that the Senator from Minnesota desires to make.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, I ask that we may proceed with the calendar where we left off awhile ago.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, accede to the request of the House for a conference, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

RECONSIDERATION OF BILLS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been attending a meeting of the Foreign Debt Commission and for that reason was absent from the Chamber this afternoon. I understand that during my absence the Senate passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps; the bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was passed; and the bill (S. 1861) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions.

I ask that the vote by which those measures were passed may be reconsidered, for I think that when they are fully explained on the floor of the Senate, Senators would not be in favor of their passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEW. I dislike to object to the request, but I wish the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] might be present.

Mr. SMOOT. I am willing to let the one in which the Senator from New York is interested go over until he is here, or until to-morrow, but I want to have my motion pending.

Mr. NEW. If the motion is pending, that is all right.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and the other two I want to have reconsidered or the motion pending as to all three.

Mr. NEW. I suggest to the Senator that he merely have his motion pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not quite certain what the Senator from Utah is now requesting.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether I have a right to submit one motion and have it pending or not. It would stop the bills going to the House if it were pending. I am perfectly willing that the motion shall be pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator may make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I move that the votes whereby Senate Joint Resolution 41, Senate bill 2589, and Senate bill 1861 were passed may be reconsidered.

Mr. NEW. And the motion will be pending until to-morrow?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Utah will be entered.

RURAL-CREDIT FACILITIES.

Mr. McLEAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4280) to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States; and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 998) thereon.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 253) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of the President and Vice President and Members of Congress and providing for the election of President and Vice President by direct vote was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2792) for the relief of John L. Livingston was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF PUBLIC-BUILDING CONTRACTORS.

The bill (H. R. 7658) to amend the act approved August 25, 1919, entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and works under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to make a very brief statement in regard to this bill. If its purpose is understood, I think there can be no objection to it, for certainly it is a very meritorious measure.

There was an act passed in 1919 permitting contractors who had taken contracts for the erection of public buildings prior to the outbreak of the war where they were interfered with in their work by the Government because of the activities of the Army and Navy to submit their claims to the Treasury Department for settlement. Hundreds of claims have been thus submitted, and I have never as yet heard the criticism regarding those claims that they are unjust. There was one claim, however, of a contractor—and it was a very small claim—that was not submitted sufficiently early to come within the time limit, which expired 60 days after the passage of the act to which I have referred. That contractor was mentally disabled and was taken to a sanitarium for treatment, remaining there for a year. Meanwhile his business was left unsettled, and nobody knew anything at all about any claim he might have had. This bill simply gives to that contractor, or any others, if there be any, permission to appear before the Treasury Department and submit their claims. I know of only the one contractor, but if there be others they certainly ought to come within the purview of the proposed legislation. I think with that explanation there can be no objection to the measure.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I do not believe in opening the door in such cases. If the bill applied only to one man, I should not object, but I shall have to ask that the bill go over.

Mr. FERNALD. It would seem to me if there were other like cases where men were mentally disabled and were taken to sanitariums they certainly ought to have an opportunity to present their claims, as they would have in most of the States where the statute of limitations in such cases is waived. I trust there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DIAL. I will have to ask that the bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I appeal to my friend from South Carolina to allow this bill to pass. I realize that this is giving a short time within which to permit this claimant to file his claim, but the record shows conclusively that this man was mentally incapacitated during the time within which the claim should have been presented. In many of the States where there are statutes of limitation limiting the time within which an action shall be brought there is also a provision that in case of mental disability or similar disability the statute shall be suspended, and that is practically what this is. It is simply suspending, for a short period, the limitation of the enabling act which was passed by the Congress, in order to enable this man to file his claim, and it is because of that disability.

Mr. DIAL. If it is limited to this one man I have no objection, but I do not want to open the door here to a flood of claims.

Mr. POMERENE. It is limited to this one claim, is it not?

Mr. FERNALD. It is not specifically limited to it, but I know of no other.

Mr. DIAL. I have no objection to this one claim, but I do not want to open the door so as to enable numerous other people to come in and file claims.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to its being limited to this one claim. It is the only one I know about.

Mr. FERNALD. It is the only one that has been presented. I suggest limiting it to the claim of William Dall, of Cleveland, Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments offered by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "upon," it is proposed to strike out "any" and insert "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the same line, after the word "claim," it is proposed to insert the words "of William Dall, of Cleveland, Ohio."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, after the words "of the," it is proposed to strike out the word "person" and insert "said William Dall."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF CERTAIN WAR TROPHIES.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 250) to donate to the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States certain war trophies captured by or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States in the World War was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to donate to the national museum of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States at their national headquarters at New York, N. Y., such of the war devices and trophies captured or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States from the armed forces of Germany and allied nations as may be requested by the official in charge of that institution: Provided, That not to exceed one of each caliber of cannon and carriage or one each of the more general types of machine guns, minenwerfers, mortars, bomb throwers, flame throwers, and gas projectors may be included in this donation.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3247) to transfer to the classified service agents and inspectors in the field service, including general prohibition agents and field supervisors appointed and employed pursuant to the national prohibition act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CALDER. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PRACTICE OF OPTOMETRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2822) to regulate the practice of optometry in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "ascertaining departures from the normal, measuring their functional powers," and insert "determining visual defects"; on page 2, line 18, after "$500," to strike out "at the discretion of the court"; on the same page, line 21, after the word "imprisoned," to insert "in the District jail"; on line 22, after the word "both," to strike out "at" and insert "in"; on page 3, line 2, after the word "ten," to insert "optometrists"; on line 3, after the words "submitted by," to insert "a majority vote at some regular meeting of"; on line 6, after the words "age of," to strike out "25" and insert "21"; on line 11, after the word "board," to insert "of optometry"; on line 18, after the word "years," to strike out "vacancies on the said board shall be filled by the said commissioners for the unexpired term only," and insert "and in case of death, resignation, or removal of any member the vacancy for the unexpired term shall be filled by the said commissioners in the same manner as other appointments"; on page 4, line 13, after the word "improper," to strike out "or unprofessional"; on page 5, line 22, after the word "give," to insert "such"; on the same line, after the word "bond," to strike out "to the Board of Optometry" and insert "for the performance of his duties as the commissioners"; on line 24, after the word "Columbia," to strike out "with surety to be approved by the board in the sum of $2,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office" and insert "shall require"; on page 6, after line 2, to strike out "Such bond with the approval of the board shall be placed in the custody of the president of the board"; on line 7, after the word "board," to strike out "and the" and insert "which salary and all"; on line 12, after the word "board," to insert "and"; on line 13, after the word "year," to insert "if any surplus remains"; on line 16, after the word "determine," to strike out the comma and the words "and the balance then remaining, if any, shall be retained by the board as a fund in the custody of the secretary-treasurer to meet additional needful and necessary expenses for conducting the affairs of the board"; on page 7, line 4, after the word "of," to strike out "90 days" and insert "one year"; on line 25, after the word "good," to insert "moral"; on page 8, line 23, after the word "by," to strike out "acceptable certificate" and insert "certificate acceptable to the board"; on page 9, after line 10, to strike out "Any student entering upon the study of optometry in a registered optometrist's office may file with the Board of Optometry an application for, and upon payment of a fee of $5 for the same shall receive a certificate of fact; only candidates so registering and having served as such not less than three years, and shall have the preliminary educational qualifications as required by the board and be more than 21 years of age, shall thereupon be entitled to take the standard examination, without the previous attendance at a school of optometry as in this paragraph hereinbefore set forth"; on page 9, line 22, after the word "board," to insert "with the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia"; on line 23, after the word "is," to strike out "vested with authority on its part" and insert "authorized and empowered"; on page 10, line 17, after the word "shall," to strike out "have the privilege of continuing the practice of optometry for a period of six months and of," and insert "after the expiration of six months and within two years, have the privilege of"; on line 21, after the word "fee," to strike out "But in the event of his failure to pass a second examination he shall thereafter, at the discretion of the board, cease to practice optometry in the District of Columbia"; on page 12, line 6, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$15" and insert "$10"; on line 18, after the word "required," to strike out "After five years' retirement the privilege of renewal shall be discretionary with the board"; and on page 13, line 3, after the word "habitual," to strike out "intemperance, the use of spirits, stimulants" and insert "use of," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the practice of optometry is defined to be the application of optical principles through technical methods and devices in the examination of the human eye for the purposes of ascertaining departures from the normal, measuring their functional powers, and the adaptation of lenses for the aid and relief thereof.

SEC. 2. That on and after six months from the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person in the District of Columbia to engage in the practice of optometry or to hold himself out as a practitioner of optometry, or attempt to determine by an examination of the eyes the kind of eyeglasses required by any person, or hold himself out as a licensed optometrist when not so licensed, or to represent himself as capable of examining the eyes of any person for the purpose of fitting glasses, excepting those hereinafter exempted, unless he shall have fulfilled the requirements and complied with the conditions of this act and shall have obtained a license from the District of Columbia Board of Optometry, created by this act; nor shall it be lawful for any person in the District of Columbia to represent that he is a lawful holder of a license as provided by this act when in fact he is not such lawful holder, or to impersonate any licensed practitioner of optometry, or shall fail to register the certificate as provided in section 13 of this act.

Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction for the first offense shall be fined not more than $500, at the discretion of the court, and upon conviction for any subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not less than three months nor more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint a board of optometry consisting of five persons, such persons and those thereafter appointed as hereinafter provided for to be selected from a list of 10 submitted by the District of Columbia Optometric Society, each of whom shall be a citizen of the United States, over the age of 25 years, actually engaged in the practice of optometry as defined in section 1 of this act, and who shall have been engaged in the actual and continuous practice of the same in the District of Columbia for at least three years next preceding his appointment. The said board shall be so appointed within 30 days after the approval of this act, and of the first appointees the said commissioners shall designate two who shall serve for a term of one year, two for a term of two years, and one for a term of three years from the date of said appointment, and each year thereafter the commissioners shall appoint successors to those whose terms expire as members of said board to serve for a term of three years; vacancies on the said board shall be filled by the said commissioners for the unexpired term only.

Each appointee to the board of optometry as hereinbefore provided for shall, within 15 days from the date of his appointment, qualify by subscribing to the following oath of office before any officer authorized to administer oaths in the District of Columbia: "I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully, impartially, with fidelity and according to law, perform the duties of a member of the board of optometry of the District of Columbia, to the best of my ability, so help me God."

Upon such oath being filed with the commissioners, they shall issue to said member a certificate of his appointment.

The commissioners are herewith vested with authority to remove from office at any time any member of said board for neglect of duty, incompetency, improper or unprofessional conduct, or when the license to practice optometry of any member of said board shall have been suspended or revoked.

SEC. 4. That the first meeting of the board of optometry created under the provisions of this act shall be held within 30 days from the date of appointment, at which meeting and at each annual meeting thereafter the members shall organize by electing a president, vice president, and a secretary-treasurer, who shall hold office for one year or until their respective successors have been appointed and have qualified. Said board shall hold its meetings at the end of every six months thereafter at such hour and place as it may designate for the examination of applicants for license to practice optometry in the District of Columbia, and for the transaction of such other business as may legally come before it; and may hold such additional meetings upon the call of the president of the said board or upon a call of a majority of the members of the board as the same become necessary for the examination of applicants for licenses or for carrying into effect the provisions of this act. If the date of any of said meetings shall fall upon a Sunday or a legal holiday, said meeting shall be held on the first business day thereafter.

Three members of the board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and should a quorum not be present on the day appointed for any meeting those present may adjourn from day to day until a quorum be present.

SEC. 5. That the board shall have authority and it shall be its duty to make all by-laws and necessary regulations for the proper discharge of its duties, and submit same to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for approval.

SEC. 6. That before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office the secretary-treasurer of the board shall give bond to the Board of Optometry of the District of Columbia, with surety to be approved by the board, in the sum of $2,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, the premium of such bond to be paid from the funds in the possession of the board. Such bond with the approval of the board shall be placed in the custody of the president of the board.

SEC. 7. That the secretary-treasurer shall receive as compensation for his services an annual salary to be determined by the board, and the other expenses of the board necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be paid from the funds in the custody of the secretary-treasurer for the use of the board upon requisition signed by the secretary-treasurer and countersigned by the president of the board; on the 30th day of June of each year the members of the board shall be paid such reasonable compensation out of the funds in the custody of the board as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may determine, and the balance then remaining, if any, shall be retained by the board as a fund in the custody of the secretary-treasurer to meet additional needful and necessary expenses for conducting the affairs of the board: Provided, however, That said compensation and expenses shall not exceed the amount received by the board under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That the District Board of Optometry shall have an official seal and shall keep a record of its proceedings, a record of registered optometrists and of licenses by it revoked. Its records shall be open to public inspection between the hours of 9 and 3 o'clock of any business day, and it shall keep on file all examination papers for a period of 90 days after each examination. A transcript of an entry in such records, certified by the secretary-treasurer, under the seal of the board, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated. The board shall on or before the 10th day of July in each year make a report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of its official acts during the preceding 12 months ending June 30, and of its receipts and disbursements, and a full and complete report of the conditions pertaining to optometry in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 9. That on and after six months from the passage of this act, as set forth in section 2 hereof, every person desiring to practice optometry, or, if now in practice, to continue the practice thereof, except as herein otherwise provided, shall take an examination as provided in this act and shall fulfill the other requirements as in this act provided.

SEC. 10. That any person who has been engaged in the practice of optometry for at least two full years (one of which must have been in the District of Columbia), immediately prior to the passage of this act, who is more than 21 years of age and of good character, shall be entitled to take the limited examination covering the following only:

(a) The limitations of the sphere of optometry.
(b) The essential scientific instruments used in optometry.
(c) The form and power of lenses used in optometry.
(d) A correct method of measuring hypermetropia, myopia, astigmatism, and presbyopia.
(e) The writing of formulas or prescriptions for the adaptation of lenses in aid of vision.

Any person who has previously taken the limited examination and received certificate of the same as herein provided may also, if he so desires, take the standard examination at any time, any provisions in section 11 hereof to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That failure to pass the standard examination after having qualified under the limited examination as in this paragraph set forth shall not disqualify him as a lawful practitioner.

SEC. 11. That any person over the age of 21 years, of good moral character, who has had a preliminary education equivalent to a two years' course in a first-grade high school (which shall be determined either by examination or by acceptable certificate as to work done in such approved institution), and who is a graduate of a school of optometry in good standing (as determined by the board and which maintains a course in optometry of not less than 1,000 hours), shall be entitled to take the standard examination. Such standard examination shall consist of tests in—

(a) Practical optics.
(b) Theoretic optometry.
(c) Anatomy and physiology and such pathology as may be applied to optometry.
(d) Practical optometry.
(e) Theoretic and physiologic optics.

Any student entering upon the study of optometry in a registered optometrist's office may file with the board of optometry an application for, and upon payment of a fee of $5 for the same shall receive a certificate of fact; only candidates so registering and having served as such not less than three years, and shall have the preliminary educational qualifications as required by the board and be more than 21 years of age, shall thereupon be entitled to take the standard examination without the previous attendance at a school of optometry as in this paragraph hereinbefore set forth.

SEC. 12. That the board is vested with authority on its part to alter, amend, and otherwise change the educational standards at any time, but in altering, amending, or changing said standards the board shall not be permitted to lower the same below the standards herein set forth.

SEC. 13. That every person desiring to be licensed as in this act provided shall file with the secretary-treasurer of the board upon appropriate blank to be furnished by said secretary-treasurer an application accompanied by the recommendation of two reputable citizens, verified by oath, setting forth the facts which entitle the applicant to examination and license under the provisions of this act. The said board shall hold at least two examinations each year. In case of failure at any standard examination the applicant, after the expiration of six months and within two years, shall have the privilege of taking a second examination by the board without the payment of an additional fee. In case of failure at the limited examination hereinbefore provided for the applicant shall have the privilege of continuing the practice of optometry for a period of six months and of taking a second examination without the payment of an additional fee. But in the event of his failure to pass a second examination he shall thereafter, at the discretion of the board, cease to practice optometry in the District of Columbia.

Every applicant who shall pass the standard examination, or the limited examination, as the case may be, and who shall otherwise comply with the provisions of this act, shall receive from the said board under its seal a license entitling him to practice optometry in the District of Columbia, which license shall be duly registered in a record book to be properly kept by the secretary-treasurer of the board for that purpose which shall be open to public inspection; and a duly certified copy of said record shall be recorded in the clerk's office of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and shall be admitted as prima facie evidence in all courts of the District of Columbia in the trial of any cause, and it shall be the duty of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to keep a special book for the purpose of recording said license, and shall, upon application and by the payment of a fee of 50 cents, deliver to any person applying therefor a certificate that the license has been recorded in compliance with the provisions of this act. Each person to whom a certificate of license shall be issued by said board shall keep same displayed in a conspicuous place in his principal office or place of business wherein said person shall practice optometry, and shall, whenever required, exhibit the said certificate to any member or agent of the board.

SEC. 14. That the said board shall charge the following fees for examination, registrations, and renewals of certificates: The sum of $25 for a standard or a limited examination. Every registered optometrist who desires to continue the practice of optometry shall annually, on or before the 10th day of January of each year, pay to the secretary-treasurer of the board a renewal registration fee to be fixed annually by the board, not to exceed $15, for which he shall receive a renewal of his certificate. In case of neglect to pay the renewal registration fee as herein provided the board shall have authority to revoke such license and the holder thereof may be reinstated by complying with the conditions specified in this section, but no license or permit may be revoked without giving 60 days' notice to the delinquent, but the board shall only have the right to renew such license on the payment of the renewal fee with penalty of $5: Provided, That retirement from practice for a period of not exceeding five years shall not deprive the holder of said license the right to renew the same upon the payment of the fee herein required. After five years' retirement the privilege of renewal shall be discretionary with the board.

SEC. 15. That the board shall adopt a seal and license of suitable design and shall have an office in the District of Columbia where examinations shall be held and where all of the permanent records shall be kept.

SEC. 16. That the board may in its discretion refuse to grant a license to any applicant and may cancel, revoke, or suspend the operation of any license by it granted for any of the following reasons: The conviction of crime involving moral turpitude, habitual intemperance, the use of spirits, stimulants, narcotics, or any other substance which impairs the intellect and judgment to such an extent as to incapacitate anyone for the duties of optometry, or for a conviction as provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 17. That any person who is the holder of a license or who is an applicant for a license against whom any charges are preferred shall be furnished by the board with a copy of the complaint and shall have a hearing before the board, at which hearing he may be represented by counsel. At such hearing witnesses may be examined for and against the accused respecting such charges; the board shall thereupon pass upon said charges.

SEC. 18. That any applicant for a license who has been examined by the board of optometry in any of the States of the United States which through reciprocity similarly accredits the holder of a license issued by the board of optometry of the District of Columbia to the full privileges of practice within such State may on the payment of a fee of $25 to the said board and on filing in the office of the board a true and attested copy of said license, certified by the president and secretary-treasurer of the said board, showing the same and also showing that the standard of requirements adopted and enforced by said board is equal to that provided by this act, shall without further examination receive the license: Provided, That such applicant has not previously failed at any examination held by the board of optometry of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 19. That nothing in this act shall be construed as conferring on the holder of any license issued by said board the right to use any title or any word or abbreviation indicating that he is engaged in the practice of medicine, surgery, or the treatment of the eye, of the diagnosis of diseases of or injuries to the human eye, or the writing or issuing of prescriptions for the obtaining of drugs or medicine in any form for the treatment or examination of the human eye.

SEC. 20. That the provisions of this act shall not apply—

(a) To physicians and surgeons practicing under authority or license issued under the laws of the District of Columbia for the practice of medicine and surgery.
(b) To persons selling spectacles and (or) eyeglasses and who do not attempt either directly or indirectly to adapt them to the eye, and who do not practice or profess the practice of optometry.

SEC. 21. That wherever in this act the singular number is used it shall be interpreted as meaning either singular or plural if compatible with the sense of the language used, and when in this act the masculine gender is used it shall be construed as meaning also the feminine gender if not inconsistent with such use.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. O. WHIPPS.

The bill (S. 3364) for the relief of W. O. Whipps was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint W. O. Whipps, formerly a major in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, a captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, to date from July 1, 1920, and to be placed upon the promotion list in such place as is provided by section 24a of the act of June 4, 1920, for persons appointed officers under the provisions of section 24 of said act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH and Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4012) to control the possession, sale, and use of pistols and revolvers in the District of Columbia, to provide penalties, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. STANLEY. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3252) to amend paragraph 8 of the act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have not had time to examine this bill, but I think it is the bill with reference to patrol drivers in the District of Columbia. It makes them regular policemen, which I think the Senator will agree should be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill has some other things in it that I want to look into.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well, then.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice the last proviso, and I call the attention of the Senator from Washington to it, where apparently a considerable sum of difference in salaries from August 1, 1919, to date is to be paid to every officer or member of the Metropolitan police force.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is all right for it to go over, then. I did not know that there was anything else in it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to look into it further.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not examined it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSFER OF SURPLUS BOOKS.

The bill (S. 3244) to authorize the transfer of surplus books from the Navy Department to the Interior Department was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to transfer such books as may not be required for the uses of the Navy Department to the Interior Department as the Secretary of the Interior may consider useful for educational purposes at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and other Indian schools throughout the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF VESSELS FROM NAVY TO COAST GUARD.

The bill (S. 4137) to authorize the transfer of certain vessels from the Navy to the Coast Guard was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transfer to the Treasury Department, for the use of the Coast Guard, such vessel or vessels of the Navy, with their outfits and armaments, as can be spared by the Navy and as are adapted to the use of the Coast Guard.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD CO.

The bill (S. 4029) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Co., and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts supplemental thereto, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in addition to the powers conferred by the act entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Co. and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1871," approved May 2, 1872, the Texas & Pacific Railway Co. shall have power and authority at any time, or from time to time, by resolution of its board of directors, duly adopted at a meeting thereof held in accordance with its by-laws, and with the consent of the holders of a majority in amount of the then outstanding capital stock, expressed by vote in person or by proxy at a special meeting of said stockholders called for the purpose upon such notice as its by-laws require for the calling of such special meeting, to authorize an issue or issues of its bonds for the completion, equipment, maintenance, or repair of its lines of railroads, the funding of any debt, the making of any additions, extensions, or betterments to its property, or for any other lawful corporate purpose, without limitation in amount to $40,000 per mile of its lines of railroad as prescribed by said act of Congress approved May 2, 1872, and to secure said bonds, or any of them, by mortgage or other lien upon all or any portion of its franchises and property.

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of the Texas & Pacific Railway Co., heretofore fixed by its board of directors pursuant to the provisions of said act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, at $50,000,000, may be increased at any time, or from time to time, by resolution of its board of directors duly adopted at a meeting thereof held in accordance with its by-laws and with the consent of the holders of a majority in amount of its then outstanding capital stock, expressed by vote in person or by proxy at a meeting of said stockholders called for the purpose upon such notice as its by-laws require for the calling of such special meeting.

Any additional share of capital stock so authorized shall be entitled to such rights, privileges, and priorities and preferences and be subject to such limitations and restrictions as may be determined by resolution of the board of directors with like consent of the holders of majority in amount of the then outstanding capital stock of the Texas & Pacific Railway Co.: Provided, That each share of outstanding capital stock, preferred or common, shall be entitled to one vote at every stockholders' meeting, which may be voted in person or by written proxy.

SEC. 3. That all power and authority granted by this act, or by any of the aforesaid acts, shall be subject in its exercise to the provisions of the interstate commerce act, or any act amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto from time to time in force, as far as applicable.

SEC. 4. That a copy of the resolution of the board of directors and of the stockholders, or of the proceedings at a stockholders' meeting, authorizing any such increase in capital stock, or the issuance of any such bonds, and of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission or other governmental agency authorizing the same, certified by the secretary of the Texas & Pacific Railway Co., shall be filed and recorded in the Department of the Interior, and when so filed shall be sufficient evidence of the power and authority of the Texas & Pacific Railway Co. to issue such additional stock or bonds.

SEC. 5. That the Texas & Pacific Railway Co., for the purposes of all actions at law by or against it, real, personal, or mixed, and all suits in equity, shall be deemed a citizen of the State of Texas and an inhabitant of the county of Dallas, in said State.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this seems to be an important bill, and I should like to have an explanation of it from the Senator introducing it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill gives the Texas Pacific Railroad Co. the same right that is now possessed by all other railroad companies of the United States not organized under Federal charter to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission and secure permission to increase its capital stock or issue certificates for improvement purposes; that is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not have that power now?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It does not, because the road was organized under a Federal charter and the charter limited capital stock and security issues to certain figures. It can not at present issue additional improvement bonds, even with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it put all other railroads on the same basis?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It puts this railroad on the same basis that the other railroads are on now. Under the present transportation act all other railroads may increase their capital stock or secure the right to issue bonds for needed improvements if the Interstate Commerce Commission approves. This bill gives the Texas Pacific Railroad Co. the same status.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice that the House passed one bill and the Senate committee has recommended the passage of another. What are the differences between the two bills?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The House committee has voted to report the bill as originally introduced, giving the road power to build or acquire extensions. The Senate committee has not gone that far. The Senate committee struck out the first two sections of the bill, which authorized the road to build extensions, and confined the added authority to the issuance of additional capital stock and additional improvement bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has been unanimously reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has approved it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Hastily glancing over it, not having had time to read it, it seems to be a bill of a good deal of importance, giving considerable additional power.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It gives them the same power other roads have.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I recall that the Judiciary Committee directed that a report be made favoring the enactment of the bill with the first two sections stricken out.

Mr. SHEPPARD. So it did; and that has been done.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why was it entirely reprinted?

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill be read, and let us see whether it struck them out or not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary read the bill. We can follow the reading and see what the bill provides. I have no doubt the Senator from Texas is accurate about it, but it seems such an important matter that we all had better look over it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Perhaps I might say something in advance that would be enlightening.

The Texas Pacific Railroad Co. was incorporated by act of Congress in 1871, authorized to construct a road from Marshall, Tex., to the Pacific coast. It never did construct a line outside of the State of Texas to the west, its western terminus being at the Rio Grande River, some distance east of El Paso. It runs into El Paso over the tracks of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Afterwards, however, it was authorized to construct a line eastward to Shreveport, and that is all it has ever constructed—a road from the Rio Grande across the State of Texas to Shreveport, in the State of Louisiana. However, it acquired various lines in the State of Louisiana, giving it connection with New Orleans.

Sections 1 and 2 of the bill as reported to the House extended the Federal incorporation act and the charter of the Texas Pacific Railroad over these lines acquired by it, running from Shreveport, La., to New Orleans, La. The Judiciary Committee concluded that they would not extend the charter of the Texas Pacific Railroad Co. It was incorporated only with the idea that it would construct a transcontinental line of railroad, and it never did. Even the reason why it ever got a Federal charter has failed, and the committee believed it ought not extend Federal authority over any roads it has since acquired, the existence of which depend upon State laws.

It is limited to the act of its incorporation, the act of Congress, both in the amount of stock it may issue and in the amount of bonds it may issue. If it had been incorporated under a State charter, it would go to the State of its creation to get power to issue a greater amount of stock and a greater amount of bonds, but it could not issue those stocks and bonds without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is obliged, accordingly, to come to the Congress of the United States, which created it, in order to get authority to make further issuance of stock and bonds. But the bill provides that it can issue such additional stock and bonds only upon the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which puts it upon the same footing with railroads incorporated under State acts, as the Senator from Texas has said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Have all other railroads the right to issue unlimited amounts of stock and bonds?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; they have the right to issue stock and bonds to such an extent as the State from which they derive their charter permits. None of them, I apprehend, have unlimited power; but whatever right is given to them by the charters of the States incorporating them, they can not issue, even though the State authorizes them to issue, without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, as I understand, this is a Federal corporation, and under this bill it would have the right to issue stock and bonds in an unlimited manner, except so far as it is prevented by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the Senator states that erroneously.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me see what it says here.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It must make application first. The proper statement is that it may create additional issues, provided the commission permits.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill provides:

That the capital stock of the Texas & Pacific Railway Co., heretofore fixed by its board of directors pursuant to the provisions of said act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, at $50,000,000, may be increased at any time, or from time to time, by resolution of its board of directors duly adopted at a meeting thereof held in accordance with its by-laws and with the consent of the holders of a majority in amount of its then outstanding capital stock, expressed by vote in person or by proxy at a meeting of said stockholders called for the purpose upon such notice as its by-laws require for the calling of such special meeting.

Apparently that gives them an unlimited right.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I call the Senator's attention to section 3 and ask him to read it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Apparently that merely limits it to the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, as I understand it, it will then have an advantage over other railroads. If this bill passes, that railroad company will have the right to issue unlimited stock and bonds, if it can get the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission to do it, while other railroads, organized in various States, are limited by the provisions of the State laws. I see in section 5 that it is to all intents and purposes to be made a citizen of the State of Texas. Why should it not be limited in its issuance of stock by the laws of the State of Texas? It will not be under this bill. I just call the Senator's attention to it. It seems to me under this bill the railroad would be given very broad powers.

Mr. SMITH. I would like to state to the Senator from Tennessee that the comparatively new limitation, or new statute, requiring every railroad, before it issues any additional stock or enters into any additional bond issue, to carry its case before the Interstate Commerce Commission was passed in order to avoid any excessive issue of stock over and above the real investment for public use. There has been such a cry over the country of watered stock and inflated values that we passed an act some time ago requiring all railroads, before any future issue of stock or bonds, to apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and under the terms of that law, in their permission to these railroads they can not authorize the issuance of bonds and stock in excess of the amount actually invested for public use.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator say whether there are any limitations or restrictions upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, other than the exercise of their good judgment in the matter?

Mr. SMITH. I do not recall just the verbiage of the law, but the law clearly sets forth that the issue of stocks and bonds shall not exceed the actual investment for public service.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator recalls that the Esch-Cummins law made a good deal of watered stock good.

Mr. SMITH. That is different.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me we ought to be very careful about the issuance of stocks and bonds in the future.

Mr. SMITH. That was the reason we passed the act to which I referred, in order that public carriers shall hereafter go to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to issue certain debentures against their property, and that they shall not exceed the amount actually invested.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator tell us whether or not that is largely a formality; or does the Interstate Commerce Commission make a real examination?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will understand, of course, that that would not authorize the issuance of stocks and bonds greater than the value of the property. That is not to be imagined.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have been trying to get a valuation of the railroads for a long time, and that has not been accomplished yet, as I am informed. I am not going to object to the passage of this bill, but I have very grave doubts about whether we ought to give this unlimited right to any railroad to issue stock, and I doubt if we ought to give it the right to issue bonds.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator from Tennessee will allow me, the Senator from Montana was exactly right in stating that it makes practically no difference what the source of the charter is, whether it is the Federal Government or a State, when it comes to the limitations on stock and bond issues; and I do not know whether the language of that statute would effect it. They say you might have carte blanche, but under the statute, whether it was a Federal charter or a State charter, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have to limit the issue to the valuation of the property.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can understand that. I have no knowledge about this except from a hasty reading of the bill. I hope it has been hedged around so that there can be no doubt about it, and I am glad to hear what the Senator from Montana and the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Texas have said about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If it were not for the provisions of the existing law no one could controvert the Senator's argument that there should be a limitation, but in the estimation of the commission there is now a limitation; that is to say, the limitation is in the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which, as the committee thought, was very much better equipped to say what the limitation should be than we are in this hasty way and without the information. We thought very seriously about fixing a limit, and the chairman of the committee [Mr. NELSON] thought it would be wise to fix a limit upon the amount of stock and the amount of bonds; but it seemed reasonable to imagine that in 15 or 20 years from now they would have to come back to Congress to get an extension again, because, as the Senator knows, it is becoming more and more expensive; the equipment is of a higher class, the roadbed is better, and all that kind of thing. They would be obliged to double-track the road, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I would be very much better pleased to have them come back to get an extension of the limitation as to the amount of stock they could issue in the future than for them to improvidently issue stocks and bonds now and then come back some years afterwards and ask us to pass another bill like the Esch-Cummins bill to make the improvident stock and partially valueless stocks and bonds good. That is my opinion about it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it fair to state that there is no such provision in the Esch-Cummins law.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have a difference of opinion about that. I think there is.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Esch-Cummins law does not deal with the stocks and bonds of railroad companies in that connection. There is no provision in the Esch-Cummins Act that validates stocks and bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. While there is no express provision, there is a provision in the Esch-Cummins law that requires the rates to be made so as to bring 6 per cent to the railroad companies.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; that is not correct either.

Mr. McKELLAR. Substantially so. It requires rates to be raised so as to produce a reasonable return on the capital, and that reasonable return has added very much to the value of the stocks and bonds of the railroads.

Mr. ROBINSON. That statement is totally inaccurate. There is not a word in the Esch-Cummins law that provides for a return on the capital of the railroads. In the provision of the Esch-Cummins law to which the Senator refers, the provision which I think he must have in mind, is that for a period of two years after the passage of the Esch-Cummins Act, a period expiring, as I remember, about March 1, 1922, thus having already expired, it was provided that as a rule of rate making, considering the roads as a whole or in groups, the rate of 5½ per cent on the actual aggregate value of the railroad property held and used for transportation should be considered a fair return. After that time the Interstate Commerce Commission was authorized to fix what should constitute a fair return but it has no relation whatever to stocks and bonds, it does not deal with the stocks and bonds, and does not take them into consideration. It takes into consideration the value of the property held and used for transportation.

Mr. McKELLAR. The valuation fixed under the terms of the Esch-Cummins law by the Interstate Commerce Commission is considerably more, perhaps several billion dollars more, than all the stock and all the bonds of the railroads, and therefore a provision requiring 6 per cent or providing for a 6 per cent return on the valuation fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission would undoubtedly be very much better for the railroads than if it were to require a similar return on all the stocks and bonds of the railroads because the valuation is greater than the amount of the stocks and bonds.

Mr. ROBINSON. With the further indulgence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], of course, under the Constitution of the United States a railroad engaged in interstate commerce is entitled to a fair return on the value of its property held in use for transportation. The effect of the provision of the Esch-Cummins Act to which the Senator has referred was to define what constituted a fair return. For a period which has already expired, it was defined at 5½ per cent, and, under some conditions, one-half of 1 per cent additional, making a total of 6 per cent that might be allowed. But in no case is the commission authorized, in determining the question of rates or in determining the amount of securities that may hereafter be issued, to take into consideration anything else than the value of the investment itself, the value of the property held and used for transportation, and the public interest as well as the needs of the roads. That is as stated by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I merely desire to add that I have every reason to believe the Interstate Commerce Commission thoroughly scrutinizes the amounts of the stocks and bonds which the railroads are authorized to issue, and furthermore they even look into the application of the funds arising from those stocks and bonds or the purpose for which they are issued. They give it most careful attention, I am sure.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am delighted to hear that is correct. I hope the Interstate Commerce Commission will scrutinize all applications for an increased issue of stocks and bonds by any of the railroad companies. Railroad stocks and bonds have been improvidently issued in the past, as we all know, but I hope it will not be done in the future. I am not going to object to the Senator's bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have listened with great interest to the suggestions of the Senator from Tennessee, and I am perfectly willing to place in the bill an absolute limitation on the maximum amount of the capital stock and the maximum amount of bonds, any increase in either, however, to be subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would feel very much easier about it if the Senator would offer such an amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am willing to have a limitation both as to the capital and the bonds. I move, therefore, to insert in line 17, page 7, after the numerals "$40,000" the words "but not in excess of $65,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the chair). The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The amendment proposed to the amendment of the committee is on page 7, line 17, after the numerals "$40,000," to insert "but not in excess of $65,000."

Mr. McKELLAR. Is not the Senator putting a very liberal limitation on that? If it were thought worth while to limit it to $40,000 a mile when the first law was enacted, is not the extension of it to $65,000 a mile now a very large extension?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The $40,000 limit was fixed more than a generation ago, and the Senator knows how costs have increased since then. At any rate, no increase whatever may be made without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. But I doubt if they have increased to that extent. While it was perhaps temporarily so during the war, it is not so now. Would not the Senator be willing to accept a modification of his amendment fixing the amount at $50,000 a mile?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is not only a question of costs having increased but equipment has vastly increased. We now have rails weighing 100 pounds to the yard, and at that time they weighed 30 or 40 pounds. At that time we used to lay the rails practically upon the open prairie. Now we have to have a ballasted roadbed. At that time trains consisted of perhaps 10 cars, while now we have trains consisting of 75 or 80 cars. The Senator will see that a limitation which was liberal in 1871 would not have any application now at all.

Mr. SMITH. May I also call the Senator's attention to the fact that the ties upon which the rails were laid were generally delivered at that time for 25 cents each, while now they bring $1.25 to $1.50 each?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, while the Senators are, and they have unquestionably looked into the matter very fully. I have great confidence in them. I say again I am not going to object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask for a vote on the amendment which I have offered to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. On page 8, in line 1, after the word "time" where it appears the third time, I move to amend the committee amendment by inserting the words "but not to exceed in the aggregate $75,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 8, line 1, after the word "time" where it appears the third time, the Senator from Texas moves to amend by inserting the words "but not to exceed in the aggregate $75,000,000," so as to read:

> That the capital stock of the Texas & Pacific Railway Co., heretofore fixed by its board of directors pursuant to the provisions of said act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, at $50,000,000, may be increased at any time, or from time to time, but not to exceed in the aggregate $75,000,000.

And so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what is proposed to be done now? Here is a railroad running from El Paso to New Orleans, with many branch lines——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought it had bought many branch lines.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Connecting lines.

Mr. McKELLAR. They do not belong to the same company?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. They own the line from Shreveport to New Orleans.

Mr. McKELLAR. All under a capitalization of $50,000,000?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. What lines are they going to acquire or build that would justify such an enormous increase in the capital stock?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They have no power under the bill to acquire additional lines at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know, but they want to increase their capital stock. What is the necessity for it? Can the Senator enlighten me about it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is essential, as I understand it, to enable the company to issue preferred stock. Under the present charter it can issue only common stock. The road has arranged to exchange an outstanding issue of $25,000,000 income bonds for preferred stock as a part of its plans to secure additional funds for development and improvement. This exchange, however, will be subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The commission examined the bill before it was introduced and expressed approval.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to know it was submitted to the commission.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not a dollar of securities or stock authorized in the bill can be issued without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I said before, I am going to yield to the judgment of the Senators who are members of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill amendatory of and supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Co. and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1871, and acts supplemental thereto, approved, respectively, May 2, 1872, March 3, 1873, and June 22, 1874."

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	George	Lenroot	Robinson
Borah	Gerry	Lodge	Sheppard
Brandegee	Glass	McCormick	Smith
Calder	Hale	McKellar	Sterling
Cameron	Harris	McNary	Sutherland
Capper	Heflin	Nelson	Townsend
Colt	Johnson	New	Trammell
Couzens	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Underwood
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Dial	Kellogg	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	Kendrick	Overman	Warren
Fernald	Keyes	Pepper
Fletcher	King	Phipps
Frelinghuysen	Ladd	Reed, Pa.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

SALARIES UNDER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, under the order of procedure as outlined for to-morrow, the annual agricultural appropriation bill is to be called at 12 o'clock. I desire at this time to give notice in writing of a motion to suspend the rule in order that I may propose an amendment to that bill. I ask that the notice may now be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Oregon gives notice that under Rule XL he will move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, in order that he may propose the following amendment to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, to wit:

On page 82, after line 14, to insert the following:

"That hereafter the maximum salary of any scientific investigator or other employee engaged in scientific work and paid from the general appropriations of the Department of Agriculture shall not exceed the rate of $6,500 per annum: Provided, That for the fiscal year 1924 no salary shall be paid under this paragraph at a rate per annum in excess of $5,000 except the following: Not more than 12 in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $5,500 each, and not more than 5 in excess of $5,500 each."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will lie on the table and be printed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The next bill on the calendar was the bill (S. 799) to prevent deceit and unfair prices that result from the unrevealed presence of substitutes for virgin wool in woven fabrics purporting to contain wool and in garments or articles of apparel made therefrom, manufactured in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or transported or intended to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce, and providing penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes.

Mr. DIAL. Let that bill go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 425) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

OWNERS OF THE STEAMSHIP "ESPERANZA."

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 419) for the relief of the owners of the steamship Esperanza, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the claim of the New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co., owner of the American steamship Esperanza, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said vessel and the United States destroyer Connor on the 15th day of February, 1918, off Barnegat Light, N. J., may be sued for by the owner of the said American steamship Esperanza in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owner of the said American steamship Esperanza, or against the owner of the said American steamship Esperanza in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LONG ISLAND RAILROAD CO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 420) for the relief of the Long Island Railroad Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the claim of the Long Island Railroad Co. against the United States for damages alleged to have been sustained by said railroad company's dock, vessels, and marine equipment at Whitestone Landing, N. Y., on the 11th day of December, 1919, as a result of swells caused by the negligent operation of the United States destroyer Broome at an excessive rate of speed, may be sued for by said company in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the Long Island Railroad Co., or against the Long Island Railroad Co. in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS OF THE STEAMSHIP "LEXINGTON."

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 421) for the relief of the owners of the steamship Lexington, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the claim of Colonial Navigation Co., owner of the American steamship Lexington, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said vessel and the United States submarine O-7 on the 6th day of October, 1919, in the East River, N. Y., near Horns Hook, may be sued for by the owner of the said American steamship Lexington in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owner of the said American steamship Lexington, or against the owner of the said American steamship Lexington in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMERCIAL PACIFIC CABLE CO.

The Senate, as in committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3503) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Commercial Pacific Cable Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$35,838.22" and to insert in lieu thereof "$30,490.38," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Commercial Pacific Cable Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,490.38, to reimburse said company for the cost of repairing certain damages done by the United States naval authorities to one of said company's cables in the harbor of San Luis d'Pra, Island of Guam, in September, 1907, as reported to Congress in Senate Document No. 88, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GERTRUDE LUSTIG.

The bill (S. 3668) for the relief of Gertrude Lustig was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina withhold his objection for a moment and allow me to make a statement in connection with this bill?

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this bill for the relief of Gertrude Lustig passed the Senate on a former occasion. I will make just a brief statement of the matter. I shall not go into detail.

Gertrude Lustig for 20 years was a member of the Army Nurse Corps. Shortly after our entrance into the war she was found on duty at the base hospital at the great concentration camp built near Fort Worth, Tex., at which the Thirty-sixth Division was trained. Gertrude Lustig was born in Germany. She was brought to this country as a little baby, I think not more than 1 year old. Some people, for whose motives or judgment I have no admiration, began spreading the story that she was a German spy. She had been in our Nurse Corps for 20 years.

To make a long story short, she was arrested while on duty at the base hospital at Fort Worth, incarcerated in Fort Worth for a considerable period of time without ever being brought to trial, her case was paraded in the headlines of the Fort Worth newspapers, and her name was flashed all over the Southwest as being a traitor to the country which she had served so faithfully for 20 years. After being held in confinement for some time in Fort Worth with the whole community talking about her, and her name and reputation being well-nigh ruined, she was then sent to a detention camp for dangerous enemy aliens. She was kept there for several months, according to my recollection. In the meantime, of course, she was discharged from the Army Nurse Corps. Finally, when the Department of Justice got down to examining into her case, they found that there was no ground whatsoever for the charges against her, and, at the instance of the Attorney General of the United States, she was ordered released from the detention camp. Of course, at that time she found herself discharged, practically dishonorably, from the Army Nurse Corps. The War Department, with the entire approval of General Ireland, the Surgeon General of the Army, took her on again and reestablished her as an Army nurse. I think she is still an Army nurse. This bill is to pay to her the salary which she would have earned had she not been arrested and discharged and detained as a spy. It is a bill in the interest of common justice. The Senate has passed it upon a former occasion, and I hope the Senate will do it again.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the bill was approved by the War Department; was it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was; yes. She is in the service now.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, all I know about this matter is what I have read in the report. It occurs to me that we are setting a very dangerous precedent here. If we are going to undertake to pay people their salaries for the time they were out of employment during the war, there is no telling when we will ever get through with it. To try these cases ex parte seems to me to be a very loose practice, and if we enter upon it I do not see how we will ever get through trying claims in Congress.

Of course, if the lady was innocent, it is very unfortunate that she was arrested; but it seems to me that there should have been some way to get her released. To come here now and pass a bill to pay her salary to her for the time she was out of the service, which is a pretty long time, is contrary to my ideas.

If the Senate wants to vote on the bill, I shall not ask that it go over; I will leave it to the Senate to say what it shall do; but I imagine that if we pass the bill we will have a great many similar claims here. We will be sitting here the same as a trial court, hearing these matters, for a long time to come.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, can the Senator from New York tell us whether this lady has ever made any claim for false arrest against the Government, or has she just contented herself with making a claim for the salary? I want to say to the Senator that it seems to me the case is a most meritorious one, and the claim ought to be paid. I am glad to know that the Senator from South Carolina is going to permit a vote on it, because I expect to vote for it, unless the lady has made claim for damages for false arrest or any other claim against the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the poor woman is quite helpless in the matter. She can not sue the Government of the United States for false arrest.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know; but she can make a claim for it, and I was wondering whether or not she had ever made any claim for that. I take it she has not, if she is in the service of the United States now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. She protested her innocence, and protested it again and again for months, and was finally released and taken back into the Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the claim is a very meritorious one, and I expect to vote for it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York in what respect the principle of this case differs from any other case where a person is wrongfully arrested? In the ordinary case where an individual is arrested unjustly he loses the compensation for whatever employment he may have been engaged in during that time, and, so far as I know, no attempt ever has been made to reimburse any other citizen of the United States for a wrongful arrest. The only difference between this case and the ordinary case is that the individual happens to lose the compensation which she would have received from the Government of the United States during the time of the arrest; that is all. There are, however, hundreds and thousands of people who are wrongfully arrested day after day. They doubtless lose salaries or other compensation for their services which they would have received had they not been arrested, and no attempt is made to reimburse or compensate them for the loss. I do not see how we can differentiate this claim from the claim of any other citizen of the country who was improperly arrested.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not intend to contradict the observations of the Senator from New Mexico in whole; I do in part. At least the average citizen, when arrested, has an opportunity to give bail and go back to his employment pending the trial of his case. This poor person had no chance whatsoever.

She was branded as a dangerous enemy alien engaged in spy work, and she was shut up in a detention camp as an enemy dangerous to this country.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I ask the Senator from New York if there were not a number of people who were likewise treated during the war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know of anyone who was treated in exactly the way that this person was. It is true that there were a large number that were detained as dangerous enemy aliens. In each one of those cases, however, as I understand, the Department of Justice took final jurisdiction after a careful investigation and made up its mind that they were dangerous enemy aliens; and there were quite a number of them confined in the camp, I think, in the State of Georgia. This women, however, it was found, was not a dangerous enemy alien. It was found that she was completely innocent, and her release was promptly ordered; and the War Department took her back into the service, where she has served ever since as a faithful nurse to wounded and injured soldiers.

It may be that other injustices have occurred; but I do not think the fact that other injustices have occurred is an argument to use against this bill, which attempts at least to do justice in this case.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether there was actually any evidence at all of this lady's disloyalty, either from expressions or conduct or anything of that sort? Is there is any proof of it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; the evidence was a "frame up," and was finally so regarded. The people who presented the evidence have disappeared. The authorities have never been able to find them since.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, this claimant, according to the report, was out of employment from September 28, 1918, to May 22, 1919, so it seems to have taken her a good long while to prove her innocence.

Mr. FLETCHER. She seems to have been in prison most of the time, however.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Gertrude Lustig, the sum of $1,286.53, being the amount she would have received as pay and allowances as chief nurse, Army Nurse Corps, from September 28, 1918, the date of her unjustifiable dismissal from that position, to May 22, 1919, the date of her restoration to the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TACOMA TUG & BARGE CO.

The bill (H. R. 966) for the relief of the Tacoma Tug & Barge Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Tacoma Tug & Barge Co., of Tacoma, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $674.22, to reimburse said company as owners of scow No. 8 for damages suffered by their boat as a result of a collision with the U. S. S. Goldsborough at Tacoma, Wash., December 17, 1914.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, without some explanation, I shall object to the passage of that bill. It seems to me that the matter ought to be remitted to the courts for determination.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have examined the reports hurriedly, and I find this state of facts: This scow was tied up. It was run into by the Government boat because a wrong signal was sent to the pilot on the Goldsborough. The damage was done, the actual repairs were made, and a very correct statement shown, and the report shows that this amount of money is the actual expense incurred in repairing the scow. Under those circumstances it seems to me that the Government ought to pay it.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator whether he believes it wise for us to direct the payment of these claims that have not been passed upon by some judicial tribunal, some court or some agency that has been set up for the purpose of making inquiry into them?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it probably would be well for us to set up some such agency, but we have not done it; and if we do not see fit to set up any agency, it seems to me we ought not to delay the payment of just claims on that account. Furthermore, it seems to me that where claims are small, like this, it would be far better if we should authorize the department, for that matter, to adjust the claims and settle them. It would save money to the Government and it would save money to the individual. If he had to go to court, he would have to hire an attorney and we would have to employ attorneys for the Government, and the expenses would be more than the amount of the claim. It seems to me that in a case like this, where the actual damage has been ascertained and the actual cost of repairing that damage—and that is all, according to my understanding of the report, that they ask to be paid—we ought not to hesitate to make the payment. The House has passed upon it.

Mr. KING. I was just going to suggest to the Senator that the Court of Claims was created, in part, to take care of such matters as this. It seems to me that if the present law is not broad enough to refer this case to the Court of Claims, that ought to be done by this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know very much about the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, but if we were to send to that court all cases like this we would have the Court of Claims overwhelmed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the proposal of the Senator from Utah that claims of doubtful validity should be investigated by the Court of Claims, and a finding of fact made, is unquestionably correct; but an examination of the record as it is presented here discloses that no controversy exists either as to the moral liability of the Government or as to the amount of the liability. Since the amount is small, it probably would cost the Government half as much as the entire claim to make a defense; and, as a matter of fact, the Government has no defense. So I think in this case we are justified in passing this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand the department recommends the passage of the bill, and admits negligence on the part of the officers of the Government?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It admits liability.

Mr. FLETCHER. That seems to be the substance of the report, and I think the bill ought to be passed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELAWARE RIVER LIGHTERING CO.

The bill (H. R. 2049) for the relief of the Delaware River Lightering Co. was announced as next in order, and was read.

Mr. KING. Let the report be read.

Mr. ROBINSON. I notice that the bill contains a somewhat unusual provision, to the effect that the payment shall be made under such conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may direct. Some one who is familiar with the bill ought to explain why that provision is inserted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 3461) for the relief of Eugene Fazzi was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4619) for the relief of the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4620) for the relief of Th. Brovig was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4622) for the relief of the Lloyd Mediterraneo Societa Italiana di Navigazione, owners of the Italian steamer Titania, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5249) for the relief of Ephraim Lederer, collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5648) for the relief of Ike T. Boyles was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6177) for the relief of the fishing smack Mary S. Dolbow was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CAPPER. I would like to state to the Senator from South Carolina that the bills now being passed over have all been carefully considered by the Committee on Claims, and I think all of them are meritorious measures, and ought to be passed. They are all bills which have passed the House, and have had the best consideration of the Committee on Claims. If there is some special reason why they should not be passed, I would like to have the Senator state it.

Mr. DIAL. It is getting late in the day, and there are some Senators who are interested in some of these bills who can not be here. So I am going to object to their consideration.

The bill (H. R. 8214) to compensate the owners of the American steamship Vindal for damages and expenses in repairing the said steamship, and to make an appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 9887) for the relief of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. DIAL. I object to all the bills down to calendar No. 964.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator object to the consideration of calendar No. 961, House bill 11939? That is not a claims bill. It is a bill for the authorization of the taxation of national banks. It has been considered by the Banking and Currency Committee for about a year.

Mr. DIAL. I did not notice that number. I thought it was a claims bill. I object to all down to House bill 11939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill (H. R. 10287) for the relief of John Calvin Starr is next on the calendar and will be passed over on objection by the Senator from South Carolina.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The bill (H. R. 11939) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill be read.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he designs to have the bill taken up and passed this afternoon?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think we will have to have a quorum, because a good many Senators are very much interested in the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator can call for a quorum if he desires.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	Fletcher	Lodge	Robinson
Brandegee	George	McCormick	Sheppard
Bursum	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Calder	Harris	McNary	Sutherland
Cameron	Heflin	Nelson	Townsend
Capper	Johnson	New	Underwood
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Couzens	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Williams
Curtis	Kellogg	Overman
Dial	King	Pepper
Ernst	Ladd	Reed, Pa.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on official business.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FERNALD, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. TRAMMELL, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As an executive session is desired, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. BROUSSARD, and Mr. STERLING entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 9, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 8, 1923.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 8, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, with whom there is neither morning nor evening, Thy face is upon us; in many ways we have heard Thy voice; we are Thine and we thank Thee for this relationship; we would be worthier of the Father's care and ask Thee to make us so. Keep alive the sacred flames of our breasts that generate the moral and spiritual powers of our natures. Encourage us in the realization that we are a little part in the great designs of an infinite God. With counsels of wisdom, prudence, and discretion, direct us all this day and unto Thee be the praise. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 6, 1923, and of the proceedings of Sunday, January 7, 1923, was read and approved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Saturday a point of order was pending against the paragraph in the bill beginning on line 124, page 70. The Chair will now hear further argument upon the point of order.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, that point of order that I made was against the proviso, not against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman made the point of order only against the proviso?

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I profess to know nothing about the merits of this paragraph. I have purposely refrained from a consideration of the merits of the paragraph because I wish to discuss it entirely from the parliamentary standpoint, and hope that it may be decided upon this alone and without reference to the merits of the proposition. It is perfectly clear to my mind, and I believe it will be to the Chair, that the latter part of the paragraph in question is legislation and clearly subject to a point of order; but in deciding the point of order I think that the whole paragraph should be considered, so that the ruling may be made broadly upon the whole paragraph and not upon the last clause only. Therefore I shall address my remarks entirely to the first part of the paragraph.

It is one of those cases where the Chair may decide either way and find himself in distinguished company, because there is a very long line of decisions, many of them not very well considered but some of them extremely well considered, and they are not all on one side by any means. I believe that by discerning and distinguishing clearly between those cases in which the ruling was necessary in order to decide the question before the House and those upon which the ruling was merely obiter the Chair will come to the conclusion, as I have, that this is not strictly a limitation but is legislation couched in the form of a limitation. I believe that legislating upon an appropriation bill is a bad way to legislate and that it ought to be discouraged in every proper way. I believe further that legislation under the guise of a limitation is distinctly bad, and therefore that there should always be strict construction of a limitation in order to be sure that it is only a limitation and not legislation, though couched in the form of a limitation. The decisions are quite uniform that where it is simply a limitation, where it simply refers to qualifications that must be possessed by the recipient or beneficiary of the appropriation, the point of order will not lie. It is also clear on the other side that where the language requires additional duties on the part of an official it is legislation and is subject to a point of order. Between these two there is a rather broad twilight zone, a sort of "no man's land," in which there is room for considerable latitude in decisions. I think that this "no man's land" ought to be captured and organized, as far as possible, on the side of strict construction, so far as limitations are concerned, and I think that in this case the Chair will find ground for deciding it on this side.

I refer the Chair in the first place to volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, section 3973. The syllabus of that section is as follows:

While a limitation may provide that no part of an appropriation shall be used except in a certain way, yet the restriction of Executive discretion may not go to the extent of an imposition of new duties.

The bill on which this ruling was made brought about two very important decisions. The first one was upon an amendment offered by Mr. John A. Sullivan, of Massachusetts, to the paragraph in the sundry civil bill relating to the Panama Canal. This is the proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for materials and supplies to be used in the construction of the canal or in connection therewith except as the result of bids advertised in the manner now established by the Isthmian Canal Commission under existing law.

Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota, made the point of order against the amendment, and after the debate the Chairman, who was JAMES E. WATSON, now Senator WATSON, held as follows:

The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is only a limitation on the appropriation and not a change of existing law. Every limitation is, in effect, finally a limitation on the discretion of an officer. It is not permitted that this be affirmatively done, but it may be negatively done, and this amendment, while not drawn in the usual form, and therefore because of its language making it a somewhat closer question, is yet in substance but a limitation, in the opinion of the Chair, on the appropriation, and, therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

On the following day, after the Committee of the Whole had ordered the bill reported back to the House, it was under consideration in the House when again Mr. Sullivan, of Massachusetts, offered a motion to recommit with instructions containing this proviso, which is to be found in section 3935 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 4:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for materials and supplies which are manufactured or produced in the United States unless said articles are sold to the Isthmian Canal Commission at export prices whenever such export prices are lower than the price charged consumers in the United States.

Mr. Tawney again made the point of order that the proposed instructions constituted legislation. Debate arising, Mr. Marlin E. Olmstead, of Pennsylvania, well known to the older Members of this House as one of the best parliamentarians we have ever had, readily distinguished these instructions, as they appeared in the motion to recommit in the form of instructions to the committee, from the amendment proposed the day before in the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Olmstead distinguishes the two in the following language:

While the amendment which he offered yesterday was merely a limitation upon the appropriation itself, this amendment, if I correctly heard it as read by the Clerk, imposes upon the Isthmian Canal Commission, or those who purchased these supplies, an additional duty. The amendment yesterday which the gentleman offered provided that no part of the appropriation should be expended except as the result of bids advertised in the manner now established by the Isthmian Canal Commission under existing law—that is to say, it imposed upon them no duties except those already existing under present law.

At the conclusion of the debate Mr. Speaker CANNON, then in the chair, made a ruling. I shall read only a part of Mr. CANNON'S ruling:

It is conceded that under the law as it is at this time these supplies may be bought anywhere, without regard to where they may be produced, whether in the United States or elsewhere in the world. Now, this is an appropriation for supplies and equipment for construction and engineering and administration departments of the Isthmus of Panama, $9,000,000.

* * * * * * *

The merits of the proposition are not involved in the point of order. What is the object of the motion and of the instruction? If it does not change the existing law, then it is not necessary. If it does change the existing law, then it is subject to the point of order. Much has been said about limitation, and the doctrine of limitation is sustained upon the proposition under the rule that, as Congress has the power to withhold every appropriation, it may withhold the appropriation upon limitations. Now, that is correct. But there is another rule, another phase of that question. If the limitation, whether it be affirmative or negative, operates to change the law or to enact new law in effect, then it is subject to the rule that prohibits legislation upon a general appropriation bill; and the Chair, in view of the fact that the amendment would impose upon the officials new duties as to purchasing canal supplies, has no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that the instructions are subject to the point of order for the reasons stated.

Mr. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, having appealed from the decision of the Chair, the appeal was, on motion of Mr. Tawney, laid on the table—yeas 156, nays 69.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the reasoning of Mr. Speaker CANNON applies with full force to the question now before the Chair. So far as the principle involved is concerned the case then under consideration was more nearly on all fours with the present case than is usually to be found in precedents.

What are the provisions of this proposed paragraph? First:

That none of the money appropriated by this act for the payment of jurors' fees in any of the courts shall be available or used for that purpose unless the actual cost of the trial jury in each case first be ascertained and fixed by the court, and taxed as part of the costs and judgment rendered therefor against the defendant in a criminal case against whom a verdict of guilty has been rendered.

This is the first part of the paragraph only. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the Chair can not find otherwise than that in the form of a limitation this language imposes new duties upon the court. It certainly makes it impossible for this sum to be disbursed, or any part of it, until the court has performed certain new duties. It would be safe to assume that these duties are new because the court is here required to perform them. If it be otherwise, this paragraph would be futile and the committee would not bring it in here, because I am sure this great committee would not propose to do a futile thing. Reading further in the paragraph:

Nor shall any money be available or used for that purpose until execution has been issued and a return of nulla bona thereon has been made by the proper officer. Neither shall any of the money appropriated by this act for the payment of jurors' fees be disbursed or used to pay any jurors' fees whatsoever unless the actual cost of the trial jury be ascertained and fixed by the court and taxed as costs and judgment rendered therefor against the defendant where either the United States or the District of Columbia is plaintiff and the defendant is unsuccessful in the suit.

Mr. Chairman, what is the effect of this language and of the entire proposed paragraph? It is very clear that the House has a perfect right to limit an appropriation to any particular class. Also that it may require any qualifications on the part of the beneficiary as a prerequisite to receiving it. If the paragraph provided that each person who receives any portion of this appropriation shall be able to turn a back handspring and to read the Koran backward and forward we have, if we so desire, the right to make such a foolish requirement. This paragraph, however, does not confine itself to the qualifications of jurors or to limiting the payment of money to only those jurors having such qualifications. In effect the court is here required to do a considerable number of important things that at the present time it is not required to do. It is evident that it is not now required to do them, because if it were there would be no excuse for bringing in this provision. Therefore, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that in construing this matter the Chair should take into consideration, as Mr. Speaker CANNON says, "what is the effect" of the proposed language. Considering it from this standpoint, it seems to me that the Chair will be constrained to come to the conclusion that the effect of this language, and the inevitable effect, will be to impose additional duties upon officials, and therefore "in effect" it changes existing law.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TILSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HILL. I would like, following out what the gentleman stated, to call the attention of the Chair to page 457 of the hearings, in which Mr. Justice McCoy says:

It may be depriving him of his right to a jury trial in the Supreme Court of the District, where criminal cases must be tried by a jury.

Mr. TILSON. My contention is that it imposes additional duties not now required by law. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I should like to ask the gentleman what is the present law in reference to imprisonment for failure to pay costs?

Mr. TILSON. I assume that there is no such law, but the last clause of the paragraph would clearly create law. As I stated in my opening remarks, I did not intend to discuss the last clause in the paragraph, because it seems to me perfectly clear that this clause is legislation and subjects the entire paragraph to a point of order.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The point of order is directed to the whole paragraph?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If that goes out on a point of order the whole goes out?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. The entire proviso must go out anyway on the point of order as the matter now stands. However, it seems to me to be a matter of such far-reaching importance that it should be considered as a whole, and that the ruling ought to be made on the paragraph as a whole, rather than on the last portion only. Otherwise the question can be again raised by the introduction of an amendment leaving off the clause which is so clearly offensive to the rule.

Mr. Chairman, just one additional statement which will sum up what I have said and which I believe will be helpful to the Chair, and possibly to future Chairmen, in deciding questions of limitation upon an appropriation bill. The crux of the question is whether the proposed language is legislation. In determining this question the statu quo, or existing law, is the starting point. What are the powers conferred or the duties imposed by existing law? This being determined, does the proposed language curtail, extend, modify, or change in any respect these powers or duties? Are new duties created or imposed by it? Are additional powers conferred by it? Are powers already granted by existing law taken away? If any one of these questions must be answered in the affirmative, it follows that the proposed language is legislation, for it is only by legislation that any of these results can be accomplished. Properly applying this standard to the case now pending, the Chair can not, in my judgment, come to any other conclusion than that the effect of the proviso in the bill is to legislate, and therefore is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] has discussed this point of order from the same point of view that I intended to take it up, and has done it more ably than I could. I entirely agree with him that there is no doubt but that this is subject to a point of order. The third sentence at least is subject to a point of order, and that would throw out the whole proviso. I am sure the whole proposition is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the only limitation to the rule as then laid down by Mr. Speaker CANNON is that which would bring it within the Holman rule in that it retrenched expenses, and there is no such contention here as to this paragraph. The design of this paragraph, Mr. Chairman, is to keep a bootlegger from asking for a jury. If it were limited to bootleggers I would have no objection to it on its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the Holman rule was in operation at the time of this decision by Mr. Speaker CANNON.

Mr. BLANTON. That is true. The only restriction we have now on the rule then laid down by Mr. Speaker CANNON is there must be a retrenchment in expenses, clearly evident from the language of the paragraph itself, in order to come within the Holman rule. But there is no attempt to bring this within the Holman rule.

I repeat that if this amendment took in only bootleggers I would have no objection to it.

Mr. TILSON. That remark applies only to the merits of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. But the Chair must look to the question of whether or not this is changing existing law. Under existing law anyone charged with crime has the right to a trial by jury. That is one of the fundamental, inherent rights in the country, and I would be the last man on earth to take that right away from anyone. I am just as strong a prohibitionist as our friend the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] is an anti. I want to see all bootleggers put behind the bars, just as much as our friend from Maryland would like to see them given a chromo.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Most of the bootleggers used to be behind the bars. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but a different kind of bar. But I am not in favor of passing any legislation that denies the fundamental right of a trial by jury. I say this does change existing law to that extent, because many people would be deterred from asking for this sacred right of a trial by jury.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman will certainly agree with me that the requiring of additional duties of an official not heretofore required of him means to him a change of existing law, does it not?

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman from Connecticut. This paragraph does change existing law, and is therefore out of order, and it does not come within the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, realizing the importance of this ruling due to the precedent it may establish, has given no little thought to it. The Chair at the outset thanks the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], an authority on parliamentary procedure, for his able argument and clear presentation of the case, both of which fortify the conclusions reached by the Chair. The Chair is cognizant of confusion in the rulings in cases somewhat akin to this one, and realizes that in considering questions of limitations as in determining questions of germaneness there is considerable latitude between what is clearly permissible and what is as clearly repugnant to the rule. The Chair feels that in traversing this twilight zone he is justified in leaning toward the side of conservatism in regard to admission of legislation on appropriation bills. In the last few years there has been a very perceptible increase in the amount of legislative provisions incorporated in bills reported by the Appropriations Committee. The growth of this practice, in the opinion of the Chair, is unwise and is not warranted by the rules or procedure of the House. It is probably due to the fact that, as formerly many of the standing committees had jurisdiction over both appropriations and legislation, a clear distinction between these separate functions was not made in the bills reported, which left the Appropriations Committee in the position of finding that many of the items for which it desired to appropriate were unauthorized. This made it incumbent upon the Appropriations Committee, in order to carry on its work, to devise these legislative limitations.

Under our rules the Committee on Appropriations can consider only questions of appropriations, the subjects of legislation and authorization being confined to the jurisdiction of standing committees constituted for that very purpose and equipped with facilities to conduct investigations. Feeling that each committee should be held strictly to the consideration of its own particular work, the Chair is of the opinion that too much latitude has been given in the employment of limitations, and that the practice of resorting to this method of securing, in an indirect way, legislation on appropriation bills has been abused and extended beyond the intention of the rule. The Chair is therefore constrained to take the view that we should restrict rather than enlarge, limit rather than expand, the power of the Appropriations Committee in placing legislation upon appropriation bills. [Applause.]

The Chair asks the indulgence of the committee in making some observations on this mooted subject of limitations, and in doing so desires to thank the able parliamentarian for his assistance and suggestions.

Since Congress has the right to appropriate, Congress has the right to refuse to appropriate, even though the appropriation is authorized, and this may be done in two ways: First, by not appropriating for a certain purpose at all, and second, by denying the use of a part of an appropriation for a certain purpose. This is the principle on which the theory of limitations is grounded and should always be kept in mind in construing a limitation.

To use the illustration of the late James R. Mann, of honored memory, Congress having the right to appropriate for red-headed men, may specifically deny the use of an appropriation for the payment of red-headed men. Therefore, while it is not in order to require the employment of red-headed men or even the payment of red-headed men, it is in order to deny the use of an appropriation for the payment of red-headed men, even though existing law permits the employment and payment of red-headed men.

But the misapplication and the difficulty in construing the rule has occurred when a limitation is accompanied by something additional in the nature of a further limitation or restriction.

For example, there is no difficulty in the following provision: "No part of this appropriation may be expended in the payment of red-headed men."

But take the following proposition: "No part of this appropriation may be used for the payment of any persons except red-headed men."

In construing the last example it is necessary for the Chair to look to the effect rather than to the form. Does the language merely deny the use of the appropriation or does it go further and require the employment of red-headed men? If existing law does not authorize the employment of red-headed men, or expressly prohibits the employment of red-headed men, the language clearly becomes not a limitation but becomes legislation making an appropriation for an unauthorized purpose and in addition proposes legislation permitting the employment of red-headed men contrary to existing law. But if the law authorizes the employment of red-headed men the language merely becomes explanatory of the recipient of the appropriation, and is in fact merely an appropriation for a certain purpose. Therefore, as a test in determining the legality of such language, the Chair may properly ask himself this question: "Would it be in order to make a direct appropriation for this purpose instead of denying the use of this appropriation except for the specified purpose? If the question could be answered in the affirmative this particular class of limitations would be in order.

Approaching the point of order now before us, in the consideration of which the merits of the proposition are not under review, the Chair will cite a number of rulings that bear on the subject of limitations, quoting from volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents:

No. 3931. Legislation may not be proposed under the form of a limitation.

No. 3976. The language of limitation prescribing the conditions under which the appropriation may be used may not be such as, when fairly construed, would change existing law.

No. 3812. The enactment of positive law where none exists is construed as a "provision changing existing law," such as is forbidden in an appropriation bill.

No. 3967. A limitation is negative in its nature and may not include positive enactments establishing rules for executive officers.

No. 3854. A proposition to establish affirmative directions for an executive officer constitutes legislation and is not in order on a general appropriation bill. Also a ruling of Chairman TOWNER, April 15, 1920.

Chairman CRISP, March 11, 1916: Limitations must not impose new duties upon an executive officer.

No. 3984. Where a proposition might be construed by the executive officer as a modification of a statute, it may not be held as such a limitation of appropriation as is permissible on a general appropriation bill.

No. 3927. A limitation may be attached only to the money of the appropriation under consideration and may not be made applicable to moneys appropriated in other acts.

No. 3957. The limitation must be upon the appropriation and not an affirmative limitation of official functions.

No. 3966. Limitations which directly, or indirectly, vest in any executive officer any discretion, or imposes any duty upon the officer, directly or indirectly, in the expenditure of money, would be obnoxious. But (No. 3968) the House may provide that no part of an appropriation shall be used in a certain way even though executive discretion be thereby negatively restricted.

No. 3936. A provision proposing to construe existing law is in itself a proposition of legislation and, therefore, not in order on an appropriation bill as a limitation.

No. 3936. The fact that a paragraph on an appropriation bill would constitute legislation for only a year does not make it admissible as a limitation.

No. 3936. As an appropriation bill may deny an appropriation for a purpose authorized by law, so it may by limitation prohibit the use of money for part of the purpose while appropriating for the remainder of it.

No. 3929. A limitation must apply solely to the present appropriation and may not be made as a permanent provision of law.

No. 3942. While it is not in order to legislate as to qualifications of the recipients of an appropriation, the House may specify that no part of the appropriation shall go to recipients lacking certain qualifications.

In section 3935, page 629, of Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, is a ruling by Speaker CANNON, which has been referred to and which the Chair feels covers the point under consideration. The language is clear and specific, and in view of Mr. CANNON'S approaching retirement from Congress after a long and distinguished career, the Chair is glad to refer to it in this instance:

The merits of the proposition are not involved in the point of order. What is the object of the motion and of the instruction? If it does not change existing law, then it is not necessary. If it does change existing law, then it is subject to the point of order. Much has been said about limitation; and the doctrine of limitation is sustained upon the proposition under the rule that, as Congress has the power to withhold every appropriation, it may withhold the appropriation upon limitation. Now, that is correct. But there is another rule, another phase of that question. If the limitation, whether it be affirmative or negative, operates to change the law or to enact new law in effect, then it is subject to the rule that prohibits legislation upon a general appropriation bill; and the Chair, in view of the fact that the amendment would impose upon officials new duties as to purchasing canal supplies, has no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that the instructions are subject to the point of order for the reasons stated.

In viewing propositions of a legislative character the Chair feels we should look to the substance and not to the form in which it is presented. In the case before us what does the proviso propose? Does it impose a simple restriction on the expenditure of funds? No. Does it stipulate that the use of the funds are conditional upon the possession by the recipients of certain qualifications or distinctions? No. It goes much further, for by the use of the words "until" and "unless" in connection with certain things to be done, it implies—yes, asserts—that these activities must be undertaken before the appropriation becomes available. This is a direction to officers and imposes new duties upon them which is repugnant to our practice. By requiring the court to perform functions which are not now required, it clearly implies a change of law, otherwise it would be futile to suggest it. This is legislation under the guise of a limitation which is contrary to our procedure.

As a general proposition the Chair feels that whenever a limitation is accompanied by the words "unless," "except," "until," "if," "however," there is ground to view the so-called limitation with suspicion, and in case of doubt as to its ultimate effect the doubt should be resolved on the conservative side. By doing so appropriation bills will be relieved of much of the legislation which is being constantly grafted upon them and a check given a practice which seems to the Chair both unwise and in violation of the spirit, as well as the substance, of our rules. Without endeavoring to lay down any hard and fast rule, the Chair feels that the following tests may be helpful in deciding a question of order directed against a limitation, first having determined the powers granted or the duties imposed by existing law:

Does the limitation apply solely to the appropriation under consideration?

Does it operate beyond the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made?

Is the limitation accompanied or coupled with a phrase applying to official functions, and if so, does the phrase give affirmative directions in fact or in effect, although not in form?

Is it accompanied by a phrase which might be construed to impose additional duties or permit an official to assume an intent to change existing law?

Does the limitation curtail or extend, modify, or alter existing powers or duties, or terminate old or confer new ones? If it does, then it must be conceded that legislation is involved, for without legislation these results could not be accomplished.

If the limitation will not fairly stand these tests then in my opinion the point of order should be sustained. Applying in the present instance the standards set forth, the judgment of the Chair is that the point of order is well taken and the Chair sustains it.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

For care and maintenance of boys committed to the National Training School for Boys by the courts of the District of Columbia under a contract to be made by the Board of Charities with the authorities of said National Training School for Boys, $60,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of asking a question relative to the paragraph for the National Training School for Boys on page 79, line 14. Why is this let out by contract?

Mr. CRAMTON. Because the District of Columbia has no institution for this purpose. The National Training School for Boys is operated by the Federal Government.

Mr. BLANTON. But there is a Federal institution of that kind?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; and there is a contract by which the District government pays so much per capita for the inmates that it sends to this institution.

Mr. BLANTON. No part of this $60,000 goes to any private enterprise?

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a Government institution?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Federal Government conducts the institution.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For groceries, provisions, light, fuel, soap, oil, lamps, candles, clothing, shoes, forage, horseshoeing, medicines, medical attendance, transportation, labor, sewing machines, fixtures, books, stationery, horses, vehicles, harness, cows, pigs, fowls, sheds, fences, repairs, typewriting, stenography, and other necessary items, including compensation not exceeding $500 for additional labor or services, for identifying and pursuing escaped inmates and for rewards for their capture, for transportation and other necessary expenses incident to securing suitable homes for paroled or discharged girls, not exceeding $150, and for maintenance of motor vehicles, $26,000.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question in reference to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I note from the report of the committee that the appropriation for the National Training School for Girls has been cut from the estimates of the Budget $67,800. I am advised that this institution is conducted by a board composed of some of the most prominent men and women in the District of Columbia, including the superintendent of public prisons, the wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, and others of like standing in the community. I am further advised that white and colored children committed to this institution by the courts are kept in the same classes, or are working side by side, and that in order to remedy this condition the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Director of the Budget have recommended an appropriation for a separate building for the housing of the white girls.

I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. CRAMTON] if he is familiar with conditions in that institution, and if he does not feel that this committee and the House should take steps to remedy existing conditions in that institution?

Mr. CRAMTON. Of the $67,000, to which the gentleman refers, $62,000 was estimated for the acquiring of a site and the erection of buildings somewhere outside the District of Columbia. It is my understanding that that item is not authorized by existing law. It is a subject which the District of Columbia legislative committee, of which the gentleman from Maryland is a member, should take up. Possibly the gentleman from Maryland has already introduced a bill to authorize the acquirement of that land and the building of that institution. I do not know as to that. Certainly our committee have not the jurisdiction, and such jurisdiction as we have assumed has been criticized by the District Committee as going outside of our authority. I am sure that the gentleman, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, would not want us to violate the jurisdiction of that committee by appropriating this $62,000.

As to the remainder of that item, we gave them the same amount that they received for the current fiscal year. I do not wish to say anything that would embarrass any of the good people of whom the gentleman speaks, but an appropriating committee has to be guided by the evidence that comes before it, and it is necessary that those asking an increased appropriation should make a clear showing of the use being made of their money before they can expect to receive an increased amount. I will only say that the showing made before the Committee on Appropriations was not sufficiently clear, in the judgment of the committee, to warrant an increase above the amount appropriated for the current year. No cut was made. The same amount was given them as at the present time. I understand there has been a change of management, and from what I am told as to that it is going to be very helpful and very desirable; but your committee feel that at the present time a continuance of the amount that they have had heretofore is sufficient. From what I have heard also I hope that the District of Columbia Committee will take up this matter, which is within their jurisdiction, for the establishment of a new branch. As soon as they do I am sure the Committee on Appropriations will be glad to appropriate what money may be necessary.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The gentleman's committee has reported many items which are legislation and subject to a point of order. Of course, it is useless for any Member to offer an amendment subject to a point of order unless the subcommittee having the bill in charge are in sympathy with the purpose of the amendment. The gentleman from Michigan says that he has looked into this institution, and I am sure he knows that white and black girls are put together, and the committee are cognizant of the fact that a lady who has had a great deal of experience in reformatory work has been brought here and is attempting to bring order out of the chaotic conditions existing in the institution, and to give delinquent girls, both black and white, the proper training that will fit them to take up the responsibilities and work of life with at least a fair chance of success.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Maryland concluded?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I simply want to get an expression from the chairman of the subcommittee as to the conditions in this institution, and as to whether or not, in his opinion, some action by Congress is essential to remedy existing conditions, if not in this bill, then in a legislative bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not visited the institution. The gentleman's district is so near to Washington, and he is in such close touch with the people here and with the members of this board, that I assume he has visited the institution. I will ask him whether since his visit he has introduced a bill or sought a hearing from the District of Columbia Committee in order to secure the authorization necessary for the expansion of this institution?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Page 80, line 6, after the word "books," insert "magazines and other supplies which represent greater educational advantages"; and, in line 11, after the word "capture," strike out the language down to and including the figures "$160," in line 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "And for transportation and other necessary expenses incident to securing suitable homes for paroled or discharged girls"; and, on line 14, strike out "$26,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Minnesota consent to a division of these amendments so that we can handle them separately? There are really three amendments.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If the gentleman from Michigan prefers that, it is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. CRAMTON. It will simplify the procedure.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. My only purpose in putting them together was on account of the lump-sum appropriation at the end.

Mr. CRAMTON. The committee have no objection to the amendment proposed in line 6.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota ask that his amendment be divided?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota to divide his amendment into three parts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 6, after the word "books," insert "magazines and other supplies which represent greater educational advantages."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 11, after the word "capture," strike out the language down to and including "$150" in line 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and for transportation and other necessary expenses incident to securing suitable homes for paroled or discharged girls."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not see that the gentleman's amendment makes any change excepting to strike out "not exceeding $150."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; it is only the limitation.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the third amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 14, strike out "$26,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I was very glad to hear from the gentleman from Michigan upon this. I would like to have him say that he acquiesces in the amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, having accepted two of the amendments, I had hoped the gentleman would withdraw the third.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, knowing the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and knowing his interest in work of this kind, having the benefit of his company two-thirds of the way, I felt that he would go the remaining one-third.

Mr. Chairman, we can not possibly take sufficient time to interest ourselves in detail in many of the different institutions in the District of Columbia. By reason of that fact I think that not only are we often unfamiliar with work in the District and its problems but by reason of that fact conditions in the District suffer, and I fear that this Government of ours has often set a very bad example for other governments, State and local, to follow throughout the country.

I happen to be familiar in a general way in work pertaining to the training of girls. I was thrown in contact with it some years ago when I was a prosecuting officer in Minneapolis. My work gave me an opportunity to look into the work and the necessity for work of this kind. I found out that wayward girls could be reclaimed and come back into the community to become the very finest citizens. I know of my own knowledge of girls who have gone to properly conducted institutions, who have come out therefrom improved in every way, and who are to-day married and the mothers of future American citizens. I am interested in this work, and I know that every Member of Congress, if he knew of the work, would be interested in it. We have an institution here in the District—the National Training School for Girls. This amendment proposes to increase the appropriation for this work from $26,000 to $30,000.

The Bureau of the Budget has gone into this and has recommended to the Appropriations Committee that $30,000 be given instead of the appropriation for the present year—$26,000. Yesterday I went out to the place to see it in person. It has been said here that there has been a change in the management. That is true. The place has been in existence for years. What I have to say I do not want to have taken as critical of preceding managements. I am not so much interested in what went on before, but I am vitally interested, and we are all interested in what we hope will go on from this time on. There has been a change in the management. Heretofore it has been the practice to consider the place as a penal institution. I used the term advisedly. There are something like four or five buildings there, and the girls committed there have been treated and handled not as in the general run of correctional institutions, but more largely as if they were in a penal institution. The result has not been to the credit of the District, and it has not done the girls any great amount of good. Now, there has been this change in the management. It happens that the new superintendent—Mrs. Fannie F. Morse—was for years the superintendent of a girls' training school in Massachusetts. After having completed her work there, so that it was known throughout the country, this woman came out to Minnesota. We had no institution of that kind at all worthy of the name. She built up an institution at Sauk Center, Minn., in the district represented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], that is second to none in the country. We have something like 800 girls there. The cottage plan prevails. The girls are under mothers with 16 to 20 in a cottage. I was familiar with the work there at first hand. Mrs. Newton and myself have visited the institution and have remained there several days. I have gone over every foot of the ground. I knew many of the girls that were there. When I was familiar with the work there were some 600 or 700 girls there. The work carried on there is without parallel in the history of the country. It was in such good hands that this good woman some time last spring was induced by some of the best women of the District of Columbia to come to Washington.

She came here on the 10th of July, and on the 12th of July the estimate for the work of this institution was handed to her. It then had to go from there to the Board of Charities and Corrections, and from there to the District Commissioners, and from there to the Bureau of the Budget, and from the Bureau of the Budget to the Committee on Appropriations. She requested changes in order to carry on work somewhat in accordance with the work that she had been carrying on in Minnesota. The superintendent wants to do something effective in an educational way. When I went out there yesterday the windows of the place were painted so that the girls could not see the outside from the lower sash at all. Bars were upon the windows. The organic law authorizes the courts of the District to commit to the institution dependent children, yet it is fitted more for penal purposes. There are great possibilities there, providing Congress does its duty and permits the superintendent and members of the board of trustees to go to work and do something with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. This good woman came here and made her appearance before the committee. She did not even know that she was to be called upon; she was told that in all probability she would not be called upon; that it would be somebody else who would appear before the committee. The committee did not get a good idea of the work that has been going on there or of the work expected to be done. I am not criticizing the committee for not following the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget. They have done what they thought was right. However, when we adopted the Budget system we did not give a quitclaim to our responsibility on appropriations or our responsibility for the care of the people of this District or of our general duties throughout the country.

And I for one know that when this good woman was handling these matters in Minnesota she had regard for the taxpayer's dollar. I never heard, in the 10 or 12 years, a criticism of her because she had no regard for the taxpayer or the Public Treasury. She has asked for this additional money for what purpose? First, that she might have some magazines and books to build up a little library. The auditor of this District has refused to honor her claim to buy one single magazine for this institution. She asked a little leeway in connection with the buying of books in the education of these girls. Men, if the girls are put there to be trained and educated, how are we going to do it if we do not provide adequate facilities? If we do not act, we may send them away worse than when they came. The food has been abominable. The new superintendent wants that corrected. It is Mrs. Morse's idea that after a certain period and upon good conduct that the girls should be eligible to parole. To carry out this idea there must be an adequate parole system, properly administered. This requires some additional money. For these three reasons she has requested this additional sum of $4,000.

They need a new building. I would like to see them get it. That is a matter I fear is subject to a point of order, but they vitally need this $4,000, and this House of Representatives ought not to start this woman upon this work and deny her at least that much. I hope that any objection will be waived here and that the amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Not on the whole paragraph but on the gentleman's amendment. There are some other matters in connection with it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will ask that it close in 15 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to indorse every word that has been said by my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] with reference to the work of the National Girls' Training School, and more particularly the work of Mrs. Fannie French Morse, superintendent of that institution. As Mr. NEWTON has said, Mrs. Morse, after having built up an institution of a similar character in Massachusetts that attracted the attention of all the uplift workers in the country, she was asked to come to Minnesota and take charge of our girls' training school when it was founded at Sauk Center some 14 years ago. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the call was made to Mrs. Morse by our State through the board of control, which is nonpolitical in its character, there being members of both political parties on that board. She took the school at Sauk Center and made it one of the greatest institutions of its kind in the country. Her work there was so successful that the board having charge of the National Girls' Training School in the District called upon her to come to take charge of this institution, which she did at a great sacrifice in salary. I find that Mrs. Morse is drawing the munificent sum of $1,200 a year as superintendent of this institution, and she was getting approximately $4,000 in Minnesota; so you see she has made a great sacrifice to come down here to do a work that is absolutely necessary. She is making a big sacrifice, and I say it is unfair to her—it is unfair to the girls of this District—to handicap her in her work. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] increases the amount of the appropriation from $26,000 to $30,000, and should be carried without a dissenting vote. Now, I have stood by the Appropriations Committee against every attempt that has been made to raid the Public Treasury, but this is not a raid. It is vitally necessary to increase this amount to $30,000. As a matter of fact, Mrs. Morse should have $75,000 or $100,000 in order to carry on the work successfully. Does my colleague remember how much our legislature appropriated for this institution at Sauk Center?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. One hundred and sixty-seven thousand dollars.

Mr. KNUTSON. One hundred and sixty-seven thousand dollars for carrying on this kind of work and here we are allowing a measly $26,000 for an institution that should be a model for every State training school for girls in the country.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will.

Mr. SNELL. What is the population of the gentleman's State?

Mr. KNUTSON. Two and a half million.

Mr. SNELL. How does it compare with the population of the District? Six times as much? The District proportionately appropriates as much as the whole State?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; you are not appropriating nearly as much, when everything is taken into consideration.

Mr. SNELL. Proportionately to the number of people living here and considering the number of people living in the State of Minnesota, we are appropriating just as much as the State.

Mr. KNUTSON. How many girls are there in this institution and how many are there at Sauk Center?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. About 106 here when Mrs. Morse came here, and in the Minnesota school for the last year my recollection of the number was about 700. Of course, my friend will understand that a good many dependency cases go to the Minnesota institution, and up to the present time very few have ever gone to the District institution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, for 106 inmates you will appropriate in this bill $40,000. Up in the great State of Minnesota they appropriate for 700, seven times as many, and they appropriate four times as much. The comparison is not so bad.

I want to make a frank statement to the committee in regard to this item. It is the business of the Committee on Appropriations in handling appropriations to do it on a business basis, and not as a matter of sentiment or because somebody is a nice lady. Now, as to this institution, the lady who has become the head of it made a good record in Massachusetts, as I am advised, and then made a good record in Minnesota, and then subsequently moved down here in order to rejuvenate this institution. She took charge of it in July, and the hearings were held in December. They had $26,000 under this item last year, and we asked her what they did with the money, how much was spent for this purpose and how much for that, and what the increase from $26,000 to $30,000 was to be used for. The superintendent of this institution is in effect its business head, as well as its educational head, and if she has the capacity which we are told she has—and I accept the statement of my friend—she ought to be able to know how much of that $26,000 is for food and how much of it is for clothing and how much of it is school books, and so forth.

She had been there five months when she appeared before our committee, and the hearings will demonstrate that she could give to this committee no information as to the business affairs of that institution. I think it was unfortunate, perhaps; I think it was not a fair test of her capacity; but that was the situation. As a result our committee did what I think any committee ought to do, when those asking for an increased amount of money are unable to show what they were doing with the money they already had; we thought they had enough money, and we declined to increase the amount.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I know the gentleman wants to be fair?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. After her appearance before the committee the gentleman asked Mrs. Morse to prepare a statement for the committee, which she did, and then, I think, the gentleman got some information.

Mr. CRAMTON. She furnished this statement of a dozen lines, containing information which she ought to have known when she appeared before the committee the first time. Our committee must not be criticized if those who seek increased amounts can not show what they are doing with the money they have already and do not make a good impression on the committee. The committee is not responsible for that. I think the lady referred to is a capable woman, and I think that after a time, when she gets acquainted with her situation, she will become even more efficient. But I do not think Congress ought to turn over an indefinite or unlimited sum of money to her or increase the appropriation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman consider this estimate an unlimited amount?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the institution had been getting $50,000 and she had asked for $60,000, the gentleman would have made the same speech; or if the institution had been getting $50,000 and had asked for $100,000, he would have made the same speech.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I hope the gentleman will not call this "a raid on the Treasury." We tried to present this matter on its merits, and I object to its being called "a raid on the Treasury."

Mr. CRAMTON. I will modify that, and I am free to admit that it is not a big "raid," anyway.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in this National Training School for Girls there are at the present time 108 inmates. There are about 70 colored girls, and the balance are white girls. They are required to live together, to eat together, to sleep in the same dormitories, study together in the same schoolroom, and so forth, and work together on such work as they do. The Budget Committee recommended, in order to separate them, that a new building be constructed. That Budget estimate and recommendation came to the three members of the Committee on Appropriations who actually drew this bill and are now attempting to pass it.

Our distinguished friend from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] asked why they did not adopt the recommendation to erect this building in order to separate these girls, the white from the black. The chairman says in reply it was legislation, and he did not want to put any legislation in the bill; it was beyond their power to put any legislation in the bill.

When you look at this bill, page after page, and see the legislation that the triumvirate saw fit to put in—the legislation that the triumvirate saw fit to violate the legislative rule by putting in—the gentleman's reason falls short. Oh, this triumvirate should quit passing the buck. They should quit camouflaging on this question of legislation. They should quit throwing up these smoke screens, because we see after all, whenever they want to put legislation in these bills, that they put it in. It is only such legislation, however, as appeals to them, the great triumvirate, that goes into the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment.

Mr. Chairman, I am saying this in all good faith, because I like the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], and I am going to help him hold down appropriations. But this Congress is composed of 435 men, while the men who drew this bill number only 3.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. They did not have time to look into the reasons and the whys and wherefores of these propositions. The District Committee has 21 members. Those 21 Members work. They investigate District propositions on their merits. They find out the reasons, the whys and wherefores, such as can not be found out by the three men who usually draw these appropriation bills.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. Now, when the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] wants to put a proposition into this bill that has merit—and I dare say there would not be an objecting vote to it on this floor if the chairman would allow it by refraining from making his point of order—when one single Member out of the 435 Members of Congress offers a suggestion as an amendment to go into this bill, no matter how much it is wanted, the chairman objects and will not let it go in because it is legislation. Yet he has filled the bill with legislation.

But you just let any of the 432 other Members of the House offer a proposition from this floor to go into that bill, no matter how much it is needed, the chairman makes a point of order against it. He will not let it go in. But when any of the small fry see fit to object to the legislation that he puts in, then he gets mad and loses his temper. Now I yield to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman criticizes the committee for not putting in an appropriation for an additional building for the teaching and care of these wayward girls——

Mr. BLANTON. I would separate the white girls from the black, no matter how much money it costs.

Mr. CRAMTON. While the gentleman on Saturday by a point of order struck out appropriations proposed in this bill for school buildings for boys and girls who are not wayward but who are attending our public schools.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; because we have a legislative District Committee to look after those questions, and the District Committee has been studying those questions, and members of that committee have been going out to the schools of this District and finding out conditions there, something that the gentleman's triumvirate have not done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: Agent, $1,800; supervisor and placing officer, $1,740; investigator and placing officer, $1,500; clerks—1 $1,200, 1 $900; stenographer, $900; placing and investigating officers—6 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,000 each, 10 at $900 each; record clerk, $900; messenger, $500; laborer, $500; in all, $28,140.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice here a provision regarding the Board of Children's Guardians. I want to make simply this comment: It seems that under the scheme of government here and the caring for dependent or delinquent children they are generally committed in the first instance to the Board of Children's Guardians, and this board in many cases farms them out either to homes or to institutions.

While they are in these homes or institutions the District pays the family or the institution $5 a week for the care of each child. Now, among the children committed to the Board of Children's Guardians are some coming from what are known as destitute homes, where conditions are such that officers have reported it to be to the interest of the child and to his future welfare as a citizen to commit the child to the Board of Children's Guardians. Later, when home conditions improve, the child may get back. Now, the judge of the juvenile court here in this District made a recommendation this year that if the juvenile court were given additional money for parole officers, money sufficient to get tactful people to go into the homes, not in a snooping way but in a helpful way, she could really save money to the District of Columbia. In other words, the children could be left in their own homes; and with a sufficient number of parole officers to look after home conditions, the children could be kept at home, properly cared for there, and the District be saved the expense of the $5 per week now going to the institution or to the family caring for the children. The judge has asked, as I recall it, several thousand dollars for these parole officers and the supervising of destitute home cases. She demonstrated to my satisfaction in a trial of it during the past four months that it would work satisfactorily and that it would save money to the District. This recommendation was made to the District Commissioners in due form with a request to appear before them. The District Commissioners would not hear her. She then made her appeal to the committee. I merely call the attention of the House at this time to a situation that we are getting into here in this District and one that we ought to guard against. Here is a matter pertaining to the welfare of the children.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. What situation is the gentleman referring to? This method of caring for children has been in force in the District for more than 30 years.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Simply this, that where a responsible authority like the judge of the juvenile court wants to make recommendations which will eventually reach Congress, and tries to get to the District Commissioners to make them so as to have their approval or disapproval, and they can not or will not take the time to listen, that kind of a situation ought not to prevail. It means that they do not pass upon a matter that eventually reaches Congress, but it did reach the Appropriations Committee through the recommendation of the judge of the juvenile court. Now, the committee can not take the time to go into these matters; and if they had the opinion of the District Commissioners, they would certainly have more to go by.

I am convinced from a reading of the hearings and from a personal talk with the judge of the juvenile court that a system of this kind ought to be tried and that there ought to be funds enough furnished in order to prevent the commitment of these children to institutions when they can be cared for just as well, in some cases at least, in their own homes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Why does not the judge of the juvenile court bring this matter before the District committee and let the District Committee take some action in regard to it?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. She has done that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. This is a recent idea that has just been tried out. This is a short session of Congress and there is going to be very little time to get new legislation through if presented by a legislative committee. That is the reason why it was submitted in regular form to the District Commissioners, and when they took no action the recommendation was made to the subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. There are 38 agencies in the District of Columbia for caring for children. It may be of interest to the membership to have the names of them in the RECORD. A list of these agencies is as follows:

THIRTY-EIGHT CHILD-CARING AGENCIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

1. Child's Welfare Society, 2100 G Street NW.
2. Juvenile Protective Association, 203 I Street NW.
3. Children's Home, Grant Road.
4. Foundling Hospital, 1715 Fifteenth Street NW.
5. Children's Hospital, Thirteenth and W Streets NW.
6. Associated Charities, 926 H Street NW.
7. Board of Charities, District Building.
8. Florence Crittenden Home, 213 Third Street NW.
9. Home for National Association (Colored).
10. National Training School for Girls.
11. National Training School for Boys.
12. Bethesda Home, Maryland (District children sent there).
13. Baptist Home for Children, 904 Newton Street NW.
14. Episcopal Home for Children, Anacostia.
15. Methodist Orphans' Home, 601 M Street NW.
16. Presbyterian Orphans' Home, 1818 Newton Street.
17. Washington City Orphans' Home, 1739 Fourteenth Street NW.
18. St. Joseph's Orphans Home.
19. St. Vincent's Orphans Home.
20. St. John's Orphans Home.
21. St. Ann's Infant Asylum, 2300 K Street NW.
22. St. Rose's Asylum.
23. House of Good Shepherd.
24. Good Hope Orphan Home.
27. Industrial Home School.
28. Child's Emergency Home, G Street.
29. American Children's Aid Society, 329 C Street NW.
30. Cook's Home for Colored Children, Anacostia.
31. Boys' Club, Third and C Streets NW.
32. Industrial Home School (Colored).
33. Humane Society for Cruelty to Children.
34. Board of Children's Guardians, has 1,900 wards.
35. Christ Child Society, for aiding needy children.
36. Day Nursery, 472 I Street SW.
37. Children's Home, 1207 First Street NW.
38. Miss McCoy Andrews, day nursery.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. How many of these are supported by the Government?

Mr. BLANTON. Only a few of them. Most of them are private institutions, but there are 38 different agencies here in the District of Columbia and adjacent to it that look after the welfare of the children of this District.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. How many institutions are there that are operated under the supervision of the Government that have to do with children?

Mr. BLANTON. I think only 7 or 8 have any connection with the Government, but there are altogether 38 private and public here, so that after all the children ought to be well cared for in the District of Columbia. The only reason I mention them all is because I hope there will be a cooperation, especially in so far as wayward children are concerned, between all of these agencies. If there were a friendly cooperation between all of them for the benefit of the children there would be much more done for the children.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon the amendments to the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. NORBECK and Mr. MYERS members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of the Interior.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

For board and care of all children committed to the guardianship of said board by the courts of the District, and for temporary care of children pending investigation or while being transferred from place to place, with authority to pay not more than $1,500 each to institutions under sectarian control and not more than $400 for burial of children dying while under charge of the board, $120,000: Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be used by said board for the board and care of any child in a boarding home unless the Industrial Home School, to which it is eligible for admission, is unable to receive it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso on page 84, beginning with line 6, down to and including all of the language in line 9. I call to the attention of the Chair the act to provide for the care of dependent children in the District of Columbia and to create a Board of Children's Guardians, which is chapter 250 of the act of 1892. This act provides, first, for the appointment of a body of nine members, who shall serve without compensation, who shall be appointed by the judges of the police court and the judge holding criminal court in the District of Columbia; that the said board shall have charge of the care and supervision of the following classes of children:

First. Of children committed under section 2 of the act approved February 13, 1885; of children who are destitute of suitable homes and adequate means of earning an honest living; of children abandoned by their parents or guardians; of children of habitually drunk, vicious, or unfit parents; of children kept in vicious or immoral associations, and of incorrigible children. It further provides that the board shall be the legal guardian of all children and shall have full power to board them in private families, to board them in institutions willing to receive them, to bind them out or apprentice them, or give them in adoption to foster parents.

This proviso attempts by indirection to take from this board, vested with authority of law, a certain number of children, to wit, the full capacity of this institution, and place them in the Industrial Home School, which is conducted by an entirely separate board, instituted under an entirely separate act of Congress, and thus take from the Board of Children's Guardians the supervision and care of these children as provided by the act of 1892.

I cite, first, the decision of the Chair of a few moments ago upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] that a limitation could not change existing law. I cite to the Chair in the manual, section 825, on page 364:

The fact that a provision would constitute legislation for only a year does not make it a limitation in order under the rule.

Care should also be taken that the language of limitation be not such as, when fairly construed, would change existing law or justify an executive officer in assuming an intent to change existing law.

In volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, sections 3854, 3859, and 3975, it is held that a limitation must not impose duties upon an executive officer.

This proviso takes from the Board of Children's Guardians the care of a certain number of children, to wit, the full capacity of this institution, takes them from the board authorized by the law to supervise and care for them, and places them under the jurisdiction of the board of trustees of the Industrial Home School, so that it does change existing law; it does direct an executive officer, to wit, the executive officer of the Board of Children's Guardians, to take these children from that board and place them in the Industrial Home School. Surely this limitation is legislation on an appropriation bill. It does change existing law, and it should be held not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to again cite the existing law which the gentleman claims is changed.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the existing law is the act of 1892, which provides for the care of dependent children in the District of Columbia and places them under the supervision of a board known as the Board of Children's Guardians, appointed by the judge of the police court and the judge sitting in the criminal term of the other court. The powers of the board shall be the supervision and care of all children who are destitute of suitable homes and adequate means of earning an honest living, of children abandoned by their parents or guardians, or children of habitually drunken, vicious, or unfit parents, or children kept in vicious and immoral association, and of incorrigible children. It also provides that the board shall be the legal guardian of all children, and shall have full power to board them in private families, to board them in institutions willing to receive them, to bind them out or apprentice them, or give them in adoption to foster parents.

This proviso attempts by limitation to take a certain number of these children from the board authorized by law to receive them, and to supervise them, and place them under the supervision of an entirely different board, namely, the board of trustees of the Industrial Home School, and it does change existing law, it does direct an executive officer to do something, and it has no place on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the general rule as to limitations is expressed in the manual:

It being established that the House under its rules may decline to appropriate for a purpose authorized by law, so it may by limitation prohibit the use of the money for part of the purpose while appropriating for the remainder of it.

The Board of Children's Guardians, by the law of 1892, is given jurisdiction over the care and maintenance of certain children in the District. About 1,500 or 1,600 I think generally are under their supervision. There are two institutions in the District maintained by the District government for the care of that class of children, one the Industrial Home School where only white children are sent, and the other is the Industrial Home School for colored children, where only colored children are sent. There was a time when the court could send to the Industrial Home School certain children. At the present time and for a number of years past the only authority that can place a child in the Industrial Home School is the Board of Children's Guardians. These two industrial homes are established and maintained under authority of law as places in which the Board of Children's Guardians may place some of their wards. The authority of the Board of Children's Guardians is, under the law, broader than that. They may put them in these homes and are expressly authorized by law to do so. In addition to that, as the gentleman from Maryland has said, they may put them in other places, and they may send them to the reform school for boys or the reform school for girls, or they may put them in private homes or adopt them to foster parents, as the gentleman has correctly stated.

Now, here are a number of things the Board of Children's Guardians may do authorized by law. Some of them require money, some of them do not. This provision now before the committee does not change any law, does not require or direct the Board of Children's Guardians to put a child anywhere except where it has full authority of law now to put that child. It does say, however, that up to a certain extent the Board of Children's Guardians shall not put a child in certain places authorized by law. I have not stated that quite accurately—they shall not use any money here appropriated for that. We do not change the law, we do not change the authorization of law, we do not prevent them putting a child in a boarding home if they have money in other places, except out of this section, with which to do it. We only offer as a limitation upon the pending appropriation a provision that limits their use of the money to certain specified authorized uses. For instance, the Board of Children's Guardians does, as a fact, and as they are authorized to do, when one of these wards comes into its care, they may put that ward in a private home where the people want a child and they are willing to take care of it without any compensation. That does not require any appropriation. Or they may put a child in a home where it is boarded, cared for for pay. That requires money. That is what is known as a boarding home. Or they may put them in these regular organized District institutions, and, of course, that will require money under appropriations for those institutions. Now, this proviso—

That no portion of this appropriation—

we do not assume to say any other appropriation, if the Chair pleases—no portion of this appropriation shall be used by said board for the board and care of any child in a boarding home—

Now, they have a right under the law to put them in a boarding home. We have a right to appropriate for boarding homes. We have also a right not to appropriate for boarding homes, and that is all this section proposes up to a certain extent—unless the Industrial Home School, to which it is eligible for admission—

We do not broaden the law as to admission to the Industrial Home School. These children that are eligible for admission there, that the Board of Children's Guardians will put them there—unless the Industrial Home School, to which it is eligible for admission, is unable to receive it.

That is to say, the Board of Children's Guardians having authority under the law to put these children in a private home with pay or private boarding home or in these public institutions. Now, we appropriate money for these purposes. We say that no part of the money here appropriated shall be expended to put any in boarding homes so long as there is any room in the Industrial Home School, to which they are already authorized to send them. I can not understand how, Mr. Chairman, there could be a clearer case of a limitation by which Congress refuses to appropriate for an authorized purpose. That is all this is—that we refuse to appropriate money to be used for these boarding homes, except after the recognized institutions are filled. We have nothing to say in reference to their putting them in homes where it will not cost anything or putting them in boarding homes after the institutions are filled. There is no change of law. There is simply a limitation within the language of the manual—it may decline to appropriate for a purpose authorized by law while appropriating for the remainder of it.

Certainly it comes clearly within the limits of the rule in the manual.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] that Congress may appropriate for one purpose authorized by law and refuse to appropriate for another purpose authorized by law. If this were all that this proviso accomplished the gentleman would have made his case completely, but it goes much further. It materially changes powers which have been heretofore granted by law. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] has read the law granting these broad powers to the Board of Children's Guardians. Among these powers is the power to place a child in an industrial home, a private home, or in a private boarding place. It was doubtless the intent of Congress to authorize the board in cases thought by them to be best to place a child in this family or in that home regardless of whether the Industrial Home School was filled or not. A case might arise in which, in the judgment of the board, it would be unwise to send a child to the Industrial Home School, but that it would be best to place the child in a private home and pay for it. In such cases the board had the power, under the law, to exercise its discretion to this extent.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The only thing the proviso does is that it does not make any requirement except we refuse to appropriate money in a certain class of cases.

Mr. TILSON. I do not agree with the gentleman as to that. It goes much further. It says that the board, which now has the power to put these children at other places, can not do so hereafter until some contingency arises, until it shall be determined that the Industrial Home School is filled. Is not that a change of the powers of this board? It certainly is. They now have the power to board the children in other homes, when and as the members of the board may decide to be best. They will not have this power in case this proviso remains in the bill and can not do it at all until they have determined that there is no more room in the Industrial Home School.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. TILSON. I will yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. They have the authority, but they will not have the money with which to carry it out, and we have clearly the right to refuse to appropriate any money for them to put them anywhere.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; the gentleman's committee undoubtedly has that right, but when confronted with a point of order, it has not the right to change the powers conferred by law upon this board, and that is the effect of this proviso, because the board has the power, as the law stands to-day, to place children in families and homes without restriction as to whether the Industrial Home School is or is not filled. If this proviso becomes a law the powers of the board will have been changed and thereafter the board can not send a child to a private home and pay for its board until it has been determined that the Industrial Home School is full.

It seems to me that if the Chair will consider the effect of the proviso—and that is what the Chair did in the ruling this morning—he will have to hold that the proviso in controversy here does change the powers conferred upon the board by law and therefore does, in a parliamentary sense, change existing law.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, just another word. I will cite to you the argument of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] himself, who read to you the law that the board may do certain things. Now, by indirection, this committee proposes to withdraw from them all the funds they have for the boarding of children in private homes, an authority given them by law; proposes to withhold from the board every dollar of that appropriation, any part of it, unless the board first ascertains that this home, conducted by an entirely different board, is full to its capacity.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman question but that the bill or the paragraph would have been in order if we had provided an itemization of the funds? If we had provided $75,000 for the Board of Children's Guardians for this purpose, of which $10 might have been used for the care of children in boarding homes and $50 might be used in these two institutions, thus approximately providing that the entire $75,000 could be used for their care in other institutions—would that have been in order? The gentleman does not question but that that would have been entirely in order. That is to say, Congress may say how much money may be spent for each purpose authorized by law, a large amount or a small amount. Congress may give or may withhold.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. If the gentleman had drawn the language of a provision of that kind in such a way as to take away from this board the guardianship of all children by law vested in them, I would say that that would be contrary to the spirit of the rules of the House with reference to limitations or in reference to legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an extremely close case, but the Chair in deciding it is going to adhere to the general proposition laid down this morning, that when doubt arises as to the effect of a limitation that doubt should be resolved on the conservative side in the interpretation of the rules. The Chair will agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] that this committee can make appropriations for any of these homes or deny them in whole or in part, but the Chair does not feel that the Committee on Appropriations has the right to say that the appropriation will not be available until certain things transpire; this would restrict action of the authorities and limit their functions. The Chair also feels that the provision alters the powers conferred by law upon the board and that therefore it changes existing law, which is contrary to our rules. Without taking the time of the committee to recite precedents, the Chair refers to the ruling rendered a few minutes ago, which the Chair feels embraces the principles involved here. For these reasons the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by inserting after line 5, page 84, the language "of which not more than $20,000 shall be used for board and care of children in boarding homes."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 84, after line 5, insert: "of which not more than $20,000 shall be used for board and care of children in boarding homes."

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order against that amendment, and I call the attention of the Chair again, first, to section 4 of the act of 1892, which gives the care and supervision of all children—and I call attention particularly to the broad language of this act—"the care and supervision of all children"; and at the top of section 5 of the act of 1892 it says: "The board shall be the legal guardian of all children committed to it by the courts and shall have full power to board them in private families, to board them in institutions willing to receive them, to bind them out or apprentice them, or give them in adoption to foster parents."

This amendment changes that law, which is the existing law, giving discretionary power to this board, and makes it mandatory for this board that the larger number of these children shall be put in institutions, and not in private homes, the power to place them in homes being clearly given to the board.

I think the same point of order would lie against this amendment as lay against the proviso.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if there can be a limitation in a parliamentary way, the one that I have just offered is valid. The Board of Children's Guardians, we will say, is authorized to do two things under the law, and we provide that the money we give shall not beyond a certain figure be used for a certain purpose. We do not change their authority if they get their money in another place; we do not stop them from putting children in homes. The gentleman's argument, if carried to the logical conclusion, would be that this Board of Children's Guardians is independent of appropriations by Congress; that they could go out and put children into homes galore regardless of the appropriation; and that they are entitled to the money in the Treasury regardless of the appropriations recommended by the committee in the bill. I submit that the Chair can not sustain that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that this amendment is a very proper limitation, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose the amendment. May I ask unanimous consent that it be read again?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, inasmuch as he proposes to provide $20,000 for the next fiscal year, what was the amount spent for boarding children in private homes during this fiscal year?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that the amendment was very hurriedly prepared. It was intended to take care of about 80 in boarding homes—not over 80.

The gentleman realizes that the purpose of my amendment was to accomplish the same object as that sought to be accomplished by the language of the bill, but not in quite as good a way from an administrative point of view. Possibly the gentleman would like to offer a substitute that would be more nearly along the lines of the bill but give a little more flexibility to it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think that the limitation proposed by the committee is certainly more desirable than this amendment, and I am very hopeful that the committee will vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, because it is inconceivable to me that they would adopt an amendment which would take 370 children from homes, from the care of foster parents, and put them in an institution. I am advised that 450 children in this city are in private homes on a paying basis, and that approximately 1,000 children are in free homes without any cost to the District government. This amendment proposes to take 370 of these children out of the homes where they now are and put them in an institution, allowing only 80 to remain in homes where their maintenance is paid for, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] have pointed out the conditions in one of the institutions in the District of Columbia where children are sent. I want to call attention further to this fact: My information is that the institution where it is proposed to send these children is closed at the present time, and the superintendent who was in charge is no longer employed, so that if this amendment carries it will be necessary to open up this home, engage a new superintendent, and give somebody else a job and place those children in that institution. That is what they propose to do. The modern thought on this subject is home care for children. In 1909 that great American, that great patriot, student, and scholar, Theodore Roosevelt, called a conference here in Washington of the leading educators, of the leading humanitarians, and of the leading child-welfare workers, not only in this country but in England, France, and Belgium, and they met here in this city and adopted resolutions stating that in their judgment the very best way that a child could be cared for was in a home; preferably in a home of is own, or if that were not possible, then in the home of foster parents.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. What does the gentleman mean by "on a paying basis"?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. There are about 450 children in homes where their maintenance is paid for. The board has approximately 2,383 children under its jurisdiction. Of this number 1,736, including 129 feeble-minded children, are permanent wards of the board. Of this number approximately 1,000 are in free homes, either in their own homes under the supervision of the Board of Children's Guardians or in the homes of foster parents, friends, or people who desire to care for them free.

Mr. BLANTON. Are they working their way?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Many of them are helping to do household work and attending public school in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Doing the manual chores around the house?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. In a great many instances.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it the understanding of the gentleman from Maryland that this board has the absolute power to say that all of these children may be placed in individual homes or that all of them shall be placed in homes built for that particular purpose? In other words, is it the gentleman's contention that each child is absolutely under the control of this board?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No; only such children as are committed to the board by the courts of the District.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand that; but after a child is once committed to the care of the Board of Children's Guardians, then it has the absolute power under the law which the gentleman read a minute ago to allocate all these children to private homes. Is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is within the power of the board if they deem it advisable and for the welfare of the children and if they could find that number of homes. It would be within their power to do it, but it would not be sound to assume that they were going to do it, although about 1,400 of the children are in homes—about 1,000 of them in free homes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then it is the gentleman's understanding that this board has the power to take children, for instance, of Protestant families and put them in Protestant institutions and children from Catholic families and put them in Catholic institutions? In other words, the board has unlimited jurisdiction over the children. Is not that true?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It has jurisdiction over the children. The gentleman is citing an extreme example, I should say. There is nothing in the law to say that they shall put a Protestant child in a Protestant home. There is no limitation of that kind.

Mr. McKENZIE. The point I am trying to get at is that any legislation attempted to be put on an appropriation bill limiting the powers of the board would clearly be legislation, and therefore, as the gentleman has contended, would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. COLTON. This amendment would not in any way affect the power of this board one way or the other, would it?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It would not affect the power of the board, but by limiting their appropriation it would compel them to put all of these 450 children except 80 in some institution, probably the institution that has been spoken of here this morning. Now, answering the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], the average cost of the boarding of children in private institutions is $275 per capita per annum. The average cost of the children in this home that has been referred to, and that was in the limitation of last year, was $600 and some odd. I have the figures here.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman made a statement awhile ago that is very suggestive. I want to see whether I understand it or not. Is it proposed by the amendment that the children that have been lodged in homes shall be taken out of the homes and placed in an institution?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Three hundred and seventy of these children who are now in private homes, most of them in homes where there is only one child in each home, will be taken from those private homes, taken from those foster parents, taken from the public schools which they now attend and placed in institutions. That is what the amendment means.

Mr. FESS. When children are placed in homes are they still followed up to know whether they are properly cared for?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. There are inspectors or paid workers who supervise, who go around and check up and ascertain if the child is getting proper treatment. I am told that some of the people of the District who have visited the homes in which these children are kept have been gratified with the treatment they are receiving.

Mr. FESS. So far as I know, one of the chief concerns of any home charged with the care of children, from whatever reason is to find a place in time in a private home somewhere away from the institution, and if that is the purpose of the amendment, it is contrary to all modern thought on the care of children.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the distinguished gentleman from Ohio makes that point. The situation is this: The subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee on the District of Columbia has by this limitation and now by this amendment shown that they are not in accord with the modern practice and thought upon this subject. They are attempting first, by limitation, and now reducing the appropriation for the Board of Children's Guardians to force these children into institutions, when for 20 years the leading thought on this subject has been that the child is best cared for in a home. In New York the famous educator, Dr. Louis Bernstein, made an investigation of 3,000 children, 1,000 in their own homes on the East Side of New York, 1,000 in the homes of foster parents, and 1,000 in institutions. He reached the conclusion that the children who were in their own homes were best cared for, best developed mentally and physically, and those in the homes of foster parents came next, and that the children in the institutions were the lowest in mentality and the lowest physically. This committee wants to change the policy that has been in vogue here for the District of Columbia for 30 years by this limitation, and force 270 children out of homes in which they are properly cared for and place them in an institution after the statement has been made on this floor that children in one of the child-caring institutions here in the District are taught together without regard to color or race.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to take only a moment or two for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] a question. As has been suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] this amendment proposes a very radical change in the policy that has obtained heretofore.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Very radical.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I fail to find in the hearings any adequate evidence on which to found such a change. The matter is very casually brought within the hearings, and does it not occur to the gentleman that we ought to go slow when we have no evidence to warrant us in taking such extreme action as the amendment contemplates?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I think the gentleman is justified in that conclusion, most certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Furthermore, is it not a fact that this institution that we are talking about is capable of taking care of only about from 130 to 150 children?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Not that many. My information is that about 125 is the maximum.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If that be true, then to enforce the requirement embodied in this amendment might lead to great confusion. It might lead to the inability of the authorities of the District to do anything at all in the way of taking care of all the children.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It would lead to confusion, and it would lead first to the opening of this Industrial Home School, and next to the building of a new home. By no other method could they take care of 370 children.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment would do what the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] thinks it would, I would be with him heartily, but I do not think it will do anything of the kind. If it costs $600 to keep a child in the institution as against $170 in a home, then with the limited appropriation we have you certainly could not put them in the higher priced institutions. I believe this Board of Children's Guardians are doing the best they know how, but I want to warn them right now that they are not putting as much care as they should into the proposition. I have over in my office on my desk a stack of affidavits probably an inch and a half or 2 inches high that have come to me from apparently credible people in this District. Ladies from various parts of the District have brought them to me. I expect to put them before the Committee on the District of Columbia at the first opportunity.

These are affidavits from some of these very children in these homes about which the gentleman from Maryland speaks alleging mistreatment. For instance, one little girl is supposed to receive so much a week for her services for washing the dishes and sweeping and scrubbing the floor, for looking after the domestic duties an ordinary household servant looks after, but a rule has been inaugurated in her house under which she is fined for certain acts that she is commanded not to do, and at the end of the week the fines amount to more than the remuneration, and she has never yet received a single cent from the people with whom she lives.

Mr. COLTON. Does the gentleman know whether this case has been brought to the attention of the board?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes. I mentioned some of the cases in a District Committee hearing on another matter a short time ago, and the board has promised to look into the matter very carefully. It was at a hearing before the Committee on the District which did not involve this question, but incidentally I raised it, and expect to bring it to their attention in a more concrete form as soon as we can have a hearing.

I want to say to my friend from Maryland that it behooves us and it behooves this board to look into this proposition, because if 5 per cent of the contents of these affidavits is correct then lots of these little children are mistreated, not alone mistreatment in an ordinary way but they are mistreated in a serious way. But I do not believe that this amendment will hamstring this board. As I said before, I believe that the board is doing the best that it knows how, but that is not enough. It wants to put a little more care and attention and checking up into this matter, and I am with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] on his amendment. I do not believe it is going to hurt the proposition. If they have not sufficient money they will come back to us. We have already had six deficiency bills passed in this Sixty-seventh Congress and I expect that we shall have some more deficiency bills before March 4.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe this last amendment offered by the chairman of the subcommittee is utterly vicious in that it is going to take a lot of these children out of the homes where they now are without any adequate provision for taking care of them anywhere. I have had some experience in helping look after delinquent children and orphans in one way and another. This is the first time in a good many years that I have heard it proposed by anybody that an institution is superior to a private home in which to rear children. Conditions will have to be decidedly bad in a private home if they are any worse than they are in the ordinary institution. I have three orphans in my own home and I have helped place orphans in other homes. I do not know one of them that is not being well cared for and well educated at this time. True, none of these orphans are being cared for and educated with any hope or desire of reward except to see them develop into good and useful citizens. The suggestion of sending any one of them to a public institution would be shocking.

I say the amendment proposed by the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. CRAMTON] is a distinct step backward. It is a step this Congress can not afford to take. The law of 1882 was presumably passed with careful consideration. The members of the board of guardians presumably are an intelligent board. They have made a study of child life and child conditions and of home life and institutional life. I dare say that they are infinitely better prepared to take care of these children in a proper way than any Member who has helped draft this bill and know more about taking care of them. Nor can it be doubted that the board is now giving them better care and more consideration than it can possibly hope to give them if this amendment becomes law. The amendment ought not to be adopted. It ought to be rejected by this House without a dissenting vote.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to say frankly to the committee that the subcommittee, and particularly myself, have given more thought and attention to this paragraph probably than anything else in the bill. I want to express to the committee my intense interest in the subject, my feeling that what we are trying to do is the right thing to do and the most desirable thing to do, and I know the committee realizes that I have no interest in the matter except to attempt to discharge my duty as a Member of Congress and as a member of this committee. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] is correct that there is not very much in the hearings on this subject. I had heard of the rows in the District involving the Board of Children's Guardians. I knew something of the general controversy but did not take it up in the hearings. But further information came to me in regard to this matter, and after the hearings were closed and printed I took up the matter. I have had at least a dozen conferences with all the interests involved. If you read the newspapers, you know there has been a bitter controversy involving the Board of Children's Guardians. There have been other controversies, but I am not concerned about those controversies. I am not concerned about personalities. The gentleman who is chairman of the Board of Children's Guardians is one of the men I most highly esteem in the District of Columbia—a personal friend. There are one or two others on that board that I know, and I hope I enjoy their friendship. This matter I have had up with Commissioner Rudolph, who is in charge of these matters in the District; Mr. McReynolds, president of the board of the Industrial Home; Mr. Millan, president of the Board of Children's Guardians; Mr. Wilson, secretary of the Board of Charities. Now, the situation is this: The Board of Children's Guardians is created as a sort of independent institution that no one has any control over. Its members are selected by certain courts in the District, and there is no supervision over them. They have the care of about 2,000 children in the District. The law, as developed in the previous debate, gives to the Board of Children's Guardians a wide authority—complete authority, you might say—over those children, where they shall be placed, how they shall be maintained—they have very complete authority. Their first duty, their highest duty, and one I think they seek to carry out, is to put the children in homes. Now, what do you understand by that? What I mean is to put the child in a home, a home that wants a child for the child's sake and not for the sake of $20 a month. That is the kind of a home where the child does the best—a home that wants the child and is going to care for it and give it an opportunity. I am sure the Board of Children's Guardians make it their duty and trust to put in such homes as many as they can, and I have no quarrel with them about that. Let us leave out of the question in the discussion of the amendment as to putting children in homes, homes that want children for the sake of children and not homes that want children for the sake of so many dollars a month. Now, after they have taken care of as many as they can by putting them in homes, they can put the others in the two institutions here—the gentleman from Maryland, I think, inadvertently closed his speech with an appeal not to mix up indiscriminately white and black in these homes; why, I am sure he knows better. He was simply talking hurriedly and inadvertently.

There are two industrial homes where this board may send these children, one for whites and one for colored. The one for colored is filled to its capacity; there is no argument there. The one for white, appropriated for by this Congress last year, was closed in the middle of the year. Why? Because the only way a child can be sent to that industrial home is by action of the Board of Children's Guardians, and the Board of Children's Guardians reversed its policy of many years and proceeded to starve to death the industrial home out on Wisconsin Avenue by taking away its children and not sending any others, until there were so few there it was not possible to operate it and the commissioners ordered the institution closed.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In just a minute. Now, the alternative that the Board of Children's Guardians followed was they took these children out of that home maintained by the Government and put them in homes where they are only cared for for pay—boarding homes—and the issue before this committee is whether to maintain these children in boarding homes, without public supervision, or to put them in a public institution. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. Again expressing my confidence in the gentleman's good judgment, how does he arrive at the limitation of $20,000? Is it based largely upon the judgment of those gentlemen with whom he has talked as being a sum sufficient to provide for the care and maintenance during the next year?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think I will reach that in a moment.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will.

Mr. CRAMTON. At the present time we will not discuss colored children, which are not involved, because the colored institution is all filled. The white institution is the one they starved out, and it was closed, and we seek to have it reopened. We own the investment, we have a splendid plant out there, and all we need is to put in the management and put in the children.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. If the gentleman will permit, is the white institution the one out on Wisconsin Avenue?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; near the Naval Observatory.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. That is exclusively for white children?

Mr. CRAMTON. Exclusively. There is a colored institution elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, the situation is this as to these white children in boarding homes: I find that there are now 205 of these white children in boarding homes. Those homes in the main are homes of poor people, homes of people who can not give any great advantages to the children, although if they are the right kind of people, although poor, if they want a child for the sake of the child, it is an opportunity. But these are homes where the chief interest is the money appeal. We find that there are 46 such homes where each home took one of these children at a cost of from $20 to $40 per month. There were three homes where two children were put in each home. There were 20 homes where three children were put in each home for pay. There were 11 homes where four children were put in for pay in each home, and there was one home where nine children were crowded in for pay.

Now, I do not care what is the modern thought about the care of children, my common sense tells me that a child is condemned to a lack of opportunity if he is put in such places, and the Government ceases to perform its function when it takes children from any kind of an established home, any kind of an established institution, and sticks nine of them into one household for the sake of pay, without any public supervision.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Can the gentleman tell us how much they were paid for each of the nine children?

Mr. CRAMTON. Twenty or thirty dollars per month.

Now, when we came to look into it, I thought I would not be doing my duty to the children of the District if I did not try to correct this situation. There are more of these children in the boarding homes than there are in the institution out there. We tried to handle this, not in an arbitrary way but in a practical way, and so we put in the bill the provision that none of the money should be used to put the children in homes as long as there was room for them in the institution. So they put from 100 to 150 into that institution, and then the rest were placed in boarding homes, and if the Board of Children's Guardians use the judgment I think they will they would select the best among the boarding homes to be continued.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is sufficient money proposed?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; we propose to provide sufficient money.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman please tell the committee, for the information of the committee, the relative cost of caring for these children in private homes and in this institution, which is closed?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I will say this: Here is an institution that we own, a good institution, with a little land. We have a schoolhouse. If we reopen it, it is not going to be anything terrible. Teachers of the public-school system in Washington will go in and teach in that school, and to that extent other schools may be relieved. There may be $50 or $100 difference in the cost of putting these children in private homes or in this institution. In the private homes they wash dishes and run errands; no one looks after them in the evening; there is no one to supervise them. They do not dare to let the parents and relatives know where they are, so that they can visit them. I say even if it should cost $50 or $100 more per capita, we should put the children back into this institution, where their relatives and parents can come to them at least on Sunday afternoons and see them, where they can have supervision in the evening as well as in the daytime, and be properly cared for and not farmed out for profit.

Mr. BUTLER. So as to have them looked after?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. Some people say this situation has resulted in consequence of a conflict between the people running the home and the Board of Children's Guardians. I think it is not entirely due to that. I think that was a contributing cause. The amendment pending before the committee is not exactly what I would like to have. I would prefer to have what is in the bill. It provides that they should not put those children in boarding homes unless there was lack of room in the institution. That went out on a point of order made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN]. It is now provided in the amendment that not more than $20,000 shall be used for the board and care of children in private homes. Fifty thousand dollars were used for that purpose, and we have in this bill about $40,000 for their care in this home. Roughly speaking, I think $20,000 would do it. Now that we have got into the parliamentary position we are in, I wish the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] would offer as an amendment the language which is in the bill, which is better.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that I am not in accord with his ideas in regard to this matter. I do not think the House will adopt an amendment to put some of these children out on the street, with no adequate provision to care for the 270. You provide only for 205. How about the colored children?

Mr. CRAMTON. They are all cared for in their institution, and that institution is fully cared for in this bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. A great many of them are in boarding homes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The institution is filled to its capacity. If the committee will sustain us in this proposition and we serve notice on the Board of Children's Guardians that we do not want these poor little waifs to be put into those private homes almost before they are out of the cradle; if we serve notice on the Board of Children's Guardians that we do not like that sort of thing, they will have enough money to see that none of them run out on the street.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in sympathy with the proposition designed for the best care of these children. There seems to be a good deal of difference between the board of managers of the Industrial School for Children and the Board of Children's Guardians. There is not any reason why they should not be able to harmonize their differences. On the one hand, the people in the Industrial School have a great institution. It has been closed because they have taken all the children away from it. There is a certain expense required for the conduct of that institution regardless of whether you have any children there or not. We have a lot of land there. It is beautifully located. They are doing a great work. Now the Board of Children's Guardians are also doing a great work. They are wonderful people. I am very sympathetic with the work that both of these boards are doing, but there ought not to be any difficulty in getting them together. Manifestly we can not get them together. We have not the time, and we ought not to be required to sit and listen to the arguments of one against the other. Both works are good. But there is a great field for the school, and it ought to be filled; I mean the field ought to be filled. The work should be done, and the school should be utilized to its fullest extent as a receiving home for a period, after which the children can be taken away systematically and properly placed. But when we take the children and place them, say, as many as 12 in a home, that can not be said to be good home finding.

It is true that there are only nine now in the home where they have the greatest number, but there have been 12. Now, my conception of the work is that there never should be more than one child in a private home, if we are going to find private homes for them; but if we have a public institution capable of taking care of them, why not take care of them there during all the preliminary stages of their care? Why take them away from that and send them to a private home where some private individual, not under anybody's legal supervision, may have complete jurisdiction over the child?

Mr. BUTLER. What is the occasion for taking them away?

Mr. MADDEN. As I say, I think Mrs. West, who has done some of this work, is a wonderful woman. She has been doing a great work. I have been very glad to try to help her in every way I could. But, in my judgment, the time has come when this House must for the time being put its foot down and say to both the Board of Children's Guardians and the board of the Industrial Home that there must be some superior authority over both somewhere; and we suggest the Commissioners of the District, who are all good men and who have very sympathetic hearts, and who will conduct this affair as it ought to be conducted. So there is no great principle at stake here. We are trying to fill the gap with a proposal that will carry us over until an agreement can be reached. We hope that the House will accept our suggestion, because we are not trying to embarrass anybody. We are not trying to do any injury to the children. We are as sympathetic for them as anybody can be; and, if you will accept the suggestion made by the committee, you will enable us to enable somebody else to do the thing which in the long run will be best for all, and the children themselves will not suffer in the meantime, and in the end they will be much better off.

Mr. BUTLER. The condition here grows out of a dispute as to the best method of taking care of these children, does it not?

Mr. MADDEN. That is it.

Mr. BUTLER. Some of these gentlemen in official positions are of the opinion that the children can be better taken care of in the home than they can be in these private residences; and we are not taking part in that.

Mr. MADDEN. No; we are not taking any part in that. What we want to do is to fill the gap, to get a breathing spell until we can compel an amicable adjustment of the case along lines that will be best calculated to provide properly for the children.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make it clear that the action of the committee has nothing to do with putting the children in homes where they will be received without pay or for adoption. We are not interfering with that at all.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this is a matter that I think should be viewed from the standpoint of the welfare of the children alone; but it may be pertinent to state to the membership of this House that it costs about $600 per capita to maintain a child in the Government institution in the District, and it costs from $200 to $300 per capita to board each child out in private families. So if this amendment carries, it will be added expense to the Government instead of a lessened expense. However, as I stated, we should not regard finances when trying to reclaim human beings. I believe the reclamation of human souls is one of the greatest objects that can be accomplished by any body of men or any person or individual in the world. So that I approach this subject merely from the interest of the children.

All progressive thought, all experience, has arrived at the conclusion—all of the institutions that are doing humanitarian work with children, and others who have gone astray, have arrived at the conclusion—that they should be separated into classes and segregated from one another, that the most incorrigible should be kept together and that those who are not quite so bad should be put into another class, and so on, so that those who are not completely lost will not be contaminated by association with the worst. Therefore it is to the interest of these children not to compel them to be put together in one institution, where the extremely bad child tells its experience to those who are not so bad.

I think the best place for them is in private homes. The chairman of the subcommittee condemns private homes that charge for boarding these children. Perhaps they are not all able to support them without charge. All the virtue and all the refinement are not confined to the homes of the rich. There are poor people in this country who are just as noble and honorable and elevating in their conduct and instruction to others as are the rich. There may be such families in the District of Columbia who are childless, who want one, two, three, or even four children, in order that they may have a family to look after and take care of and take an interest in. I say this amendment will be the most detrimental to these children of any act that Congress ever passed.

Let me call your attention to another thing. The members of the Board of Children's Guardians receive absolutely no pay for their work. They are prompted alone by humanitarian impulses. They have alone the interest of these children at heart. They study these children, they classify them, and when they put them into these private homes they have them regularly inspected, to see that they are treated right and that the right influences surround them. Yet the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and others claim that they know more about the raising of these children than do these noble men and women who constitute the Board of Children's Guardians for the District of Columbia. I am on this subcommittee, but I can never find myself in accord with placing such restrictions upon the activities of the Board of Children's Guardians when nothing wrong, no bad conduct, and no mismanagement has been brought home to that board. I would encourage them, I would uphold their hands, instead of condemning them by such restrictive legislation.

This Industrial Home was closed last year because they placed all of the children out in private homes, either for board paid or for nothing, and they closed this institution. It should remain closed as long as we can take care of these children in private families, surrounded by good influences. All advanced thought of every humanitarian organization advises and commends that method of caring for dependent children. [Applause.]

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no doubt that all those who are concerned in the care of dependent children believe it is much better for the children to be put out in families than to be cared for in institutions. It is well known that when the institutional child gets out into life he meets conditions quite different from institutional conditions. I do not go so far as some who say that the worst family is better than the best institution, but I do say that the practice of getting children out of institutions and into families under proper supervision is unquestionably the right method of treatment. I gather from what some gentlemen have said that there may have been some abuses in the District in cases where children have been put into private homes where their board has been paid, and where a number of children are boarded in that way together where possibly the money is the principal consideration. I agree that that is not generally a good thing. But I think it is a very erroneous argument to say that you have an institution which is vacant and that therefore you must fill it.

Mr. MADDEN. But the Board of Children's Guardians themselves think that they ought to have a receiving home. If they want a receiving home independent from the one that we have, why not use the one that we have? They have said that to me.

Mr. MERRITT. If they need a receiving home, then I should think you ought to let the Board of Children's Guardians themselves judge to what extent they want to use it, and not limit them artificially by a certain part of the appropriation. There is no question that the way this legislation ought to point is toward putting children in carefully selected homes. The gentleman says that they still may go in homes where no board is required—free homes. The difficulty with that situation is, or has been in cases that I know about, that the people take these children for what they can get out of them.

They say they do not pay any board, and that they must work. That is wrong. They ought to be put in selected homes and then very carefully supervised, so that they shall not be abused, and they shall get home surroundings, and when their time comes to go out into the world, meet the same conditions to which they have been accustomed in their life. They ought to be brought up as nearly as possible under normal family conditions, and anything that arbitrarily forces the Board of Guardians to put them into an institution should be avoided. I think the right thing is to defeat this amendment and have the legislation proposed improved if it is necessary, but to leave the Board of Guardians free to do what they in their judgment think is best, with the emphasis on placing them in homes under proper supervision.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I think that to do as is suggested here—that is, to continue the policy that sometimes seems to have been adopted of placing children in boarding homes—would be manifestly a step backward, and a most unfortunate one. There is no chapter in the early history of this country that is more appealing than the action that used to be taken in the New England States first, and afterwards in some of the Western States, by which these unfortunate children were placed in boarding homes. The bad effects, the tyranny, the cruelty, the injustice with which these children were treated in so many instances have found their place in fiction and in poetry. The practice has been abandoned in so far as I know everywhere in the United States. There is no possible question in my mind but that these children ought to be kept in institutional homes until they can be placed in homes under the expectation and with a view that they will be adopted and become the adopted children in the homes where they are placed.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. In a moment. But, Mr. Chairman, to place these children, 5 or 6 or 8 or 9 or 10, or even 1, in homes where the only incentive that actuates the persons who receive them is the pay that they receive, and when it is then understood that these children are to be left free practically from any responsibility of the State or of the District where they live during that time, is certainly a most unfortunate condition. In the whole history of this country that policy has been abandoned, and should the Congress of the United States now deliberately adopt it as a policy for the District of Columbia it would be a very backward step, to my mind. That would be most unfortunate. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MERRITT. Does the gentleman claim that the policy of placing a single child in a home and paying board for it has been abandoned?

Mr. TOWNER. I think so; very generally.

Mr. MERRITT. Not at all. On the contrary it is being extended all throughout New England now.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the policy of taking children from these institutions and placing them in private families for board is being adopted?

Mr. MERRITT. Not for board, but they find the family first. They do not let the family find them. They have agents to go about and find a good family where they can induce the mother or whoever runs the house to take the child. The mother may say that she would like to take the child, but that she can not afford it. The answer then is that the State will pay her so much a month. The child is then placed there and visited every month by an agent of the State to see that the child is properly taken care of, goes to school, and is properly clad. They find as a matter of fact that these children have much better treatment and are much less exploited than in homes where they are placed without pay. Of course I agree that there have been homes in New England and elsewhere where people take young babies—they call them baby farms—and other children where there have been abuses, but that is a practice that has been abandoned.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not imagine that the gentleman thinks that any family that takes nine children does so except for the money there is in it, and further I am quite reliably advised that little babies have been taken out of the Foundlings Home here in the District and put into boarding homes, and have finally been brought back in wretched condition, and those are the things that we want to stop.

Mr. MERRITT. What I should say about that is that the matter of placing the child and of supervision are not properly done, but the practice is correct if it is properly done.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I still think that it can not be possible that in this country the proposition of putting these children into boarding homes is a policy that is either approved or in fact adopted and carried out. The proposition involved here is this; and it only needs to be considered, as it seems to me, to appeal to the judgment of any man when he comes to think about it: As soon as you take the child away and put it in a place to board, where the responsibility is only with whom it is boarding, where the care is only with them, where the nurture is only with them, where the influence that surrounds the child is only with them, then to that extent those who are in authority relieve themselves from responsibility as to that child. If they can place the child in a home with a prospect of adoption, with the expectation of adoption where a mercenary motive is not controlling, and a different condition exists, everybody will approve it, but under conditions shown here where four or five or six or eight or ten or more children are placed in a single family to board, it seems to me the practice can not under any circumstances be approved.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. There is no question, I suppose, but that in the old days—and Dickens brings it out in his writings—in England, the insane and different people were put in private homes before institutions grew up, and there was a great deal of abuse under those conditions; but the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT], in what he says, states the case with respect to Massachusetts also, because there the system has grown up under careful supervision of putting these children in homes, and the people who take care of them are paid for it. Of course, like anything else, that is subject to abuse, but as I understand it in this case, this is merely a stop gap while this matter is in a transition stage, and merely because you vote for the committee amendment it does not mean that you are against that principle.

Mr. TOWNER. It seems to me that we ought all to appreciate the situation.

We are not establishing a home; it is there. It was built for that particular purpose. Now, it has been pointed out that these children have been put out to people who will take them for money. Those are the influences now that control the care and nurture of these children. Are we going to approve of that, Mr. Chairman? Can it be that the Congress of the United States can approve it? It certainly seems to me we can not. If we vote down this amendment we approve the boarding out of children to the extent of nine in a family. Are we ready to do that? It certainly seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we can not in the interest of humanity, of justice, of the fulfillment of the responsibility resting upon us—we can not approve of such a practice as that.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is uttering such a fine sentiment, why does he call them "homes"; they are only stopping places.

Mr. TOWNER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not a fact that the children, whether placed in these private homes or whether they are kept in these institutions, are raised merely mechanically, are they not?

Mr. TOWNER. To a certain extent they are.

Mr. BUTLER. The best you can do is to put them in a home, in my judgment, and that has been my observation in Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it seems to me that, swept of all verbiage, the arguments of the proponents asking for this amendment are indictments of the board. If there have been nine children that have been put in a private home, that is a question of management on the part of the board. Surely there is a way of reaching that without adopting this amendment. But the policy and principle that the best place for the child is in a home remains unchanged, and I think even those who are advocating this amendment do not dispute that. Therefore it is a step backward if we adopt this amendment. This institutional school has been run in days past. It has been closed because they found homes for those children. Now, there is one other question: If this amendment is adopted, who is to say as to which children shall go into the institution or which shall remain in these private homes? What assurance have we that the nine children are the ones to be changed? The same board that has directed it in the past will direct it in the future.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. I give the board more credit than does the gentleman. I assume discretion being left with the board they will leave those where the conditions in the private home are the best and take those where they are most undesirable.

Mr. COLTON. In answer to that, let me say I give the board full credit. Let them use their discretion. There may be one case where there are nine children in a home. That of itself does not necessarily prove that a policy is wrong. I know of splendid men who have been reared in homes where there were nine children. I know of good men and women also who were reared in homes where there were 10 children. The number in the home is not an argument against a failure of the principle. It is only in cases where abuse is shown that would have any influence, and even that does not affect the policy, or, at least, does not prove it wrong. It is a question of the personnel of the board entirely, and not an argument against the principle. I hope that this Congress will not go back but will go forward. As has been said here a progressive plan has been worked out by some of the best men and women in order that children may be subject to home environment and conditions. It is accepted by the best minds of the day as the best way to handle the situation. Why then force this institution open as long as these men and women can find homes for these children? I am willing to leave it to them to use their best judgment.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. I will yield.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have wondered where the nine children were—if that was the condition that grew out of the fact that the Board of Children's Guardians had no receiving home. Does anybody know how long these children have remained in that home? Can the chairman inform me?

Mr. COLTON. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. MADDEN. Quite a while.

Mr. COLTON. I am only contending for the principle. We have appropriated for this board, it has done excellent work, and we ought not to tie its hands by an amendment of this kind. I feel sure that under the law supervision will follow these children even after they are placed in homes. I do not believe any institution can ever take the place of a good home.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I must admit it is a new principle to me that children are being placed in homes where they receive pay for keeping them there. It happens that I have drawn charters for some of these homes, and every New Year's morning for the last 30 years I, together with others, have visited these homes. And I might add that I have had to do, as attorney for the homes, with placing many children, and never was there a child put out by which the institution or anybody else paid one cent, never. It was taken by some person who wanted it to raise, and I want to say that the history of these children is the history of men and women who have accomplished something in this world. One gentleman said that there had not been anything accomplished by those, that there was a blight on them. I do not agree with him. Everyone knows that in every institution of any standing the first things the children are taught are the principles of the American Government, the principles underlying the American flag. The first song that is sung in each one of these institutions that I speak of, that I have visited on New Year's morning for 35 years, is the Star-Spangled Banner, and the first thing they are taught is to reverence the American Constitution.

That is the kind of a place in which to raise a child. That is the place where the child gets the right training, instead of no training, or such training as has been described here to-day. They are started right, and then good-hearted people come there and select the children and bring them up, not because they are going to be paid, but as a member of their own family, when they adopt them, because they are required to adopt them after keeping them a year, or else to return them; and nine out of ten are adopted.

That makes a real home, and I am really surprised to see that the city of Washington has no home for these children. The State of Ohio looks after its children. Why should not the great United States, represented here in its capital at Washington, have proper institutions in which to put these children, where they can receive the right kind of training, and where they can be looked after until they reach such an age as will enable them to look after themselves? I am very strongly in favor of this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I find myself considerably in sympathy with the idea of distributing these children in families. I have heard no evidence here that even those children who are housed in a family of nine have been mistreated or mismanaged in any way. I can easily understand why it might be better for the managers here and there to find a place where six or seven or even eight children might be taken care of in a group. I can easily get into my mind the thought that a good woman can take care of five or six children if she had nothing else to do and would do it better than one who had a great deal to do and was taking care of only one or two. I am fully of the belief that if children can be put into proper families they are much better off than they are in institutions, leaving out of consideration entirely the cost of the transaction.

I know that is the practice up in my country. Of course, in the beginning they are all taken into an institution. I do not know that in our institutions we place them out for pay, but I can readily understand how many people of ordinary means would be glad to take one or two or three children and bring them up not only for the benefit of the children themselves but later perhaps for the purpose of having the children help take care of their foster parents themselves. I have not heard of any case here, as I say, where a child has been mistreated. I have heard it stated where some have been brought back into the institution. But that is an ordinary occurrence, and it could occur anywhere. Therefore it seems to me that if it is contemplated that all the children shall be kept for all time in an institution, I would be opposed to that.

I do not understand now what is going to be done with these three or four hundred children who are farmed out when you open up this institution about which you are talking. I would like to know if it is the intention to bring back any considerable number of these children who are out now into the institution and then put them out somewhere else. That seems to me a wrong principle. If you want to open up this institution as an entrance place for children with a view of finding a home for them eventually and putting them out into such a home, I think that would be proper. But I think it would be advisable to take them away from families as soon as and whenever it is shown that those families are not the proper ones to be intrusted with the care of the children. I do not know much about this amendment, but I would be opposed to it if I thought it would have the effect of discontinuing the practice of putting children out into families either for pay or without pay.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. It will not interfere in any way with putting them out. It will entirely do away with putting them out for pay, because the institution would take care of them. But it would stop the worst feature that exists now in regard to it.

Mr. SNYDER. I am glad of that, because I think the policy should be continued of placing the children out. I think a wrong impression may have gone out, and it may have a bad effect on the children—an impression to the effect that this Congress believes that the families who are caring for these children now for pay are doing it merely from a mercenary motive.

Mr. BUTLER. We are going to get rid of that part of it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It was the desire of the subcommittee to dispense with putting them out into homes for pay. The bill as brought into the House did prevent putting them out for pay, and this amendment went as far as it could to stop it, and this is the first step in order to stop paying people for the board of children put into any private home.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Texas does not want to misstate the bill. The bill did not prevent putting out any children for pay.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It prevented putting out any children for pay until the institution was filled. Then there is a well-defined propaganda on foot to sell this institution and buy a thousand acres out in the country in order to make the institution bigger.

Mr. CRAMTON. So far as I know, I have not heard of any thousand-acre proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. One hundred and fifteen acres.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, up in my country we have what we call "summer excursions" from the city of New York up into the section in which I live. Hundreds of children are brought up there for two weeks' vacation. There is never one of those excursions that several of those children are not kept up in the country, where they find good homes and are well brought up—of course, not for pay. But I see no difference in it. As the gentleman from Texas well said in his remarks, many families in meager circumstances might easily find that it would be a great help to them as well as to the children to have one or two or three children in the family, and my suggestion was that we limit it so that not more than two could be placed in one family. That might correct this whole situation here.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Was the gentleman in the Chamber when the chairman of the subcommittee stated that this would only take care of 80 children in private families out of 450?

Mr. SNYDER. I think I heard him make that statement.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. And allow 370 to be put into an institution, and there is no institution to receive them.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know where anyone got that statement. There are 205 white children in boarding families. This institution will take care of 125 to 150. That leaves about 80 to be affected by the amendment.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. But there is not sufficient money to take care of them.

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly there is.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. $20,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. According to the gentleman's own statement it takes from $200 to $250 for each child.

Mr. SNYDER. Then, it is the intention to open up this institution under the amendment to take care of the receiving of other children, and it has no bearing at all upon those who are out. If that is so, what is going to happen to those who are out in the families we are complaining about, where there are more than two or three or four in a family? Are we going to disturb the family which has nine children, whose board is being paid, or are we not? Can the gentleman give me any information with regard to that? What is going to be the disposition of those children who are out in homes, numbers greater than one, two, or three?

Mr. CRAMTON. What the committee wants to do is to stop their putting as many as nine in a family, farming them out in a baby home. That is what we are trying to get at.

Mr. SNYDER. What would you limit the number to?

Mr. CRAMTON. Instead of putting them in homes where they are only taken for pay I would put them into an institution that the Government already has.

Mr. SNYDER. The statement of the gentleman from Michigan about not putting them in a home for pay is all right, but the way he makes it does not please me. He is so emphatic about it that it looks as though it meant that he thinks no child would receive decent treatment in a home where the care of that child was being paid for. I do not believe he means that, but it sounds that way. I believe that in ninety cases out of a hundred where children are put into homes for pay they are getting proper treatment and proper care.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I understand from the gentleman's last statement that what he is opposed to is the putting as many as nine children in one home?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am opposed to boarding homes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Why can you not adopt an amendment providing that only one or two shall be put in any one home for pay?

Mr. CRAMTON. That reaches only a part of the situation. Of course, the more there are in one home the worse it is.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: At the end of the amendment add the following: "Provided, That the white and colored children be segregated."

Mr. CRAMTON. As far as I know, they are segregated.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to show the gentleman that they are not. I want to show that in a similar institution they are not. The distinguished lady from Minnesota who has charge of that home testified before the committee as follows:

Mrs. MORSE. * * * The most unfortunate part of the present situation is that there are two groups, both white and black, confined there.

Mr. CRAMTON. How many of each, approximately?

Mrs. MORSE. They average about 33 per cent of white as against 66 of black.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is, about 30 or 40 white and the balance black?

Mrs. MORSE. Yes; that per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON. How many blacks?

Mrs MORSE. About 66 per cent will run black.

Mr. CRAMTON. About 60 or 70, because there are 106 or 108 in the institution.

Mr. JOHNSON. About two-thirds of one and one-third of the other?

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just one minute. This distinguished woman, who has had much to do with such institutions, said that her big problem is in having these white and black girls there together, living together, eating together, studying together.

Mr. SNYDER. Where is that?

Mr. BLANTON. In the National Home for Girls.

Mr. SNYDER. That is a prison, is it not?

Mr. BLANTON. No; it is not. It is one of the institutions to which this Board of Children's Guardians could send some of their children if they wanted to. They are mixing them up, 66 black and 35 white. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] might say that his great University of Michigan does that; that the white and the black all go there and sit together in classroom and play football together and baseball and basket ball, and all that. It is true; but when the white children go to the University of Michigan they go of their own volition; they do not have to go there. They could pick Princeton, which segregates them. They could pick the Howard University, a great institution for the colored people in Washington, which segregates them, which does not let a white person go there. They could pick Columbia, if they wanted to. But these particular white girls are forced by governmental law into an institution where they have to eat together and sleep together and work together and study together with blacks, and it is not right and it ought to be stopped. It appeals to my friend from Maryland, and it should appeal to my friend from Michigan, where it is a national institution, because there are States in this Nation that do not believe in that practice. There are white girls in this District of Columbia, however wayward they may be, who do not believe in it, and they ought not to be forced to do it; and even if the gentleman's amendment is to be voted down in order to have a proper amendment to vote upon, we ought to adopt this proviso before we vote upon it. Then it will be a proper amendment that we could vote upon as men who believe in protecting the rights of white girls in the District of Columbia as well as elsewhere in the United States.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, there is no mixing of the races in any boarding home or institution where children are sent by the Board of Children's Guardians. The institution to which the gentleman refers was the Industrial School for Girls, and even if the gentleman's amendment should be adopted it would not reach that situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 21, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were—ayes 37, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIHLMAN: Page 84, at the end of line 5, insert:

"Provided, That the board of trustees of the Industrial Home School of the District of Columbia is abolished on and after the date of the approval of this act, and thereafter the powers and duties of such board as specified and restricted by law shall be transferred to and vested in the Board of Children's Guardians: Provided further, That on and after the date of the approval of this act the authority to appoint and remove members of the Board of Children's Guardians is transferred from the judges of the police court and the judge holding the criminal court in the District of Columbia to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and shall be exercised by them in accordance with section 2 of the act of July 26, 1892 (27 Stat., p. 268), and the powers and duties of the Board of Children's Guardians as prescribed by or pursuant to law shall thereafter be performed under such regulations as may be made by said board and approved by the commissioners."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] I think is a desirable one and should be adopted, notwithstanding the fact that I am very much disappointed that the other portion of our program of readjustment has been defeated. The institution in question has been managed heretofore by the industrial home board, but no one could be placed in it or taken out of it except by action of the Board of Children's Guardians, which necessarily brought about a controversy. At the same time, the Board of Children's Guardians is a sort of independent body, with no supervision. This amendment proposes that they shall be brought under the supervision of the commissioners and become a part of the general system of the District, and that appointments to fill vacancies upon the board shall be made by the commissioners. I am in hopes that it will do much to improve the situation, and eventually work out the reforms that I am satisfied are very greatly needed under the Board of Children's Guardians. This does not wipe out the institution. It transfers the institution to the Board of Children's Guardians.

I may say, and I think it should be said, that in my conferences with these different officials—and I have had conferences with the board of management of the home—I have never encountered any officials who have looked at a proposition in a more generous fashion than have they. They have put what they thought was the interest of the children above all personal considerations, and have gone so far as to agree to this proposition which does legislate them out of office. Their agreement as to that, I think, was based upon the hope that the other legislation would carry, that would provide for the opening of the institution, and they cared more about the opening of the institution than they did about their own jobs; but whether the institution is opened or not, it ought to be under the only board that can put children into the institution, and I want to commend the generous attitude of the members of that board in the industrial home.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BURIAL OF INDIGENT EX-SERVICE MEN.

For expenses of burying in the Arlington National Cemetery, or in the cemeteries of the District of Columbia, indigent ex-Union soldiers, ex-sailors, or ex-marines, of the United Service, either Regular or Volunteer, who have been honorably discharged or retired, and who die in the District of Columbia, to be disbursed by the Secretary of War, at a cost not exceeding $45 for such burial expenses in each case, exclusive of cost of grave, $500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair respectfully calls the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the language on page 89, line 24, "United Service." Ought not the word "States" be inserted after the word "United"?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think the language is the same as used in the current law.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, that is a phrase that is used to express the different military services, taking in the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. They are sometimes spoken of as the United Service. That is, if there is a club maintained by the various services, it may be called the United Service Club. I suppose that is what is done in this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

ANACOSTIA RIVER AND FLATS.

For continuing the reclamation and development of Anacostia Park, to be expended in accordance with the plans specified in the item for the reclamation of the Anacostia River and Flats, contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $150,000, to be expended below Benning Bridge.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph as being legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, it is possible that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and myself have misapprehended the paragraph to which the Chair called attention a moment ago. Upon reference to the prior law, it seems that the word "States" was used after the word "United," and the phrase "United Service" would not be applicable here.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 89 for the purpose of inserting in line 24, after the word "United," the word "States" and to spell the word "service" with a small "s."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph mentioned for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to insert after the word "United," in line 24, page 89, the word "States" and to spell the word "service" with a small "s." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill. It is one of these projects where an attempt has been made from time to time to unload certain property on the Government.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the item in question is an appropriation for the continuation of the reclamation and development of the Anacostia Park, and clearly it is an appropriation to continue an existing project. The work is under way, and this is simply to continue that work.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair will note that the only appropriation that has ever been made was merely provisions in an appropriation bill. Members might not have objected to carrying on certain provisions for parks then, but this is to buy land below Benning Bridge, and the Chair will note the legislation to which the Chair refers is legislation on an appropriation bill which expired at the termination of that year—the 1919 appropriation. There is nothing in there that made it permanent nor language that intimated it should be permanent.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the act of 1919 provided for this project, and provided for the levying of assessments, and so forth. Of course, the Chair is familiar with the fact that permanent law can be carried just as effectively in an appropriation act as in any other place. There may be some question as to the jurisdiction of the committee in reporting it which would make it subject to a point of order in the House, but if the point of order is not made and the bill passes and carries that language it is just as much permanent law as otherwise. This project began in 1915 or prior thereto.

Mr. BLANTON. That is, on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. On an appropriation bill. I have not at hand the initial legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman will note there was a skipping in appropriation from 1915 to 1919. It was just what Congress saw fit to do in a certain appropriation year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan where was authority given to start work on this project?

Mr. CRAMTON. Apparently it was first authorized in the District of Columbia appropriation act of 1915, which, unfortunately, I have not at hand. In 1919 the work was again undertaken, and the appropriation was made in 1919 of $75,000, and each year from 1919 on there has been an annual appropriation for this work. There has never been any limit of cost fixed, and the work is a work in progress and is sustained under that rule, which makes in order an appropriation for continuing existing work now in progress.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that since 1919 this particular item has been held back because of points of order and kept out of his bill ever since 1919?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know that to be the fact, but I do know that we have carried appropriations each year for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow the Chair to ask another question? As far as the gentleman from Michigan knows, has there been any limit placed upon this improvement?

Mr. CRAMTON. There has been no limit placed, according to the best of my recollection; but the act of 1915, as I have hastily consulted it, provided an appropriation "for continuing the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and flats from Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line, to be expended under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army upon plans heretofore authorized to be prepared; said sum to be available for the preparation of plans, the prosecution of the work, the employment of personal service, and for such other purposes as, in the judgment of the Chief of Engineers, may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this appropriation, $100,000." Then it goes on and provides for an assessment of special benefits, and so forth. So from year to year they have continued this same work. It is an existing project without any limit of cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair takes it from the gentleman's remarks that he is clear in his own mind that the authorization was duly made.

Mr. BLANTON. That must be shown to the Chair. It must not be taken for granted. I controvert that proposition and challenge the gentleman now to show that there was any such authorization of Congress except a provision in an appropriation bill. That must be clearly shown to the Chair to make it good against the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will judge for himself.

Mr. BLANTON. I was speaking of the general rule; I was not speaking of how the present Chairman might rule.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not want to be understood as saying there has ever been a separate legislative authorization for this project. I have not had opportunity to make a full examination. I do say it is a project that has been appropriated for from year to year, is now under way, and the appropriation we are offering is simply to continue that Government project, a work that is now under way. In the act of 1915 I found a reference to plans heretofore authorized to be prepared. Now, I have not at hand that authorization, but that act of 1915 provides for the assessment of special benefits, and so forth, and provides for a jury and the acquiring of land and the levying of an assessment and the collection of money thereon, and the full necessary legislation for the carrying on of this project. I do not find that any limit of cost was fixed; hence the appropriation before us is within the limit of cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds in a different volume that he has consulted a reference to the previous plan, but the Chair has not found where the plan itself is authorized, or the nature of it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Has the Chair the 1915 act before him?

The CHAIRMAN. He has the act of 1914 and that of 1918 and that of 1919. The Chair has not the act of 1915.

Mr. CRAMTON The act of 1914 carried the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The act of 1914 speaks of carrying out the work in accordance with a plan previously adopted.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Chair is referring to the act approved in 1914, but it is for the fiscal year 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. So far as I can find that is the first appropriation. Then on page 149 the Chair will find the legislation then adopted for the levying of the assessments and awarding the benefits. In that appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, in the first paragraph, the appropriation is $100,000, and then it provides:

In connection with said reclamation and development of the river and flats from the Anacostia Bridge to the District line, the Secretary of War is authorized to acquire by purchase or by condemnation, for highway and park purposes, the fee simple and absolute title to the land along the Anacostia River on both sides thereof between the high-water lines of said river, as determined by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, and lines following approximately the contour of 10 feet elevation on each side of said river above mean low water at the United States Navy Yard from the Anacostia Bridge to the northeast boundary line between the District of Columbia and Maryland; and also all land below the high-water lines on each side of said Anacostia River between the limits named that is not now owned by the United States; and the appropriation herein made for the reclamation and development of Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line, and all appropriations heretofore made for said purpose are hereby made available for the purchase or condemnation of said land and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages for said land and the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings in the event that it is necessary to institute such condemnation proceedings.

Then it provides, as I stated, for the assessments of benefits.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the Chair will find that the Secretary of War exhausted his authorization given in that act.

These are all contining matters based upon subsequent acts of Congress, and the Chair probably was present at the time when I called attention to this very matter in 1921. I called the attention of my colleagues to the fact that there was a scheme on foot then to unload new land out there in that vicinity on the Government. The Chair can look at the hearings and look at the Budget estimates, or if he will wait one moment I think I can give him a citation.

Mr. CRAMTON. While the gentleman is looking for the citation I may say that no portion of the appropriation is for the acquisition of new land. It is only to continue the project now under way of developing those lands in question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule unless the gentleman from Texas has something further to add.

Mr. BLANTON. On page 967, if the Chair will permit me, in the message of the President of the United States, transmitting the Budget, he will find this language: "For condemnation of small park areas," and so forth, "in the District of Columbia." That is under the head of "Anacostia River Flats."

Mr. CRAMTON. That land is to be acquired. Those intersections, and so forth, have nothing to do with these Anacostia Flats.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. The Chair is in sympathy with the propositions that we pass upon very frequently in regard to the continuation of a public work already in progress, but it seems to the Chair that there is a degree of unwarranted legislation involved in this paragraph, and on that ground the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does not the Chair recognize that it is a continuing work? The Chair evidently has an impression that there is to be a broadening of the project under this item, but the situation is simply this: They are dredging the land and $30,000 of this $150,000 will complete the dredging, and $120,000 of it is to start work on the sea wall. There is no more land to be acquired. It is simply a continuing Government work. It is very difficult to understand why——

Mr. BLANTON. What is the difference between buying land and making new land by spending $150,000 for dredging? It is the acquisition of land and spending money.

Mr. CRAMTON. They have had under way the development and reclamation of that Anacostia Flat for seven years. The work is under way, in progress. It is simply asking money to continue that progress, but to buy no new land whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that there is legislation involved in this item which is clearly against the rule, and on that ground the Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment: Page 91, following line 11, insert: "For continuing the reclamation and development of Anacostia Park, $150,000, to be expended below Benning Bridge."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that it is legislation unauthorized. It is merely a subterfuge. You can not do indirectly what you can not do directly on an appropriation bill brought in by the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair has held that this is a project which is subject to a point of order, and I am sure that the Chair will take into consideration what has gone before.

The CHAIRMAN. The main objection to the item ruled upon before was the legislation in it, although the Chair did have some objection to the other feature of it; but on the broad-gauge plan that has been in practice in reference to public works the Chair will hold this amendment in order, because the amendment is relieved of the objectionable feature of the legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the eloquence of the gentleman from Michigan seems almost to have persuaded the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 91, after line 11, insert: "For continuing the reclamation and development of Anacostia Park, $150,000, to be expended below Benning Bridge."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For foremen, gardeners, mechanics, and laborers employed in the public grounds, $31,200.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Will it interfere with the consideration of this bill to give me 10 minutes to speak out of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. I wish the gentleman would defer that until we get a little further along with the bill. I think before the committee rises we can accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This is January 8, the anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans. I was born and raised in that district. Other people may not deem it important, but we of that district do.

Mr. CRAMTON. Before the committee rises I think the gentleman can get the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for the increased cost in park maintenance, $50,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order on lines 17 and 18. May I ask the chairman why it is necessary this year to provide an additional $50,000 for increased cost of maintenance of our parks? We made a tremendous increase last year.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are a great number of parks here, and several years ago an item like this was put in to provide for the increased cost of park maintenance.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the committee go into this matter?

Mr. CRAMTON. We are continuing the appropriations of the current year.

Mr. BLANTON. Is any new project involved?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; it is for park maintenance generally and continuing what they have this year.

Mr. BLANTON. The only thing in which I was interested was to find out whether there is any new project. I understand the gentleman to state that there is none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not under this item.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation of $25,000 contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923 for the construction of a bathing beach and bathhouse for the colored population of the city is continued and made available for such construction and for maintenance during the fiscal year 1924.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this paragraph as being legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill. There is no substantive legislation authorizing this $25,000 appropriation.

Mr. CRAMTON. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is not a new appropriation. It is a reappropriation of a similar item carried in the bill for this year. As I understand it, the appropriation carried for the current year, $25,000, was for the construction of the bathing beach, and the request was that we reappropriate it for next year, as I understand the construction has not been completed. Possibly it can be completed if necessary by the 1st of July, but the desire was to make it available for next year and to make it available for maintenance as well as construction, making really for greater economy.

Mr. BLANTON. There was a provision in the last appropriation bill authorizing this expenditure, but that did not become permanent law. I am sure the gentleman will admit that the construction has not begun. The gentleman knows that a reappropriation is a new appropriation, and the mere fact that it would have been subject to a point of order last year but did not go out on a point of order would not make the appropriation in order now. I submit that it is just as much subject to a point of order now as it was last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan whether or not work has commenced yet on any part of this project?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman can not show that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not say. Of course, it can be begun before the 1st of July, and I suppose it is their purpose to begin it before the 1st of July. The principal desire behind the item—and I hope to urge that on the gentleman from Texas—is to make the money available not only for construction, but for maintenance; that is to say, to save something out of the appropriation already authorized for construction to make it available for maintenance. It is a matter of economy. If the gentleman insists on his point of order, and it is sustained, there is nothing to prevent the authorities going ahead and using the $25,000 for construction.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know how the gentleman's people in Michigan feel about it, but the people in my district are getting tired of building skating ponds and bathing beaches for the use of people here in Washington. As their Representative, I am going to fight every such item that appears in these bills from now on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that unless it can be clearly shown that work has been commenced on this project it is not a continuance of work in progress. Not having been shown that the work is under way, the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement and maintenance as a recreation park of section D, Anacostia Park, between Pennsylvania Avenue and the Anacostia Bridge, $50,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the paragraph embracing lines 12 to 14 on page 96 as being legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law.

Mr. CRAMTON. We have just discussed the reclamation and development of Anacostia Park. This item means a further development of one portion of that park, making it available for recreation purposes, and it is really a continuance of work on an existing Government project.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKWAY COMMISSION.

To enable the commission created by section 22 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 883), to continue proceedings toward the acquisition of lands required for a connecting parkway between Potomac Park, the Zoological Park, and Rock Creek Park, $75,000: Provided, That the following areas and parcels described and delineated on map No. 2, contained in House Document No. 1114, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, as a part of total area to be acquired for said parkway shall be excluded from the total area finally to be acquired, to wit, 315 square feet of lot 801 in square 2541, 349 square feet of lot 836, 1,303 square feet of lot 74 in square 2543, 549 square feet of lot 58, 2,106 square feet of lot 800 in square 1262, 3,600 square feet of lot 20 in square 23, 199 square feet of lot 80 in square 1238, and 50 square feet of lot 3 in square No. 1: Provided further, That the following described lots and parcels that are without the taking line shall be included in the area finally to be acquired, namely, 4,483 square feet of lot No. 1, 2,919 square feet of lot 2, 3,259 square feet of lot 3 in square 2510, 6,879 square feet of lot 1 in square 47, and about 902 square feet of lot 803 in square 2543: Provided further, That in order to protect Rock Creek and its tributaries, none of the moneys herein or heretofore appropriated for the opening, widening, or extending of any street, avenue, or highway in the District of Columbia shall be expended for the opening, widening, or extension of any street, avenue, or highway which shall or may, in the judgment of the District Commissioners, permanently injure or diminish the existing flow of Rock Creek or any of its tributaries, nor shall permission so to do at private expense be granted to any private person or corporation except by the joint consent and approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the entire paragraph because it contains legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the whole paragraph is full of legislation from beginning to end, not only the three provisos but the paragraph on the preceding page. And I call the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee to the fact that by one of these provisos he is delegating the sacred power of this Congress to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds to change even Rock Creek and its tributaries and this park system in any manner that they might see fit and agreeable to them. I think that is a very serious proposition, in addition to the enlargement of the scope as shown in this paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, as to the two provisos beginning on page 97 at line 3 and continuing in line 2 on page 98, I would not contest the point of order. As to that, however, I would say this, in the hope that the gentleman might not insist on his point of order——

Mr. BLANTON. What about the new proposition of $50,000 that is embraced in the matter as shown on pages 421 and 422 of the hearings?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the Piney Branch and Klingle Valley proposition. That is not included in the bill. The estimate brought in a further appropriation to acquire the Piney Branch Valley from Sixteenth to Fourteenth Streets and the Klingle Valley to the west of Rock Creek Park. The committee did not approve of those items, and they are not in the bill. The only appropriation carried here is $75,000 for the work of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway—that is, the parkway that is destined to connect the Zoological Park with Potomac Park.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a new project.

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall argue about that separately.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the project I speak of, and that is a new project.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the two provisos I spoke about, I hope the gentleman will not press his point. The boundaries of this parkway have been heretofore fixed, and it is desired in actual acquirement of the property to make some rather unessential changes in that boundary, to take in little fragments of property that are outside, and to exclude some fragments that are now included. That is legislative and if the gentleman objects it would go out, but I hope that if the balance of the section is sustained the gentleman will not object to that part of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would remind the gentleman from Michigan that thus far in his statement he has failed to say that the cost will be just the same.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, yes; the cost is not affected by this proposition. It is rather administrative, working out the boundaries, with no increased cost. As to the main items carried in lines 23 to 25 on page 96, and down to line 3 on page 97, that is to enable the commission created by section 22 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913, to continue proceedings toward the disposition of lands acquired for connecting the parkway between Potomac Park and the Zoological Park and Rock Creek Park, amounting to $75,000. That act referred to reads as follows——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the act before him.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then it is not necessary to read it. That authorized the acquirement of land for this parkway, and it fixed the limit of cost, and authorized them to proceed. They have been proceeding to get it year by year, and this item is for $75,000 to continue that work in progress, and it is still within the limit of cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman admits, however, that the two provisos are subject to the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, yes; and if that is the objection we will have to eliminate them, though, if the gentleman from Texas insists.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the entire paragraph. According to procedure, where a point of order is leveled against an entire paragraph, if there is a taint anywhere in the paragraph because of irregularity, it applies to the whole paragraph, and the Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order, for it is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I was in hopes the gentleman was not so much interested in those as in the other.

Mr. BLANTON. I was interested in them, and I am interested more particularly in the $75,000 than anything else.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend, by inserting after line 20, on page 96, the portion of the paragraph which has been eliminated, excepting the provisos.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cramton: Page 96, after line 20, insert:

"ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKWAY COMMISSION.

"To enable the commission created by section 22 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L. p. 885), to continue proceedings toward the acquisition of lands required for a connecting parkway between Potomac Park, the Zoological Park, and Rock Creek Park, $75,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order as to that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, there is a third proviso which I understand the gentleman also objects to, and it is probably subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that the gentleman from Texas made the point of order against the entire paragraph, and the ruling of the Chair ruled the whole paragraph out.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I am trying to eliminate the portion subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has offered an amendment including the three lines on page 96 and the three lines on page 97, to which the gentleman from Texas makes the point of order. Upon what ground?

Mr. BLANTON. For the reason that it is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law. The authorization provided for in the act of March 4, 1913, has already expired. That authorization is not alive at this time, and there is no basis whatever for this appropriation. I submit the matter to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. On what ground does the gentleman make the assertion that the authorization has expired?

Mr. BLANTON. It permitted them to acquire certain lands for park purposes. They acquired the land authorized for park purposes. This is an entirely new project to connect up these parks.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, it is just a continuation of what was authorized in the public buildings act. No appropriation was made in that act. There was an authorization and a limit of cost, and from year to year appropriations have been made within that limit of cost, and this is the continuation of an existing work. Nineteen per cent of the land required under the plan still remains to be acquired, and I will give the Chair in just a moment how much has been expended, so he can be sure. The limit of cost is $1,300,000. The appropriations heretofore made $1,050,000, which does not include the item before us. With the item before us, it would be $1,125,000, or within the limit of cost fixed by the legislative authorization.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that this act of 1913 authorized them within a specified limit of cost to acquire certain specified lands?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. This land does not come within the specification. This land is exclusive of the specified land which could be acquired in that limit of cost, and I submit to the Chairman in all fairness if this Congress authorized the commissioners to acquire block 21 within a certain limit of cost and then some nine years afterwards the Appropriation Committee would seek to authorize the commissioners to acquire block 100, even though they have not expended the full limit of cost, it is without authorization of Congress, because the authorization of Congress limited them to the acquirement of certain specified lands and afterwards the authorization of the appropriation must come within the specifications, and it does not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. The Chair feels very clear in regard to this amendment that it is clearly in order. The law of 1913 reads:

That for the purpose of connecting Potomac Park with the Zoological Park and Rock Creek Park, a commission, to be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such land and premises—

And so forth. Now, it seems to the Chair that that act is still continuing in force, because the connecting link has not yet been perfected. It also appears that this appropriation is well within the authorization of that act, and the amount of money that is appropriated here, plus the amount of money already appropriated, does not exceed the limitation of cost named in this act, namely, $1,300,000. The Chair feels this amendment is clearly in order and overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

WATER SERVICE.

For continuing work on the project for an increased water supply for the District of Columbia, adopted by Congress in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, as modified by the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $1,500,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into contracts for materials and work necessary to the construction of said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $6,150,000, including all appropriations and contract authorizations herein and heretofore made: Provided further, That no bid in excess of the estimated cost for that portion of the work or plant covered by the bid shall be accepted, nor shall any contract for any portion of the work, material, or equipment to constitute a part of the plant for which this appropriation is available be valid unless the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall have certified thereon that all its terms are within the requirements of the authorization and the revised estimates for the work: Provided further, That whenever the Secretary of War causes proceedings to be instituted for the acquirement by condemnation of any lands or interests therein needed for the said work, the United States, upon the filing of the petition in any such proceedings, shall have the right to take immediate possession of said lands, easements, rights of way, or otherwise, to the extent of the interest to be acquired, and to proceed with the work herein authorized: Provided further, That certain adequate provisions shall have been made for the payment of just compensation to the party or parties entitled thereto, either by previous appropriation by the United States or by the deposit of moneys or other form of security in such amount and form as shall be approved by the court in which such proceedings shall be instituted. The respondent or respondents may move at any time in the court to increase or change the amounts or securities and the court shall make such order as shall be just in the premises and as shall adequately protect the respondents. In every case the proceedings in condemnation shall be diligently prosecuted on the part of the United States in order that such compensation may be promptly ascertained and paid: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall submit to Congress on the first day of the next and each succeeding regular session of Congress, until the entire project shall have been completed, a report on said water system and increase of water supply showing, among other things, the progress of the work, construction under way and proposed within the District, connections with the present system of distribution, and revised estimates of cost.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the entire paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman if he knows how much of this $6,150,000 is to be paid to the Potomac Electric Power Co. for its land up the river?

Mr. CRAMTON. The construction of the conduit, which is now under contract, to be completed June 30, 1924, is to cost $2,080,000.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not what I ask.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think I will give the gentleman what he wants, probably more. Superintendence and inspection on above contract, $104,000. Materials furnished by the United States on above contract, maps, temporary buildings, relocating railroad tracks, $2,306,100; that has now been obligated for the construction of the conduit. Of that amount there has been appropriated $1,700,000, so that there is now obligated for the construction of the conduit $600,000 more than appropriated; and, of course, the $1,500,000 which we now propose to appropriate will come in that. Now, that is the amount obligated which I have given for the construction of the conduit. The work required to complete the conduit is $562,000, making a total of $2,868,100, and the balance above the previous appropriations to complete contracts and conduits is $1,168,100. The amount reported by the Budget this year is $1,500,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Without putting in all of these figures, which have no relation to the question I ask, can not the gentleman answer how much the Potomac Electric Power Co. is to get for this land which it seeks to sell to the Government?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman may know much more than I do as to who owns this land and how much they are going to get for it. There is proposed, out of the moneys which will be affected by this appropriation, or the authorization to be affected, $110,000 for land for the first high-service reservoir.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is for the second high-service reservoir $155,000.

Mr. BLANTON. That makes $265,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then the right of way for tunnel on second high-service line, $800; right of way for second high-service pipe line, $66,000; making a total of $331,800 that will come out of the contract authorization.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that the whole body of land there, out of which this is just merely a part, cost just a short time ago $100,000, and they are making, according to these figures, $165,000 profit on just a part of it. That is one reason why I am objecting, and I have been objecting for the past three years, to the people of the United States paying a substantial part of this new water system, that not merely benefits the Government but more particularly benefits the 437,000 residents of this city and ultimately is going to cost the people of this Government at least twelve or fifteen million dollars before we get through with it. We are just advancing every few years a few millions, and this paragraph authorizes $6,150,000 of it. I want to say, representing my district, that I am one who objects to it, and as a protest against my constituents having to pay a part of this $6,150,000, I make the point of order on the entire paragraph, Mr. Chairman, as containing legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order on the paragraph. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] desire to be heard?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I concede that there is language in the paragraph that is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that the gentleman from Texas is justified in making the point of order on the ground stated, that it is legislation carried on an appropriation bill, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to reinsert the language from line 1, page 99, under the heading "Water service," down to "$1,500,000," on line 8, as follows:

WATER SERVICE.

For continuing work on the project for an increased water supply for the District of Columbia, adopted by Congress in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, as modified by the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $1,500,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment embracing the $1,500,000, on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order on the amendment on the ground that it is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad if the gentleman from Texas would indicate anything in the amendment by way of legislation. It is a Government project under way. This is to continue the work within the limit of cost heretofore fixed.

Mr. BLANTON. What substantive law authorizes it?

Mr. CRAMTON. The law authorizing this work and fixing the limit of cost. The work is under way, and this is an appropriation to continue that work.

Mr. BLANTON. I challenge the gentleman to cite a substantive law authorizing it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Evidently the gentleman from Texas thinks the only place where a substantive law can be found is outside of an appropriation act. The Chair is well aware that an appropriation act can carry substantive law as well as any other act, provided a point of order is not made at the time of the inclusion of the legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that this amendment is in order. It is in continuation of a public work already in progress, and the Chair has no doubt that it was duly authorized. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, as to the amendment, I simply want to say this: The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has made some statement as to the value of the land to be acquired. The gentleman may be perfectly accurate; I do not know. This is a matter that was investigated very carefully a year ago, and then this year by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS]. He was present during our hearings on this matter this year, and he was present at the time of the making up of the bill and had it in charge; but, unfortunately, he is not here to-day. In the hearings reference is made to lands claimed by several parties and also lands owned by the Chesapeake & Potomac Canal Co., so that I take it there is more land involved than the particular land to which the gentleman from Texas has referred.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what is the idea that prompted the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to make his point of order to the whole paragraph; whether it was his objection to the part of the paragraph that has been ruled in order and which is now up for adoption by the committee; but I would direct the gentleman's attention to the saving language contained in the proviso following the authorization of the expenditure of $1,500,000. This proviso safeguards the interests of the Government. First, it places a limitation on the whole project in the amount of $6,150,000. Certainly the gentleman would place some limitation on the cost of this project, because otherwise the District Commissioners might go ahead and spend this $1,500,000 without any regard for the total involved in the completed project.

The second proviso is a restriction in a way of service to the Government to protect its interests further. I think, in view of the holding of the Chair that the first item, the appropriation of $1,500,000 in continuation of this public work, is in order, there should be some limitation so as to protect the Government.

I have not made a special study of this project, but I appeal to the reason of the gentleman from Texas, and I know that he wants to safeguard the interests of the public, whether we should not place a limit on the total expenditure when we are authorizing the expenditure of $1,500,000 of money on a big project, concerning which a subcommittee, like that of which the gentleman from Michigan is chairman, where one member of the subcommittee, Mr. EVANS, of Nebraska, who is now absent, made a special study of the subject in the effort to try to safeguard the interests of the Government? We do not want to waste money. Why allow the District Commissioners carte blanche to spend money without a limit of cost? Let us say what the cost is to be and fix as the limit $6,500,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a very unusual situation to find the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] advocating a provision allowing the Secretary of War to make contracts involving $6,500,000 without some legislative committee giving the matter attention. No legislative committee has considered this matter. It is just merely an authorization here put in by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, we have launched on this program. We have authorized the survey. We have provided for the expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars already for the project. It is now in existence. It is a matter that necessarily comes before the Appropriations Committee, because that committee is better acquainted with all the details of what is necessary for the organization and government of the District than any other committee of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Everything necessarily goes to the Committee on Appropriations now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I appeal to the gentleman's sense of economy, to the need of restricting the expenditure of money on the part of the District Commissioners. Here we are going to authorize a million and a half. I was not in favor of this project originally. I did not think there was any need of it; but we have launched upon it. The million and a half is going to be voted. Is it not good business policy, is it not good legislative economy to adopt these provisions that have been studied closely by a man who has given special study to the subject, so as to safeguard the interests of the Government?

Mr. BLANTON. Studied by no Member of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will not deny that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] is a Member of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. No member of any legislative committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Appropriation Committee has been legislating in this particular and has been making a special study of it.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not willing to assume that responsibility.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman is assuming a tremendous responsibility by allowing an appropriation of a million and a half to go through without any restriction or ties to it at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of the water department distribution system, including pumping stations and machinery, water mains, valves, fire and public hydrants, water meters, and all buildings and accessories, and the purchase and maintenance of motor trucks, purchase of fuel, oils, waste, and other materials, and the employment of all labor necessary for the proper execution of this work, and to reimburse three employees for the provision and maintenance by themselves of three motor cycles for use in their official work in the District of Columbia, $13 per month each; and for contingent expenses, including books, blanks, stationery, printing, postage, damages, purchase of technical reference books, and periodicals, not to exceed $75, and other necessary items, $10,000; in all, for maintenance, $450,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been engaged in the preparation of another appropriation bill, and therefore have been out of the Chamber most of the time during the consideration of this bill, but I believe that in the earlier consideration of this bill the committee decided to reduce the amount to be allowed for the maintenance of motor cycles to $10 per month. Does that reduction to $10 apply also in this paragraph where $13 is provided?

Mr. CRAMTON. I suppose it should, in order to be consistent.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am merely asking the question. I am not acquainted with the merits of the proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It ought to be changed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It was understood that these charges of $13 a month wherever they appear would be changed to $10 a month, and therefore I offer an amendment to strike out "$13" and insert in lieu thereof "$10," on page 103, line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 103, line 7, strike out "$13" and insert in lieu thereof "$10."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, of course you all know that to-day, the 8th of January, is the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans, which was fought on January 8, 1815. That was 108 years ago. It was fought on the plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans. It is of special interest, as the battlefield is in the first Louisiana congressional district, to the constituency that I represent, and is one of the red-letter days in American history.

Of course, it is not flattering to ourselves nor agreeable at times to recall the vicissitudes, calamities, and catastrophes of the War of 1812, but I think we should do so, lest we forget the terrible lessons they convey. We should recount that which is ancient in our history for the purpose of gathering a light by which to guide our footsteps in the future, even at the risk of irritating those sensitive souls that recoil at the thought of looking backward to our nights of despair.

Of course, you know that the War of 1812 was disastrous to American arms, and the treaty consummated at Ghent was consummated by England only on the theory that disintegration had already set in and that the States calling themselves the United States would soon be seeking the protection of the mother country and would be Colonies once more, not later than five years after the signing of the treaty, which would carry it to about 1820.

Canadian, English, and continental newspapers were convinced that the collapse of the young Republic of the West was impending; that it was staggering to its destruction; that its fall was at hand. Monarchists the world over were confident that the United States had run its brief course, and that its hour was about to strike.

If England had thought otherwise she would have insisted upon the harsh terms which she had laid down at the beginning of the discussion of the treaty we sought, so desperate was our situation. She thought we were incapable or did not care to fight. Had not her soldiers burned our Capitol; had they not been almost uniformly successful on land and sea in their encounters with our soldiers and sailors? Did not the apathy of a large section of the country show it was an extremely unpopular war? That is one great reason why our victory on the plains of Chalmette was transcendent in its importance, because it obliterated the catastrophies of that war, which had made school children cry out in the streets of their villages and hamlets and towns, at the degradation into which their country had fallen. That condition was deplorable, so deplorable that Lord Castlereagh and others who were in power and in the control of the British Government at the time said that "every port and city in America is in our hands, and the Americans are little better than prisoners in their own land," and gloatingly and boastfully declared that they were in a position to dictate any terms that they might feel inclined to dictate.

But, gentlemen of the House, in order to thoroughly understand the gravity of the situation, not only as our national honor was concerned but the menacing attitude of England and Spain with respect to the vast empire of territory known as the Louisiana Purchase, let us swing backwards; let us turn back the hand of time; let us roll up the curtain on the mighty drama played out on a solemn, brooding, but at times terrible sea stage, the Gulf of Mexico and her titanic daughter, the Mississippi River; let us peer into the days of romance and adventure, the days of the conquistadores, the buccaneers, the pirates, the days that ran through a century and gave to Spain, France, and England their greatest discoverers and sea captains. The history and tradition of that time are so interwoven and blended that it is utterly impossible to separate them if we would—and would we, if we could? For is not history what the great Napoleon said it is—"a fable agreed upon"? And were there not nobler souls than those whose exploits are recorded, if a sacred bard had but sung them into immortality? Someone has written: "God conceived the earth—that was poetry; He formed it—that was sculpture; He colored it—that was painting; He peopled it—that was the divine drama." One thing is certain, every generation has had an opportunity to play out on a grand stage the part allotted to it in the drama of the world and mankind, but in no generation or generations has tradition given to the field of adventure so much poetry, sculpture, painting, song, and romance as to the age of Columbus, Cabot, Hudson, Pineda, Cortez, Pizarro, De Soto, La Salle, without reference to their chronological order, and a score of others such as Drake, Magellan, Morgan, who were not only possessed of the passion of the sea wild life but for booty and spoils also.

But let it not be supposed that these sea marauders were not the heroes of their native lands. They gave a glory to their countries which the regular armies and navies could never win.

But back to our story.

Guided by history's pages, we see Narvaez going from Mexico to Florida and touching at the mouth of the Mississippi River. He was a Spanish conquistador, a nobleman and explorer. That was in 1528. Fourteen years later we see Hernando de Soto viewing the Mississippi River at some place near where the Arkansas joins her. He was a splendid Spanish conquistador, a striking figure in that romantic period, and was buried darkly at night, as was said of Sir John More, and left alone with his glory. But he had a magnificent tomb, and the tide of the Father of Waters rolling all the way to the Gulf of Mexico and on to the Atlantic Ocean probably furnished to him a funeral train such as was never the lot of any other man in history or romance. Out in the rotunda of the Capitol, under the dome, you will see eight great pictures portraying the life of America from the romantic and historical standpoint; one picture by William H. Powell portrays the wonder and amazement of De Soto and his followers when they beheld the Father of Waters gliding southward in its solemn, majestic sweep to the Mexican sea. Years and years elapsed, and in 1673 we find Joliet and Marquette descending the Mississippi River, under the direction of the French governor of Canada, in search of the mighty river that was supposed to run from east to west and connect the two great oceans. Then they returned, having gone as far south as the Arkansas River.

Strange as it may appear, my fellow Members, the idea that a great river ran from east to west and connected the eastern and western oceans remained even among educated people for over a century after these great explorers had gone to that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler has ever returned, and I understand that in South America there is still a disposition to believe that there is such a waterway.

Only lately down in Panama it was thought that the Chagres River at one time did make a connection between the two great bodies of water. It is said that Balboa, when he viewed from the hill that bears his name the mighty Pacific, looked for the river that he thought joined it to the Atlantic.

In 1682 La Salle completed the discovery of the Mississippi River and claimed the whole country for France, naming it Louisiana, in honor of Louis XIV.

It is clear to you gentlemen of the Committee of the Whole House from this recital that there must have been an issue between France and Spain in regard to the immense territory involved and flowing from the right of discovery. This is made clear by the fact that in 1762 France, by treaty of Fontainebleau, ceded to Spain all that part of the Louisiana territory lying west of the Mississippi River and the island of Orleans, which is to-day New Orleans, and in the following year, 1763, by the treaty of Paris, surrendered all of that part of the territory lying on the right bank, and Florida, to England. The desire of Napoleon to create a colonial empire in America led to the secret treaty of St. Ildefonse, in 1800, by which France acquired that part of Louisiana formerly ceded to Spain. This acquisition by the great Corsican and the treaty by which France secured it was denounced as fraudulent by Spain and England, and Napoleon transferred it to the United States for $15,000,000, as he feared an invasion of the Louisiana territory by England and wished to make us its defenders. Matters drifted, as Napoleon was then at the zenith of his power and the terror of Europe. Then came that terrible day for him and joy for Europe whence he had to abdicate and fled to Elba, in the early summer of 1814.

England was now in control of the world. Up to this time she was successful in the War of 1812, her chief triumph being the capture and burning of our Capitol. London newspapers teemed with accounts of her easy victory and triumphs and ridiculed a people that could not offer a soldier's resistance to the invaders of their country. Our President and Army—in fact, the population—were mercilessly lampooned upon the stage and derided and sneered and scoffed at in the English journals of the time. Flushed with success on the Continent, England now determined to settle with the infant Republic and give her a military lesson that would break her spirit completely. Therefore one of the conditions to be imposed upon France was the return of Louisiana to Spain and which England would take from us if her ally should not be strong enough to do so for herself.

It was indeed a day of appalling danger for our country. The entire valley was to be trampled under military heel. An immensely large force for that time was to embark from Plymouth for the conquest of the Gulf States, the control of the Mississippi Valley, and the occupancy of the Louisiana Purchase. This army was composed of men who had been under Wellington in the Peninsular wars. General Ross was to have commanded this invading army after Wellington declined its command; but Ross was killed on the banks of the Patapsco and Sir Edward Pakenham was placed in charge, the Duke of Wellington having again declined the command.

It was a dark period for our country. The old martial spirit of the Revolution seemed to be dead. The war was far from arousing any patriotic enthusiasm. Even the school children of America were depressed, downhearted, and saddened at the overwhelming calamities that had befallen their country.

It is clear that if another disaster had befallen our arms instead of the triumph that we won, if another defeat had been our fate, we would have been crushed and overwhelmed by such a catastrophe, England would have occupied New Orleans and taken possession of the Louisiana Territory without another blow, as we would have been at her mercy.

We had sent James Bayard, John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, Jonathan Russell, and Albert Gallatin to secure a treaty of peace.

But even while the treaty was being discussed the London Sun, as well as the Canadian newspapers, looked forward to and predicted the annihilation of what they scornfully refused to recognize as a military force.

Our peace commissioners were subject to mortification. Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, and Indiana were demanded as an evidence of our defeat. This was on September 8, 1814. It is needless to say that these demands were promptly refused by our commissioners.

Keep this fact in mind, my countrymen, for the seeming friend of to-day may be the enemy of to-morrow, and eternal vigilance and watchfulness are necessary to safeguard the interest and unity of the Nation. For on October 24, six weeks later, Lord Bathurst gave Pakenham his commission and orders to proceed to Plymouth and embark there for Louisiana to assume command of the forces operating for the reduction of that Province. All of these warlike preparations were being made while the peace conference was in session at Ghent.

Yes, my countrymen, eternal vigilance is the price, or a part of the price, we must pay to preserve our liberties, our freedom, our institutions. Self-reliance, preparedness, training, resolution, and fortitude should be the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night to guide us along the road to the goal of our country. Alliances, except for the purpose of trade, do not appeal to a bold and militant people. Courage and that discipline which comes as a result of training from the cradle until the patriot steps on the battle field or the deck of his country's war vessel are what makes for a nation's perpetuation and its glory.

It is true a treaty of peace was signed, but let us not forget that it was not a spirit of generosity on the part of England that led to the abandonment of her extraordinary claims and proposed indemnities as an evidence of our humiliation, but because she was assured just at this time and believed that we were so torn and worn by dissension, so near exhaustion that dissolution was inevitable, and that the dismembered States would seek a new and closer alliance with her as separate and distinct dependencies. In other words, she hoped to secure more by what she considered the inevitable process of dissolution that her informants thought they saw in operation than by force of arms or a too exacting treaty and the harsh terms she had intended to impose. She had not relinquished her rights in the Louisiana Purchase on behalf of Spain, nor had she abandoned her plans to control the Mississippi, for the Pakenham expedition had been hurried across the Atlantic and assembled at Negril, Jamaica, with a full civil government for the Crown Province of Louisiana, as it was referred to by England, and no effort was made to recall it.

As a matter of fact all plans for the invasion and occupancy of the Louisiana Territory were being actively pushed while the peace conference was in session. Do not ever forget this, my countrymen; keep it in mind, lest on some tremendous day we have to pay for our carelessness in blood and tears.

Just at this critical time in the history of our country there loomed on its horizon one who became a great figure in the affairs of this world, one who came out of the woods, like Hosea of old. Tried by obscurity, poverty, pain, danger, and the malevolence that always assails merit, he had overcome disappointment, surmounted every obstacle, subdued and triumphed over every disaster. The perils of the wilderness, the hostility of the savage, the silent antagonism of the trackless swamps and the unbroken forest, melted into thin air before the dauntless courage and martial fire of this hero, warrior, statesman, patriot, and American, Andrew Jackson, whose fiery heart never quailed before any foe, whose crest was never lowered to any enemy.

His fame as an Indian fighter, his wonderful march against Pensacola, his defense of Fort Bower had reached Europe, and Wellington saw flashing across the military skies, not a meteor, dazzling in its brightness for a moment only to plunge into everlasting gloom and darkness, but a rising star of the first magnitude.

I will not dwell upon Pakenham's advance up the Gulf of Mexico and through Lake Borgne, nor upon the skirmish by lake and land, by river and bayou, that preceded the memorable conflict on the 8th of January, 1815. From this Spartan message vision the glory of our victory—the tragedy of their defeat.

American loss: 7 killed and 6 wounded.

English loss: 700 killed, 1,400 wounded, and 500 prisoners.

Among the slain being Pakenham, the gallant leader of the invading force. As are Leonidas and Thermopylae Pass to Greece are Jackson and New Orleans to Americans.

Pakenham was killed. His army, or what was left of it, was withdrawn and afterwards took part in the battle of Waterloo, earning for themselves the sobriquet of "The Invincibles."

The compensations of life—a Chalmette and a Waterloo—for them a disaster and then a triumph.

On what slight things does destiny hang her judgments. In 1762 England had her choice of American territory from France and she demanded and received the right bank or the Floridas. Had she requested and received the west bank, or the Louisiana Purchase as it was later known, how different might have been the results—for she would certainly have held, even as she holds Canada, where she was willing to acquire by invasion and conquest—or had she been successful and destroyed Jackson's army and occupied the city of New Orleans from which to rule the conquered territory. But as a result of her choice in 1762 and the battle of New Orleans in 1815 the heart of the continent became American soil for all time.

That is the biggest of the big reasons for celebrating an immortal American victory, for that battle, fought on one side by raw and undisciplined but brave and heroic hearts from the wilds of America, and on the other side by tried, disciplined, and courageous troops who had won glory on many a European battle field, determined that this Republic should extend from ocean to ocean, and not have the Mississippi River as its western boundary line, with a western Canada paralleling the frontier, menacing it from the present northern boundary line to the Gulf of Mexico and the Republic of Mexico on the south and rolling over prairie and mountain westward from the Mississippi to the shores of the Pacific, with the flag of Britain floating proudly over that which we are pleased to call the great West and Southwest, a different government, different institutions, and with a stranger's life at our doors. One can see from this account what mighty and momentous changes might have taken place if the fortunes of war had gone against us on that memorable day of January 8, 1815. Nations as well as individuals seem at times to have a curious perspective—the great appears small and the insignificant looms large on the horizon of history. As the years move onward into eternity, however, we know that the Battle of New Orleans will take its place with the decisive battles of the world. There are some men who are unbeatable in the larger sense and significance of that word. There have always been and always will be in this world men and women whose deathless purpose must and shall prevail. When men are willing to endure any disaster, suffer any defeat, undergo privation and starvation, meet gloom and catastrophe dauntlessly, knowing, feeling, that they must and shall win, triumph is inevitable. The sheer force of longing to achieve, of desire to attain the goal, of purpose to toil and strain and fight for the end in view culminates irresistible in reaching the end of the trail gloriously and triumphantly.

Fate determined, apparently, that Pakenham could not win. He was up against the crack shots of the world and men who were as wild and as brave as pioneer life in forest and an unbroken country could make them. Fate apparently ordered it so. Jackson and his army could not be defeated. He may have been driven from Chalmette, but what of that, in view of a determination that could come only to the boldest hearts and to characters selected by fate to carry out inexorably judgments of the highest degree and lead mankind from the lowlands to the peaks of human existence? Had Jackson been forced to retreat from the plains below New Orleans, consequences as spectacular as any in the history of the world would have resulted. For Old Hickory had intended in the event of such a contingency to burn the city, move up the river with all the inhabitants, and as soon as he reached the point where the land begins its incline or upward slope, cut the banks, overflow the city, and annihilate the hopes of the British Army, which could have had one and only one escape, and that would have been by means of rafts with which to make their ships if the swirling tide would permit such an escape. The burning of Moscow, which made its occupancy by Napoleon untenable, would have been nothing compared with the epic that might be written of a city that was destroyed by its people, overwhelmed by the Father of Waters before they would let it be the prize of an invading foe.

That blood, that spirit, that heroic unconquerable purpose is still here—no invader could ever remain for any length of time in our country. Other Jacksons would come out of the wilderness to lead their countrymen in death-defying assaults that would, step by step, drive the foe from our native land. What Jackson did and what he would have done will always remain with the American people to inspire them to do noble things, not dream them all the day long, whenever the hour arrives for us to strike for our altars and our fires. That battle was fought 108 years ago; and its memories, though with us, are inscribed without bitterness upon the long and splendid scroll of the United States of America. On January 8, 1915, we celebrated the centennial of that great event—American and English dead are sleeping side by side down there where the bearded oaks rustle their leaves softly as if whispering and murmuring a requiem for the gallant souls that are at rest and forever. Annually that victory is celebrated by banquets and speech making, where men assemble to recount the heroic exploits of Jackson and his magnificent attitude toward life and the courageous manner in which he approached and solved the problems that sprung into existence in his time and had to be met or block the road over which his country was traveling to attain the splendid destiny that is and will be hers. Year after year the greatness and the glory of his followers have been extolled and sung all over our land by fervent, patriotic Americans who have conveyed to listening multitudes the thrill of a victory that will always stand out among America's greatest achievements on land or sea. History can not forget this magnificent record of a momentous event without lessening its appeal to the imaginations of our people.

To-day we stretch from ocean to ocean, and then some, and our sway there is none to dispute. Out into the Pacific, up into the Arctic, and down in southern seas our flag flies to the breeze—

Sun kissed and wind tossed,
The flag for me and you,
That glorifies all else beside
The red, white, and blue.

Old Glory reflects back the "lights" of northern skies in Alaska and the Southern Cross in the southern ocean, because we maintained the Louisiana Purchase on the field of battle January 8, 1815. Let us hear from the hero of Chalmette. Let him speak to us through one-time Congressman William Allen and in a later time a Governor of Ohio. He, too, has gone to join the patriarchs of the infant world, but he still speaks to us from and through this writing:

General Jackson greeted me on the portico of the White House, just as he would have greeted a welcome guest at his own home in the country. Together we walked to the dining room, where the table was already prepared. Following the universal custom of the world of those days, General Jackson invited me to take a drink, and proposed as a toast: "The new star in our flag—Arkansas."

That ceremony having been observed, General Jackson looked at me very earnestly and said, inquiringly:

"Do you know, Mr. Allen, that this new State which has just become a part of our vast Republic is one of the first substantially large fruits of my victory at New Orleans?"

I was surprised, very much surprised, and I said so. I could see no political nor historical connection between the admission of a new State to the Union and a battle which had been fought about 20 years before that admission. I knew, and everybody knew, that General Jackson was extravagantly proud of his victory at New Orleans, and I supposed that he was giving me a bit of pardonable braggadocio. I reminded him that the treaty of Ghent had been signed 15 days before the Battle of New Orleans, and I said:

"General, I am familiar with that treaty, and it provided for the restoration of all territory, places, and possession taken by either nation during the war, with certain unimportant exceptions."

"Technically you are quite correct," replied General Jackson, and his smile was more triumphant and proud than before. "But, my dear Allen," said the old hero, "those very words would have been used to defeat the purpose of the American commissioners at Ghent, because the Battle of New Orleans was fought after the war; 15 days after the war technically ceased by treaty."

Now I began to be more than ever interested. I begged the national military hero to tell me the whole story; and he did. He said:

"If General Pakenham with his 10,000 veterans could have annihilated my little army and captured New Orleans and all of the contiguous territory, technically after the war, Great Britain would have held that territory, abrogated that treaty, and utterly ignored Thomas Jefferson's great deal in real estate with Napoleon. Moreover," he continued, "Great Britain had other cards up her sleeve."

Venerable, but as vigorous and swift of action as ever in his life, General Jackson arose, went to a small desk, opened a drawer, took out a bundle of parchment manuscript, brought it to the luncheon table, spread it out, and said:

"Here are the transcripts from the Department of State concerning the famous treaty of Ghent. Here are the minutes of the conference which were kept by Mr. Gallatin, who records:

"The British commissioners emphatically declared: 'We do not admit Bonaparte's construction of the laws of nations. We can not accept it in relation to any matter before us.'"

Still unenlightened, I asked what that statement could have to do with the international situation and General Jackson explained:

"At that moment not one of our American commissioners comprehended the awfully deep significance of those few words. But every one of the commissioners of Great Britain knew that General Pakenham was on the way to New Orleans with upward of 10,000 veteran soldiers.

"In their judgment—and it was a wise judgment, too—10,000 British soldiers should, and would, clean up and wipe out any army which America could muster, for the Pakenham invasion was to be a triumphant military coup and surprise.

"Now, I can tell you, Mr. Allen, that I did not know, and my boys behind those bales did not know, what a prize the British were after nor what a service we were rendering our country. We were simply typical American soldiers, fighting for our country as American soldiers always do; ready and willing to dare, do, and die.

"But since I have been President I have ascertained from diplomatic sources of unquestionable authority that the British ministry did not intend to permit the treaty of Ghent to apply to the Louisiana Purchase at all. The whole body, Lord Liverpool, the Duke of Portland, Greenville, Percival, and Castlereagh, all of them, utterly and emphatically denied the right of Napoleon to sell Louisiana. Therefore, their commissioners declared, 'We can not accept Napoleon's interpretations of international law in relation to any matter before us.'

"Now, you see, Mr. Allen," said the proud old hero, "the British ministry in London held most vehemently that this country had no right to that immense territory—no right at all. They intended to hold that it was entirely extraneous to the terms of the treaty of Ghent. And, if General Pakenham had been successful at New Orleans—as, under all of the ordinary rules of war he ought to have been, with his tremendously overwhelming force of veterans—if he had defeated my little, thin line of riflemen, if he had killed or captured me, if he had won that battle as Great Britain had every reason to expect of him, he would have held his ground. Moreover, he would have fortified his positions, and Great Britain would have sent other veterans enough to forever hold that great prize, the Louisiana Purchase."

Palpably noting the surprise which my features undoubtedly expressed, General Jackson continued:

"Now, you must see, Mr. Allen, that the words which Mr. Goulborn pronounced for the commissioners of Great Britain and which I have quoted from the minutes of Mr. Gallatin, had an immensely deeper significance than the commissioners for the United States could penetrate. Those words were meant to base the British claim for possession of the whole Louisiana Purchase. This was to be entirely external to the provisions of the treaty of Ghent. Moreover, they fully believed that General Pakenham would strengthen their position by capturing all of the salient military parts of the Louisiana Purchase after the war.

"Thus, you see clearly, my friend Allen," continued the proud defender of his country, "that the British Government, always skilled in diplomacy, as well as in war, was signing that treaty with one hand in front; but, with the other behind its back, it was dispatching Pakenham and a magnificent army to seize and hold our greatest and most precious acquired possession, including, of course, Arkansas and an empire beyond.

"Thus you can also see, my dear William"—having several times toasted the new star in our flag—"you can also see what an awful mess such a situation would have caused if the British Government had been able to carry out its military purposes as well and as completely as it did its diplomatic program at Ghent."

After showing me ample proofs of the facts set forth—and you may be sure I was wonderfully interested and patriotically more proud of Andrew Jackson and his boys behind the bales than I had ever been before—the tall, vigorous, gray-haired, proud old hero said:

"But, my dear sir, British diplomacy and British military power combined knew nothing of my Tennessee and Kentucky riflemen. The will of the enemy was strong and intelligent; but the will of God was far above it all. Providence willed that this Nation should live, grow, and be the cradle of the liberty of the world." Then General Jackson quoted a well-known hymn: "God moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform."

Reverting to his first statement, General Jackson then said: "Now, you see, my dear Mr. Allen, how Arkansas was saved at New Orleans; and how a thin line of American raw recruits, facing upward of 6,000 brave and fearless veterans, made it possible for us to have the State of Arkansas in our Union to-day."

The luncheon having long been finished, when I arose to leave, my host, whom I then revered as America's grandest living hero, arose, proposed another toast to the new star in our flag—Arkansas—and concluded his narration substantially in these words:

"The astute diplomats, the trained commissioners of Great Britain, cheerfully found it easy to throw sand into the eyes of our honest commissioners at Ghent; but, Allen, they could not ward off the cold lead which my rough and ready riflemen sprinkled into the faces of their red-coated veterans at New Orleans. All of the tangled web that British diplomacy and English cunning could weave about our inexperienced commissioners was torn to pieces and soaked in blood in half an hour by the never-missing rifles of my squirrel-shooting pioneers of the mountains as they carefully took their aim from behind those invulnerable bales of cotton."

Then, hastily flinging from his proudly smiling cheek the trace of a tear, the grand old commander earnestly said: "I wish that those brave boys behind the bales might be here now, Allen, to join us in this final toast of the day to that splendid new star in our flag—the State of Arkansas."

Why should we not celebrate this great day? It was a memorable victory, Mr. Chairman, one that students of American history should never forget, one that our boys and girls should be taught to mention, not only on this day but on all other days.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Louisiana be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, originally Jackson Day was not treated from a political standpoint. It was nonpartisan, nonpolitical in the method in which it was celebrated—by banquets and ceremonies all over the country. Jackson was a Democrat, and the followers of his party appropriated the day to themselves in a great many cases, and I am not objecting to it, for "I, too, was born in Acadie." I am a Democrat and have no desire to criticize Democrats keeping alive Jackson's political views; but I would always prefer to treat the 8th of January, Jackson Day, as an American day, a day on which all Americans, regardless of party attachments, could gladly assemble and celebrate the great, magnificent, inspiring, and durable victory. Of course, at times it is tedious to talk about Leonidas and Thermopylae. It does not seem quite right to the practical and modern up-to-date fellow, who is thinking of his country in points of industrialism, to talk about the dim and misty and vague past, but our past is not so far distant that we ought to forget it, and we should always keep in mind that the seeming friend of to-day may be the enemy of to-morrow; and we ought always to cogitate upon that Chalmette victory and remember its importance and the treacheries that surrounded it and "what might have been."

It teaches us that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty and we should always be mindful of invasion.

I said once before recently on this floor that I never like to discuss Great Britain's attitude, because even in the minds of the most generous there is in all probability something akin to the thought that there may be acrimony behind my attitude. Of course, there is nothing of the sort. I am an American first and an English-speaking man in the next place, and I recognize that it is a great common family to-day. English literature is the boast of men who speak that tongue wherever it is spoken, but I can not blind my eyes to the facts of human existence. I know that as a people we fought and tore at each others' throats for four and a half years, and we not only speak the same tongue but we were bound together in fraternal ties. If we fought, why should we gull ourselves, bamboozle ourselves with the idea that we are the same people as our English-speaking cousins across the seas and will never fight with them again? We did fight with them in order to gain our independence. We did fight with them in 1812, and we were ready to fight with them after the Civil War. We were ready to fight with them about the time of the Venezuelan affair, and if her alliances constitute a menace and a danger to us, we will be ready to fight with them again. I repeat and shall repeat as long as I live that the lesson of January 8, 1815, should convey to every American mind that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty and freedom, and that we should at all times on land and sea be ready to meet any foe that might question our rights, challenge our privileges and our desires to be in the vanguard of human civilization. It is a great day. I know there are some who laugh and snicker and have an inclination to sneer at such celebrations. I do not know that it adds anything to their stature, neither does it diminish the importance of the day nor lessen the tremendous victory that was secured on the plains of Chalmette. I know that it is not as important to some minds as the discussion of money, but it is important, nevertheless, to a great many people who do not always think in terms of dollars.

It is well, my countrymen, to recall great historical events and outstanding commanding figures in the arena of peace and warfare, because we can not ignore the historical facts that it is by warfare that we have grown great and rich and powerful and opulent and strong. We have not grown to the magnificent proportions so aptly described by the phrase "from ocean to ocean" as a result of pious reflections and beautifully phrased expressions of peace on earth, good will to men, which may come in time, and which I will not obstruct. I will pray with the most religious for the millennium, but frankly confess that I would not rely implicitly on prayer in the midst of a warlike world. We have grown great and powerful and strong as the result of courage and bravery and a determination to do and dare and never give up, because apparently even when we were beaten, phœnixlike we rose from the ashes of defeat and disaster and gave to freedom and liberty over the earth, and particularly to our country, one of the greatest victories ever obtained by a small and militant band of men struggling against overwhelming odds and the greatest soldiers of Europe.

Let us teach our children to know the history of their country—its trials, its defeats, its disasters, its triumphs, its victories—for, knowing why they should love their country, they will love it with heart and soul. They will love it for the dangers through which it has passed if they are taught to study and understand what these dangers were; and then they will be on guard against the dangers of the future. Chalmette, America shall never forget. A prayer and a tear for those who won and lost that day. They are in the bosom of their Father and their God.

The muffled drum's sad roll has beat
The soldier's last tattoo;
No more on life's parade shall meet
That brave and daring few.
On Fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead.

Rest on, embalmed and sainted dead,
Dear as the blood you gave,
No impious footsteps here shall tread
The herbage of your grave;
Nor shall your glory be forgot
While Fame her record keeps,
Or Honor points the hallowed spot
Where Valor proudly sleeps.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13660, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRAMTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent—

Mr. BLAKENEY was granted leave of absence for two weeks on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12170. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa.," approved August 11, 1916; and

H. R. 10531. An act to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing in 8-point type a letter from John Thomas Taylor, vice chairman national legislative committee, the American Legion, on the so-called emergency officers' bill, the Bursum bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in 8-point type by printing a letter from an officer of the American Legion relative to the so-called Bursum bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., January 7, 1923.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The present session of Congress will pass out of existence on March 4, so there is left only eight weeks for the enactment of legislation. Unless an extra session is called, Congress will not convene again until December, 1923.

It has been repeatedly stated on various occasions that the present Congress unanimously favors the enactment of legislation for the benefit of the disabled of the World War. I desire to call to your attention that there is now, and has been pending before the Congress for more than three years, legislation to this end. But unless this receives the immediate consideration of the present Congress it will fail of enactment through the deliberate inactivity of the committee having it in charge, because of the personal opposition of a few members of that committee.

I refer to S. 1565, the Bursum bill, designed to extend to the emergency Army officers who were disabled during the World War the privileges of retirement now enjoyed by all other officers.

These disabled emergency Army officers were from the National Guard, were graduates of training camps, and able soldiers commissioned from the ranks because of their exceptional ability or bravery.

On June 1, 1920, the retirement privileges accorded the Regulars were extended to the disabled emergency marine officers and disabled emergency naval officers. The disabled emergency Army officer alone has been left in the cold, and it is this neglect that the Bursum bill seeks to rectify.

There are less than 1,000 disabled officers who come within the provisions of this bill, according to figures submitted to the Military Affairs Committee by the Director of the United States Vetereans' Bureau. Based on this number, the added cost would be less than $600,000 a year.

During the past year 30 of these disabled officers have died, and since the hearings before the committee, June 22, 18 have died, who had been patiently awaiting the passage of this long-delayed bill.

Their condition and situation is well known to the public to-day, and this legislation was considered and taken up as far back as October, 1919. For your information I desire to set out an exact history of the progress of this legislation in the Congress.

Mason bill, H. R. 4987, and Stevenson bill, H. R. 6688.

These bills were introduced the latter part of 1919, and no real results were obtained on either of them.

[Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.]

Stevenson bill, H. R. 10835—compensation measure. (H. R. 6688, which was introduced prior to this bill, provided for straight retirement.)

Introduced December 3, 1919.

Referred to House Military Affairs Committee.

Rereferred to Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Rereferred to Committee on Ways and Means.

Rereferred to subcommittee on compensation and war-risk insurance of Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Hearings before above subcommittee March 15, 16, and 17, 1920.

Congress adjourned (second session) June 5, 1920.

NOTE.—This bill was introduced in an amended form in the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress as H. R. 15904.

Poindexter bill, S. 4211 (identical with Stevenson bill, H. R. 10835).

Introduced April 13, 1920.

Referred to Senate Military Affairs Committee.

No action; died in committee.

[Sixty-sixth Congress, third session.]

Stevenson bill, H. R. 15904—compensation measure.

Introduced January 26, 1921.

Referred to Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Reported favorably to House February 2, 1921. (Hearings on H. R. 10835 were used in making this report.)

Sixty-sixth Congress adjourned March 4, 1921, and bill died with session.

[Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.]

Johnson bill, H. R. 285—retirement measure.

Introduced April 27, 1921.

Bursum bill, S. 1565, retirement measure.

Introduced May 4, 1921.

Referred to Military Affairs Committee of the Senate.

Hearings before above committee, May 27, 1921.

Reported to Senate favorably, with amendments, July 11, 1921. (Report No. 217, Senate Calendar No. 228.)

Congress adjourned November 23, 1921.

(Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.)

Bursum bill, S. 1565, retirement measure.

Debated on floor of Senate February 16, 17, 20, 21, 1922.

Bill passed Senate by vote of 50 to 14, February 21, 1922.

Bill received in House of Representatives February 22, 1922.

Referred to House Military Affairs Committee February 22, 1922.

Hearings before Military Affairs Committee on June 16, 19, 22, and August 29, 1922.

September 20. Representative Johnson obtained signatures of 125 Members of House to a petition calling upon Military Affairs Committee to report the bill.

No result.

December 7. Military Affairs Committee met in executive session and discussed bill. The chairman was instructed to obtain a decision from the Comptroller General on the working of the measure.

December 21. Comptroller General rendered a decision to committee, instructing it how to change wording of bill to make payments under it legal.

December 30. Chairman of committee wrote the Legion, saying he was going out of Washington for a "few weeks" because of his health.

January 3. The Legion informed that no meetings of the committee have been scheduled during chairman's indefinite absence from Washington.

The foregoing is a shameful example of the inability of Congress to function when the desires of a few leaders in a committee can defeat, for this long period of time, this meritorious legislation, backed by the wishes of the entire Nation.

Fifteen members of the Military Affairs Committee have expressed to us their approval of the legislation, and 334 Members of the House have assured us that they favor it. Under these circumstances you can appreciate that the American Legion and the disabled officers themselves do not understand the reasons for its delay in passage. Since it has been before the Military Affairs Committee of the House, a great number of bills have been considered by that committee, reported, and enacted into law. Full and complete hearings have been had upon this bill. Every soldier organization of any importance has appeared and testified before the committee, and we have supplied it with every possible bit of information which they might require for its consideration.

My dear Congressman, the American Legion and every ex-service men's organization in this country wants to see this bill enacted into law and justice done the emergency Army officer. They believe that it is the intention of the committee to so delay action that the passage of the bill will be impossible during the closing days of the present session.

We therefore urge that you give this matter your personal attention and consideration in order that this long-delayed and just measure may be immediately enacted into law.

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN THOS. TAYLOR,
Vice Chairman National Legislative Committee,
The American Legion.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 9, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 9, 1923.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, grant that we do not come before Thee with mere lip service, but may the thought in our hearts and the longing of our souls be in perfect harmony with the desire of Thine own heart toward us, that we may render acceptable service unto Thee. Keep us from formalities, but help us to reach after realities and find our lives becoming more and more sacred with the things that are best and are worth while. Hear and help us constantly. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

OPERATION OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, together with a report of the board of actuaries on the operation of the civil service retirement act, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 10531) to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 12170) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa.," approved August 11, 1916.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LADD presented petitions of Ada Endres and 54 other citizens of Fort Yates, and of 114 citizens of Ellendale, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Murfreesboro, Tenn., praying an amendment of the so-called ship subsidy bill providing for safety at sea of passengers, crews, ships, and cargoes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented resolutions adopted by the Los Angeles (Calif.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring very careful scrutiny of the so-called Bursum bill relating to Pueblo Indian lands in New Mexico, to the end that it may not adversely affect the rights of such Indians, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Edward J. Sullivan, of Carmel, Calif., praying for the passage of the so-called Denison "blue sky" bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the San Francisco Post, Society of American Military Engineers, of San Francisco, Calif., protesting against reduction of appropriations for training of the citizen soldiery, provided for in the national defense act as amended June 4, 1920, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3226) for the relief of William J. Ewing, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 999) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3849) for the relief of Robert J. Kirk, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1000) thereon.

ADMISSION OF ARMENIAN REFUGEES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill to be read and referred, and I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate for four or five minutes concerning it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes upon a bill which he introduces. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the bill which I have sent to the Secretary's desk is a bill to permit our immigration authorities to exceed the number of Turkish Armenians who are coming into the country beyond the present quota permitted them by law to the extent of 75,000 during the year 1923. I have tried to guard the bill so that it shall meet with no objections from labor unions or from any other legitimate interest.

It is provided that these Armenians shall go upon the land as farmers or as farm laborers or as tenants or share hands. It is further provided that a preference shall be given to such of them as have relatives in the United States who are willing to pay their way and to give bond that they shall not become public charges. There is a secondary preference given to such of them as can procure benevolent associations in the United States to give bond that they shall not become public charges. It is further required that proper assurance must be given to our consuls abroad or to our immigration authorities here that they have some reasonable assurance of finding places upon the farms in the country.

Mr. President, I do not want to help to increase the scarcity, if any there be, of manufacturing labor for the benefit of those who wish to reduce the wages of labor, but the farmers in many parts of the country neither have, nor can they procure, sufficient labor to carry on their operations in a manner most conducive to their own prosperity and to the welfare of the American people.

Of course, if there had been no crisis abroad I would not introduce the bill, but, Mr. President, at one American institution I have been informed are 3,000 homeless Turkish Armenian children. At one time in one place there were 18,000 of them gathered together. There were at one time 300,000 Christian refugees—many, if not most of them, however, being Greeks—waiting at and near Smyrna for some method of getting out of Turkish territory, like "dumb driven cattle," frightened and running.

Mr. President, I have added another clause to the bill providing that Armenian children, orphans or homeless, shall be permitted to enter during the year 1923 to the number of 25,000, provided that some orphans' home—religious, governmental, or secular—shall assure the immigration agents that they have places for them, and will give proper security that they shall be taken care of, clothed, and fed, and educated to the age where they can take care of themselves; and that amongst those Armenian homeless and orphan children there shall be permitted to enter others where American or Armenian families in the United States consent to adopt them and to take care of them, and make satisfactory showing to the immigration authorities that they can and will do so.

In brief that is all there is to the bill. I am as much opposed as anybody to unrestricted immigration. I have, therefore, put a provision in the bill that the adult Armenians who are to be permitted to come here in excess of their 3 per cent quota shall be those who shall comply otherwise with all of our present immigration requirements. They shall be literates, shall be in good physical health, shall be neither anarchists nor government-destroying communists. I have tried to hedge the bill about so that we can do a great humanitarian work without hurting anybody in the United States. We surely, it seems to me, can do that much for the world, the Asia Minor part of it, in the day of its suffering, its deportations, its ravishments, its suppression, and its persecution.

Those people are either political or religious refugees, the subjects of political or religious persecution. I admit that they have aroused my sympathy. The Armenians are not an Asiatic race. There are many who do not know that, but I made occasion to examine the literature upon the subject several years ago. They are a European race who must have gone into Asia Minor like the Gauls went into Galatia from Europe around the Black Sea to their present homelands in Russia and Turkey. They possess the attributes and the excellencies, the industry and the intelligence and the energy of the European race. When immigration to this country was unrestricted there were fewer illiterates than among almost any, or, as I remember, any populations coming to us for homes. They are members of the oldest now-existing Christian church in the habitat where they first became Christian. They are at home predominantly agriculturists. They would add a desirable element to our farm population. The whole number to be admitted, adults and children, is only 100,000. That is only about one-tenth of 1 per cent of our existing population and their assimilation can not seriously affect us in our physical, mental, moral, political, or industrial make-up. All of them who could get with us fought with us during the World War, and the British military commanders estimated their service and mentioned them commendingly.

The bill (S. 4298) for the extension of the number of Turkish Armenians admissible as immigrants to the United States, and for the admission of orphaned and homeless Armenian children to American orphan institutions and to adoption in American private families, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair designates the Senator from the State of Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to read Washington's Farewell Address February 22 next, which is to be read pursuant to an order of the Senate of January 24, 1901.

SENATOR FROM NEBRASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the credentials of R. B. HOWELL, chosen a Senator from the State of Nebraska for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1923, which were ordered to be placed on file and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE.
State of Nebraska, Lincoln.

To the President of the United States Senate:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, in the year 1922, at a general election held throughout the State of Nebraska, R. B. HOWELL, Esq., was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Nebraska a Senator from said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1923.

Witness his excellency our governor, Samuel R. McKelvie, and our seal hereto affixed, this the 3d day of January, in the year of our Lord 1923.

[SEAL.] SAMUEL R. MCKELVIE.

By the governor:

DARIUS M. AMSBERRY,
Secretary of State.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 8, 15, 17, 20, 29, and 33.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 9, 10, 13, 14, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 30, and 31, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,400,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,594,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,475,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$180,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert the following: "$9,903,000, of which sum an amount not exceeding $903,000 shall be available for the purchase, manufacture, and installation of antiaircraft guns for the United States ship Maryland, and ammunition and fire-control instruments required for such guns"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$135,340"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "No part of any appropriation made for the Navy shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, including personal services of civilians and of enlisted men of the Navy, except as herein expressly authorized: Provided, That there may be detailed to the Bureau of Navigation not to exceed at any one time 34 enlisted men of the Navy: Provided further, That enlisted men detailed to the Naval Dispensary and the Radio Communication Service shall not be regarded as detailed to the Navy Department in the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may we have a statement from the Senator respecting the agreements contained in the report before we proceed to its consideration?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a complete agreement on the differences of the two Houses. There were very few substantial changes made by the Senate in the bill. There was a compromise between the two Houses on those.

There was an increase by the Senate of $1,000,000 to the Naval Reserve. The conferees agreed upon an increase of $600,000. Another one was $550,000 for the manufacture of torpedoes. The Senate conferees receded from that amendment. Most of the other amendments were largely of a formal character, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator from Washington if the conference report was unanimously agreed to by the members of the conference on the part of the Senate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the adoption of the report.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the Senator from Washington what the conferees did in regard to the torpedo appropriation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Rhode Island is familiar with the provisions in the bill. He will remember that there was an item of $903,000 added to the appropriation for ordnance, relating to antiaircraft guns and fire control of antiaircraft guns on the battleship Maryland. That was taken out of the appropriation for increase of the Navy. But in taking that amount from the appropriation for increase of the Navy, the allotment of $10,000,000 allowed to ordnance was not changed. So the conferees took the view that that left a margin of $903,000 for ordnance, a large portion of which could be used for the manufacture of torpedoes. Therefore the special item of $550,000 was dropped.

Mr. GERRY. I shall not object to agreeing to the conference report, but I wish we might have kept that item in the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We tried to keep it in, but were unable to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PRICE OF RUBBER.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I have a report prepared by the Department of Commerce with reference to the British colonial restriction of the production of rubber and the increase in price to the American consumer, which is so grave and of such general importance that I ask unanimous consent to present it for incorporation in the RECORD, and in eight-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

EFFECT OF BRITISH COLONIAL RUBBER RESTRICTION LAWS.

INTRODUCTION.

Until 1900 wild rubber was the sole source of supply. The increased demand, largely on account of the development of motor cars, has resulted in 95 per cent of the world's supply of rubber being produced on plantations located in the Federated Malay States and Ceylon and in the Dutch East Indies. More than 72 per cent of this plantation rubber is grown in the British colonial possessions. An additional 8 per cent is controlled by British capital. The relative importance of wild and plantation rubber is shown by the estimated production for 1922 of 340,000 tons of plantation rubber as against 23,000 tons of wild rubber.

The plantation industry was enormously prosperous from 1910 until 1920. Following the business depression of 1920 and 1921, demand fell off, stocks accumulated, and prices went down. For a time cost of production exceeded the market price.

ENACTMENT OF RESTRICTION LAWS.

The British Government in October, 1920, appointed a committee to investigate the condition of the plantation industry, now known as the Stevenson committee. This committee was composed of British Government officials, plantation company directors, and rubber growers. There was no real representation of the manufacturing side. Despite the committee's failure to secure like action by the Dutch Government, it recommended in October, 1922, the adoption of colonial laws restricting exportation of rubber. These were approved by the British colonial secretary and adopted by the British colonies, effective November 1, 1922. The announced purpose of the laws was twofold: First, to restrict production to absorb what they thought was an excessive surplus of crude rubber stocks; and, second, to restore the market price so that plantations could produce at a profit.

BRIEF OF THE LAWS.

An export tax is the means used to restrict production. "Standard production" is fixed as 1920 production—335,000 tons—as found by the Stevenson committee. Exportations up to 60 per cent of standard production bear a nominal duty—1½ cents gold per pound, exchange at par. Hereafter our figures will be in gold based on exchange at par. If exports exceed 60 per cent of 1920 production, each and every pound from the first to the last exported in the year thereupon is subject to the prohibitive duty as shown by the following table:

Exportation over 60 per cent of standard production.

DUTY PER POUND.	Cents.
Over 60 per cent but not exceeding 65 per cent	7.94
Over 65 per cent but not exceeding 70 per cent	9.94
Over 70 per cent but not exceeding 75 per cent	11.92
Over 75 per cent but not exceeding 80 per cent	13.91
Over 80 per cent but not exceeding 85 per cent	15.90
Over 85 per cent but not exceeding 90 per cent	17.89
Over 90 per cent but not exceeding 95 per cent	19.87
Over 95 per cent but not exceeding 100 per cent	21.86
Over 100 per cent	23.85

The governor in council is charged with the administration of the act, and the law provides that he may increase the percentage of standard production that may be exported at the minimum duty. The governors have announced that they will follow the recommendation of the Stevenson committee in this respect, which was that if a market price of 30 cents gold was continuously maintained for any quarter—November, 1922, to January, 1923; February–April, 1923, and so forth—the minimum would be raised for the ensuing quarter from 60 to 65 per cent; if a price of 36 cents gold was continuously maintained for any quarter, the minimum would be raised for the ensuing quarter from 60 to 70 per cent. Likewise, the percentage may be reduced 5 per cent if a price is not so maintained at more than 24 cents gold.

RUBBER PRODUCTION.

No rubber is transshipped through the Dutch East Indies, owing to an import tax. The figures used for the Dutch East Indies are, therefore, export figures. For the Malay Peninsula actual export figures can not be obtained, but we use the estimate below as being very nearly correct. For Ceylon the figure of domestic exports is used. For the smaller areas estimates of the Statist are used to show 1920 production. Figures of rubber are shown in long tons:

	Tons.
Malay Peninsula (minus transshipments)	187,500
Ceylon (minus transshipments)	39,500
Dutch East Indies	88,800
ndia	6,400
Borneo	4,100
Sarawak	1,600
Indo-China	3,100
Total	331,000

EFFECT OF RESTRICTION SCHEME IN PRODUCING SHORTAGE IN WORLD STOCKS OF RUBBER.

According to the Stevenson committee, production of plantation rubber during 1920 totaled 335,000 tons. According to the detailed figures shown above, 68.6 per cent of the 1920 plantation production was in British Malaya and Ceylon. On the basis of the Stevenson committee's estimate this gives 230,500 tons as the amount subject to restriction in the British colonies. Allowing, say, 24,500 tons—Statist, 29,700 tons—additional for rubber produced from new areas, we have a total of 255,000 tons subject to restriction.

In 1923 we could expect 90,000 tons of rubber from the Dutch East Indies, unrestricted. It is estimated that 30 per cent of the plantations there are British controlled, and it is claimed that 84 per cent of that 30 per cent have agreed, with conditions, to voluntarily participate in the scheme. This adds 22,680 tons subject to restriction, making a total of approximately 277,500 tons.

[1] Note that stocks were reduced by 30,000 tons, unless stocks were increased in consuming countries. This is not likely for any countries except the United States, Japan, and France.

STOCKS AVAILABLE NOVEMBER 1, 1922.

It may be assumed that during October, 1922, there was little change in the position of stocks. The position on November 1, 1922, then, was:

	Tons.
Stocks, Nov. 1, 1922	280,000
1923 world requirements from plantations (conservatively estimated)	359,000
Unrestricted plantation production (restricted areas, 277,500; unrestricted areas, 77,500)	355,000

Since prices have not been maintained in the first quarter—November 1, 1922, to January 31, 1923—at 30 cents gold per pound, there can be no further increase of the minimum percentage of production before the end of the second quarter, viz, May 1, 1923. Therefore, production, November 1, 1922, to May 1, 1923, will remain at 60 per cent of standard.

Stocks available May 1, 1923.

		Tons.

Reduction of stocks by May 1, 1923	56,500
Stocks May 1, 1923		223,500

The Stevenson committee used eight months' stocks as the necessary surplus. The Rubber Association of America estimates that six months' supply is sufficient. If the Stevenson committee's figures are used, we have the following position:

Eight months' necessary stocks	239,333
Shortage May 1, 1923	15,833

If we assume that the price after May 1, 1923, rules at 36 cents or above, 10 per cent additional releases will occur at regular quarterly periods. The world quarterly requirements of rubber from the plantations will be 89,750 tons. The position of stocks at ends of various quarters will then be as follows:

	Tons.
Stocks May 1, 1923: A 10 per cent release, making 70 per cent (67,937 tons), 21,813 tons less than needed during the quarter	223,500
Stocks Aug. 1, 1923 (deduct 21,813), a 10 per cent release making 80 per cent (74,875)	201,687
Stocks Nov. 1, 1923 (deduct 14,875)	186,812

Thus, November 1, 1923, the available stocks will have been reduced to but six months' supply, whereas eight months is taken by the Stevenson committee as a necessary supply to do business. This is on the assumption of maximum releases under the Stevenson plan. There is no allowance for increased demand to meet an estimate of 2,000,000 additional automobiles in 1923, nor for new uses for paper manufacture and other purposes now being experimented with.

The price of crude rubber was at its high point in 1910, when it exceeded $3 per pound. In 1913 the average price for plantation crêpe was 72 cents; in 1914, 55 cents; 1915, 60 cents; 1916, 68 cents; 1917, 67 cents; 1918, 55 cents; 1919, 50 cents; 1920, 46 cents; 1921, 20 cents; and for the first 10 months of 1922 it averaged about 15 cents in the London market.

The reasons for the passage of the law seemed to be disappearing at the time of its enactment, as the surplus stocks of rubber had apparently been decreased by about 30,000 tons in the preceding nine months. The resumption of manufacturing is absorbing the surplus feared by the Stevenson committee. Published reports of investigators who visited the estates this year and financial statements of the plantation companies indicate the cost of production has been adjusted to lower price levels, permitting adequate profit with prices at 24 cents. Reliable information available warrants the belief that rubber is now being produced at a cost of 11 cents seaboard in the Far East on some of the plantations. No capital charges are included in these costs, however, and such charges would frequently be fairly heavy as the plantations were capitalized during the boom period, and there has in many cases been a considerable watering of stock. An American company which owns a plantation of 45,000 acres in the island of Sumatra ceased tapping operations in June, 1921, when the price of rubber was 16½ cents, and stated that it would leave the trees on its own plantation untapped as long as rubber could be purchased in the open market cheaper than it could be produced. The company has not resumed tapping as yet.

An economic price for rubber has a great influence upon the development of highway transportation. In this field rubber is a necessity, and if the cost is not prohibitive, the volume required will be greatly increased.

WORLD WAR DEBT FUNDING COMMISSION.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I note in the Washington Post of this morning an article the headlines of which read as follows:

Would repay debt by trade balances.
British chancellor outlines his country's program to meet obligations to America.

There is another article in the Washington Post regarding the appointment of a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The closing paragraph of that article reads:

President Harding spent some time yesterday afternoon in conference with Secretary of the Treasury Mellon and Senator SMOOT discussing the funding of the British war debt to the United States.

I promised on yesterday again to bring this matter to the attention of the Senate and the country to-day.

Mr. President, actual negotiations have begun for the funding of the British debt to the United States. The envoys of Great Britain are in the Capital; the members of the debt commission who were appointed by the President are meeting with them day after day. They are solemnly discussing the question of settling the terms of the payment of the debt between the Government of Great Britain and the Government of the United States. The people of the United States are represented in Congress by two great political parties. Those two parties are supposed to speak for the whole American people. The present minority party and the people represented by it, however, are not represented on the debt commission. I submit that that is a denial of common justice to the Democratic Party and a rank outrage upon the American people.

Mr. President, to our utter surprise the President failed to appoint a single Democrat on the debt commission. I protested against that action. My friend, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], introduced a bill looking to giving us representation, and that bill was referred to the Committee on Finance some three weeks ago. The Senator from Georgia has worked persistently to have that bill favorably acted upon, and I have been cooperating with him to the end that we might have the bill reported out, brought before this body, and speedily passed and sent to the other House for early action.

Who can deny that it is right and just that the Democrats should be represented upon the debt commission.

What does the article to which I have referred state? It states that the President was in conference with the Republican Secretary of the Treasury and with a Republican Senator, who is a member of the debt commission, quietly discussing the matter among themselves, with no Democrat present to participate in the discussion and to know what was the nature of the negotiations. I do not care what party should undertake to do such a thing; if my own party should do it, I would condemn it. No party has a right to take over negotiations in reference to a debt which is due to the whole American people, and handle the matter as it would a private campaign fund which was contributed to that party for the purpose of attaining party success. The American people are entitled to know what is being said in the sessions of the debt commission; everything in reference to the matter ought to be in the open; there is no occasion for secrecy. The debt is owed to the American people, and they are entitled to know what is being done day after day looking to its collection.

I do not know what are the best methods to employ in the collection of the debt. I wish to do that which is the very best that can be done; I do not want to be hard on our allies; I want us to be fair to them and at the same time I want us to be entirely fair and square with the American people. I do know, as I said on yesterday, that the American people are tax burdened and debt ridden, and that if we can speed up the collection of the debt which is due us and secure the payment of some of it we can reduce taxes on our own people and accomplish great good in the affairs of our own people here at home. Charity should begin at home. That doctrine is sound politically as well as good religiously. I think we ought to be just to our own people before we undertake to be generous to other peoples.

On yesterday, Mr. President, after I had discussed this matter, I suggested to the Senate that on to-day I should feel it my duty to take some steps toward discharging the committee from the further consideration of the bill of the Senator from Georgia, to which I have referred. I made that statement because my friend from Georgia, who is the author of the bill and has been working so enthusiastically and persistently to have it favorably reported by the committee, had been temporarily called from the Chamber. I see the Senator from Georgia is now on the floor. I do not want to take any steps in the matter without conferring with him, for I am trying to cooperate with him and to help him to secure the object he desires to attain by the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the help of the Senator from Alabama and of other Senators in the effort to secure the passage of the measure which I have introduced providing for Democratic representation on the World War Debt Funding Commission. While I am anxious for this bill to be passed as early as possible, I have no complaint, Mr. President, on account of the delay which has ensued in connection with the measure. The chairman of the committee to which the bill was referred has twice called the committee together to consider it, but during the Christmas holidays the chairman and so many Senators, both Democrats and Republicans, were absent that he was unable to obtain a quorum, and on Saturday last had a similar experience. The chairman of the committee has again called a meeting for to-morrow morning at 10.30 o'clock to consider the bill. I have seen a majority of the members of the committee, who promise to be present and pass on the measure, and I feel sure they will make a favorable report.

I should like to say further that every member of the committee on the other side of the Chamber with whom I have discussed the question and a number of Republican Senators not members of the committee have assured me that they would support the bill. I have no complaint whatever of the chairman of the committee or members of the committee.

I introduced it on December 18, and Congress was not in session several days afterwards on account of Christmas holidays; to-day is the 9th of January. The chairman and other members of the committee, both Republicans and Democrats, were absent for a few days. I have been doing my very best to secure consideration of the bill; the chairman of the committee has likewise done his best; and I imagine that there are very few bills which have been considered so promptly as this bill will have been by to-morrow morning when the committee will pass upon it. So far as I know, this is the only bill of its kind that has been introduced. I regret that the President ignored the Democrats in making his appointments on this commission. My measure was not introduced in a partisan spirit; it was intended to prevent anything of the kind. I realize that the solution of this financial question—the greatest that will perhaps come before Congress within a century—may not be a popular one; the country may be disappointed in our efforts to collect these debts, and it might be better from a partisan Democratic standpoint to let the commission remain a partisan one, composed entirely of Republicans, but this is too important a matter to our country to let politics enter into its discussions. I believe that if Democratic Members of the Senate and House were named by the President as members of the Debt Funding Commission, to serve with the Republican members already appointed, making it a nonpartisan commission, their recommendations to Congress would be considered without partisan discussion.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I shall not make the motion which I suggested yesterday, in view of the statement of my friend from Georgia; but I submit that there is ground for complaint against the committee, and I lodge that complaint myself. I am interested in the bill of the Senator from Georgia the same as if I were its author. I could offer an amendment myself to the proposal; but I am supporting the measure introduced by my friend from Georgia, and I submit that the committee ought to have acted before the Debt Funding Commission commenced negotiations with the representatives of Great Britain. The Democratic Party ought to have had representation on the commission before any meeting was ever held. That is the point I am making. I do not want to wait until the administration has quietly made known its position on this matter to the foreign envoys. Negotiations are already under way in this very important matter. It is no small affair, for it involves $12,000,000,000 owed to the whole American people.

If the Republican Party, which formerly declined outright to put any Democrat upon the Debt Funding Commission, now has agreed to take action upon the measure to-morrow, that is better than no action at all; but the attitude of the Republican Party has been that the Democratic Party was not to have any representation upon that commission. The Republican Party flatly declined to give us representation upon that commission. We are entitled to such representation; and I am going to continue to demand it till we get it. I want action upon the measure of the Senator from Georgia, and I am entitled to have it; the Democratic Party and the country are entitled to have it; the whole American people are entitled to have it. I do not intend so long as I am a Member of this body that any party shall treat a debt owed to the whole American people as a debt due to the campaign committee of that party. I do not intend that any party shall conduct negotiations regarding that indebtedness, amounting to $12,000,000,000, behind closed doors and discuss it in a way that nobody but the leaders of that party shall know what is going on. That is my position in short. There is not anything so powerful in this country as public opinion in action, and the way to reach that public opinion is to give it the truth, and then it can be formed and action will be obtained.

I say again in conclusion that it is an outrage that the Democratic Party of the United States has not already secured representation upon the Debt Funding Commission, and we are going to have representation upon that commission or know the reason why. This matter is not a matter to be handled singly and solely by the representatives of the Republican Party; it is a United States matter and the two parties charged with the operation of the Government are entitled to be present through their representatives when negotiations are had.

It may be that some Democrat might be appointed a member of the commission to whom I would not agree, but the Democratic Party is entitled to have representation on it, and I reserve the right to fight the confirmation of anyone whose name may be suggested that I do not believe would be wholeheartedly in favor of doing what the American people want done toward collecting the debt of $12,000,000,000 owed to them and not to the leaders of the Republican Party.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. Is it not true that the Congress has definitely defined the powers of the Debt Funding Commission and that their duties are purely administrative, and that there is no power within the scope of the authority given the commission to do other than follow the direction which has already been given by the Congress?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Congress did say that they could defer payment for no longer a period than 25 years, I believe, and that they would not permit them to fix an interest rate less than 4½ per cent, I believe; but I do not know what is being cooked up to be served in another Congress. I do not know what sort of a propaganda is going on behind closed doors. Another effort may be made later on to unloose these restrictions that we have got around it, and this secret debt commission may come in with a report and advocate the cancellation of the debt and submit it to another Congress and say: "These are our findings." I want some Democrat on that commission, so that he will know whether those findings are correct. I repeat, it is right and just and just common honesty that the Democratic Party should be represented on that debt commission.

Already they are saying that they have not power enough. Already they are saying that Congress must untie their hands. Untie them? If you are going to keep this a partisan commission, I am in favor of hamstringing them—not only tying their hands, but I would hog tie them. I do not propose to have five partisans of any party sit down and say what shall be done with a $12,000,000,000 debt.

There are a lot of people in this country who think now that some of these international bankers, if they can force the cancellation of this debt, will get two and a half billion dollars in commissions for persuading the American people to cancel it. What an outrage upon common decency to appeal to the sympathy of the American people to forgive this debt, to cancel it, and then turn around to those interests and say, "We got it canceled; where are our commissions?" Why, there will be a scandal in this thing that will smell to high heaven before it is over.

Put some Democrats on that commission—real Democrats, Democrats who represent the people—and let them work together, and if the Republicans submit a proposition that is right and just, let them agree to it. If they do not submit such a proposition, let them antagonize it. Let the American people know their viewpoint as contrasted with the viewpoint of the Republicans.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, is the Senator from Alabama entertaining some fear that he may be converted to the proposition of passing a bill canceling this debt?

Mr. HEFLIN. No, sir; not the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BURSUM. It can not be done without legislation.

Mr. HEFLIN. Plans can be discussed and ways and means suggested without legislation.

Mr. BURSUM. Why does the Senator think some other people might be converted, then?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am like the old Quaker's wife who said, "I am satisfied so far as I am concerned, but I am not so sure of John." [Laughter.] So, Mr. President, I am sure about myself in this matter, but I do not know what my friend from New Mexico would do under partisan pressure and partisan exigencies. I simply want my party represented on this commission. It is simply a matter of right. I pointed out yesterday that we had a committee of five in this Chamber to look after the contingent expenses of the Senate, and they even put two Democrats on it to safeguard that situation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] correctly stated the status of the bill. In all cases these matters are first referred to the department for any suggestions that the department may make. In the case of this particular bill, as I explained to the Senator from Georgia, I will admit that through inadvertence there was a little delay in sending down the letter of inquiry. As soon as I ascertained that fact I sent it down by special messenger, asking for a speedy report, and I called a meeting of the commmittee for last Saturday. I was unable to secure the attendance of more than two or three Senators at that meeting. Therefore I called a meeting for to-morrow morning. At to-morrow morning's meeting I hope not only that we shall have a quorum, but that we shall be able to dispose of the bill and report it back to the Senate.

Personally I agree with the Senator from Georgia that the personnel of the commission should be increased—not that I think it would do any good to increase it under the present law, because the commission is so tied hand and foot by the law itself that there is little it can do in the settlement of any matter. Personally I think we should give the commission more leeway, and especially with reference to the rate of interest and the time within which payments may be made; but that would have to be done by another bill. I agree with the Senator from Alabama, however; I think there should be an increase in the personnel. The Members of the House and the Senate who are on that body have their work to do here, and I should like to see on that commission some good, strong men outside of Congress and outside of those who are at present holding political offices; and if we increase the number I should not object if all of them were good Democrats. I do not think it is a partisan question at all. I think it is purely an American question and that we should select the best and most capable men for the positions.

I can only say in reply to the Senator that we hope to report the matter out at a meeting to-morrow if I can possibly get one together.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am very glad to have that statement from the chairman of the committee; but I call the attention of Senators who are present to the changed attitude upon this matter of some Senators. When I discussed this matter some days ago I called upon the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], himself a member of the commission, to know if he favored our having representation upon that commission, and the profound answer made by the Senator from Utah was that he did not propose to contribute to a filibuster. Now the chairman of the committee, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], very frankly states that he is favorable to this proposition. It looks now as though we are going to get favorable action upon it. That is all I want. I want action. I do not want any postponement. I do not care to discuss it, except to get the facts about it in the RECORD, so that the people of the country may know.

I repeat, this is no small concern. The Senator from North Dakota suggests that they should have more power. Well, there you are. We thought it was best to put certain restrictions around that commission. I still think it is right to restrict their activities. I want to know what is being said up there. Suppose some fellow there says, "Well, I would favor cancellation, but the Democrats are not in favor of it," do you suppose they would work very hard to start paying this debt? Not a bit of it. What would they hope to do? To get it deferred; to let them dally with it, play with it, with nobody but the Republicans in conference with them knowing what the plans and purposes are, and they could give to the public one idea as to what ought to be done and be talking another way behind the screen. That is not going to happen if I can prevent it.

So I have no more to say, after the statement of the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the committee. I await the action of the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R.

13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MADDEN, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11939. It is a bill just reached yesterday on the Calendar, and provides a rule for the taxation of national banks. It is very important, because many of the tax systems of the States will be invalidated unless this bill is passed very soon, and the legislatures of the States are now in session.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Minnesota if this bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. KELLOGG. The bill was, I believe, unanimously reported from the committee. I do not think there was any objection to it by the committee. It was discussed a long time before the subcommittee, and then discussed before the full committee, and hearings have been had upon it which have lasted for months; and I think the bill, when reported, was unanimously reported. The chairman of the committee can correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. KING. As I understand there is some disagreement among the members of the committee, if not with respect to the bill itself, certainly with respect to an amendment which the Senator from Minnesota has offered, or expects to offer.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand that the committee this morning reported a provision for ratification of past taxes which have been declared illegal under the act of Congress, and has authorized the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] to offer it as an amendment to this bill; so I do not think there is any disagreement in the committee on that subject. At least I should like to have the matter brought up and considered a while during the morning hour, and then, if any Senator wants it to go over, it can go over. I should like to have the Senator from Pennsylvania make a statement on it. He is in charge of the bill for the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I was just about to suggest that the Senator who sponsors the bill, the Senator from Minnesota himself, should also make a statement in explanation of its provisions and purposes. Then the Senate in all probability will be in a position to know whether it desires to proceed at once with its consideration or to defer it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should be very glad to do it, only I thought I should yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who is present, to present it first, and I shall be very glad to supplement anything he has to say if the unanimous consent is granted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with the understanding that the request of the Senator goes no further than what he has just stated, namely, that the bill be discussed, and if any Senator later shall feel that he would like further time for consideration——

Mr. KELLOGG. If Senators wish further time, I certainly would not insist on its being disposed of this morning.

Mr. KING. I should be very glad to have it discussed for a while.

Mr. KELLOGG. I would not ask to go beyond the morning hour anyhow, on account of the appropriation bills.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should not like to have it disposed of to-day. I have a great many letters at my office in relation to this bill, some of them criticizing it most severely, and I should not want to have it passed upon to-day. I have no objection to discussing it, but I do not want it passed upon.

Mr. KELLOGG. It will have to be discussed at some time, and I should like to have the discussion started this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to proceeding with the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. With the understanding that it is not to be acted upon this morning, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rules provide that an objection may be made at any time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, do I understand that we are simply to take it up for the purpose of having an explanation, and then it is to be laid aside?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be taken up by unanimous consent, and then, after taking it up, any Senator can object to its further consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11939) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, this measure is an attempt to deal with a serious difficulty which at present exists in connection with the taxation by the several States of shares in national banking associations. These bodies, being agencies of the Federal Government, may not be taxed by the States excepting in accordance with such legislation as the Congress may from time to time enact. In section 5219 of the Revised Statutes Congress undertook to state the conditions upon which the States might tax the shares in national banks.

The language of section 5219, as it now stands, is far from clear. It is susceptible of either one of two different constructions. One construction is that the States may tax shares in national banks, provided the rate applied to those shares is no higher than the rate which the State applies to shares in its own banks and trust companies. The other construction is that the rate applied to the shares of national banks must be no higher than the rate which the State applies to any moneyed capital in the hands of individuals which, in fact, comes into competition with banks, National and State, even if it is not specifically embarked in banking business. Those are the two possible interpretations of section 5219 as it stands.

The former of those interpretations, namely, that the State will be within its power if its rate of taxation applied to national-bank shares is no higher than its rate applied to State banks and trust companies, is the one which, through a series of years, has been accepted by the legislatures of the several States, and taxes have been levied and assessed and collected in accordance with the theory that those taxes are valid, because in the instances to which I refer the rate of taxation was no higher than the taxing States were applying to their own banking institutions.

The Supreme Court of the United States not long ago, in 1921, to wit, decided that this conventional interpretation which had been acted upon by the States, and in accordance with which legislation had been passed, and under which many millions of dollars of taxes had been collected, was not the true interpretation of section 5219, and in a case coming up from the State of Virginia declared the true intent and meaning of section 5219 to be that the tax rate applied to national-bank shares shall not be higher than the rate applied to any moneyed capital in the hands of citizens of the State, even if not specifically embarked in banking business, if it should appear that in any way that capital came into competition with the national banks. It was admitted on the record in that case that the moneyed capital in the hands of individuals did come into competition with the banking business, and since the rate in the State of Virginia applicable to such moneyed capital in the hands of private people was lower than the rate applied alike to the State trust companies, banks, and national banks, it followed that the tax had been improvidently collected, and it was so decided.

Thereupon a serious situation was precipitated. Two questions arose for consideration; first, whether that interpretation placed by the Supreme Court upon section 5219 was an interpretation disclosing a condition of legislation satisfactory to the Congress and to the States, or whether it should be in some particular amended, either to conform to the old conventional interpretation, now set aside, or in some better way; and, in the second place, with regard to the large amount of tax money which had been collected by various taxing agencies or States throughout the Union, whether that money should be sued for and recovered by the taxpayers on the theory that it was money paid under an invalid tax and therefore repayable to the taxpayer on suit or whether the National Government could take some steps by legislation to authorize the several States to validate the collections theretofore made, and to justify the retention of those collections in the face of demands for their return.

Those two questions were faced and dealt with by the draftsmen of several measures introduced into the House and introduced into the Senate. One measure, the bill which is now before the Senate for consideration, a House measure in its origin, dealt with both the problems, the problem, to wit, of a restatement of section 5219 to meet the difficulty created by the decision of the Supreme Court, and to fix the terms upon which taxation for the future should proceed; and also, with the validating provision, which undertook to authorize the States to pass legislation justifying the retention of moneys collected. A Senate bill was introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] which likewise dealt both with the problem of revising section 5219 for permanent use, and also with the validating emergency.

These measures having been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and adequately considered by that committee, it seemed to the committee that the two problems were diverse in their nature, one of them having to do with the permanent amendment to the legislation of the United States for all time to come in the field of State taxation of national banks, and the other of them being purely an emergency measure, to deal with the particular situation created by a single decision and the consequences that followed from it. It seemed therefore that it was desirable that these two different questions should come before the Senate in two different measures and should receive separate consideration.

Accordingly, it was determined by the Committee on Banking and Currency that the House bill should be amended by striking out all after its enacting clause, and that there should be substituted a provision which, in the judgment of the committee, satisfactorily deals with the subject of future taxation; and that the bill introduced by the Senator from Minnesota should be amended by striking out all after its enacting clause and inserting provisions converting it into a measure which would squarely bring before the Senate the question whether or not validating legislation was to be enacted. The House bill, with the amendment recommended by the committee, was accordingly reported out, and that is the measure now before the Senate for consideration.

It differs from section 5219 in the following particulars: Section 5219 provides that the taxation of national-bank shares by the several States shall not be at a higher rate than the rate applied by those States to moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens, and that, as I have explained, has been interpreted by the Supreme Court to mean any moneyed capital, even if not engaged in the banking business, which comes in competition with the banks. That is section 5219.

The bill introduced by the Senator from Minnesota proposed to amend section 5219 by substituting the following test, that the rate of taxation applied by the State to national-bank shares should not be higher than the rate applied by the State to shares in its own State banks and trust companies.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. My bill provided that the rate applied by the State to national-bank shares should not be greater than the rate applied to all moneyed capital engaged in banking, whether it was in State banks, trust companies, or private banks—all capital engaged in banking.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is correct; I misstated the provision of his bill.

The proposal which the committee had under consideration when the House bill came before it was the one I had in mind, namely, that the test should be whether the tax imposed by the State was higher than the rate applied to its own banks and trust companies, and the Senator from Minnesota proposed to revise or amend that test by substituting the one which he has correctly stated, namely, the test of the rate applied by the State to any moneyed capital engaged in the business of banking, so that there should be no discrimination against national banks and in favor of State banks and trust companies or private bankers, even if not incorporated.

Objection was made to that test on the ground that the effect of it was to segregate banking capital, as such, as a possible target for discriminatory taxation; and in order to safeguard the test suggested by the Senator from Minnesota the committee has reported the following qualification to the test proposed, namely, not merely that the rate of taxation applied to national-bank shares shall not be higher than the rate applied by the State to capital engaged in the banking business in the State, but that it shall not be higher than the average of the rates applied by the State to shares in business, manufacturing, and commercial corporations. In other words, the danger apprehended from the test suggested by the Senator from Minnesota was that legislatures might be hostile to banking business as such, irrespective of whether it were banking business conducted under a national banking association or by a State bank or trust company or by a private banker, in which event there might be discriminatory legislation against the banks; and it was therefore thought that some further safeguard should be imposed which would protect banks of all sorts from that discrimination. The suggestion made by the committee is that that safeguard will be found by averaging the State tax rate on the shares of these other classes of corporations to which I have referred—business corporations, manufacturing corporations, and commercial corporations—and that the average of their rates shall be the limit beyond which the State can not go in taxing shares in national banks.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCLEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCORMICK. Would it inconvenience the Senator at this point to explain, perhaps very briefly, how the average rate on corporations or capital other than banking capital would be determined?

Mr. PEPPER. It is extremely difficult to answer the question of the Senator, for the reason that the several States have divergent practices in regard to the taxation of the other forms of corporate activities. In some States no tax at all is imposed on capital invested in manufacturing. It is, therefore, provided in the measure reported by the committee that in case a State does not tax any or all of the corporations other than banks the average of the rates ceases to be the limit, and the only limit that is left is the one suggested by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will allow me, the Supreme Court has already held that States may exempt real estate or manufacturing or other corporations, and that does not in any way invalidate the bank tax.

I might further add, in answer to the Senator from Illinois, that where a rate is proposed it is not difficult to find the average rate imposed in the State. It is done every day by tax commissions.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, it is perfectly true, as the Senator from Minnesota has stated, that it is not at all difficult in the case of any particular State to find the average. I understood the question of the Senator from Illinois to be a general question as to what the States as a whole have done in the matter, and my answer to that was that I could not make a statement applicable to all the States because they have dealt with the problem differently. But I quite agree that in any one State it is quite easy to state the average rate and apply it as a test under the terms of the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I might add that the limitation applies to each separate State.

Mr. PEPPER. This is a measure, as the Senator has explained, which will have a particular application to each of the several States, and it is adjustable to the policy of each State in respect of its various types of corporations.

Mr. President, summing up briefly, we have now on the statute books a section of the law susceptible of two interpretations. The interpretation placed upon it by the Supreme Court is out of harmony with the interpretation which in the past has been accepted and acted upon. It is deemed by the committee to be an unfortunate interpretation, not in the sense that it may not be the right interpretation of the language as drawn, but that it furnishes a poor basis upon which to build up the tax laws of the States in the future. Therefore, the question is, What shall we substitute for section 5219? As between the various tests which have been suggested, it has seemed to the committee that the best one is to limit the rate of tax which a State may impose upon national-bank shares by adopting the safeguard that it shall not be greater than the rate applied by the State to any money engaged in the banking business, whether in the hands of incorporated banks, trust companies, or private banks, superseding a further safeguard by providing that if a State taxes manufacturing, business, or commercial corporations at a rate or at a series of rates of which the average is lower than the rate applied to bank capital, that then, so far as national banks are concerned, that lower average rate applied by the State to the other corporations shall be the limit of the exercise of its taxing power.

The report of the committee deals with two or three other matters which may be mentioned merely to dispose of them. Section 5219, the present section, seems to contemplate primarily the form of taxation——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator leaves the matter I would like to ask him a question. Suppose the rate imposed by the State upon the capital of State banks were higher than the rate imposed by the State upon its corporations engaged in other than the banking business, would the bill in the form in which it is presented mean that the State could only tax the shares of national banks to the amount of the lower tax, assuming that the tax on corporations be lower than the tax on State banks? In other words, to make myself clear, suppose the tax imposed by the State on money invested in corporations was lower than the tax imposed by the State on money invested in its State banks; would the power of the State to tax national-bank stock be limited to the lower rate?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; that is to say, the object of the provision in the measure before the Senate for ascertaining the average rate applied by a State to corporations other than banking corporations of the classes enumerated is to afford a safeguard against what by many is apprehended as a real danger, that if we leave no other check on the State's power to tax national-bank shares than the limit of what it does in the case of State banks and trust companies, we would be segregating banking capital, as such, as an object of hostile taxation. This is an attempt to guard against that danger by providing that if in any State legislation discriminatory against banking capital and in favor of the other classes of corporations shall be resorted to, then, so far as national-bank shares are concerned, the rate applicable to the other classes of shares shall be the applicable rate and not the rate applied by the State to other banking capital.

Have I made my answer clear to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is entirely clear; but it seems to me that very method might possibly bring about discrimination, and a very glaring discrimination, in the tax imposed upon money invested in national banks and the tax imposed upon money invested in State banks.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator with reference to his construction of the proviso (b). Assuming that shares of a mercantile corporation under the laws of a State are left to be valued by local taxing officers and that they take the local taxing rate, how would that average value be determined under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. PEPPER. The language of the section is so drawn, if the Senator will notice, as not to be applicable only to direct action by the State but to any taxation of those classes within the taxing State, thus covering the cases in which the taxing shall actually be done by a taxing subdivision of the State.

Mr. LENROOT. But my point was how was the average value to be determined without valuing every share of stock in the State?

Mr. PEPPER. It is a mere mathematical calculation to ascertain in any given State what is the average of the rates of tax in force within that State applicable to corporations of the classes specified.

Mr. LENROOT. That is, irrespective of the value of the property?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; irrespective of the value of the property.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator that the language is not "the average rate," but "the average of the rates."

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; the average of the rates.

Mr. LENROOT. How would that average be arrived at? If there were 70 counties in the State, would it be necessary to take all the municipalities and add together the different rates and then divide by the number?

Mr. PEPPER. If it were to be imagined that there was in any State a varying number of rates in different parts of the State applicable to the shares—let us say, of manufacturing corporations—then it would be necessary.

Mr. LENROOT. There would be such necessity in every case where they were valued by a local taxing agency to take the local tax rate, would there not?

Mr. PEPPER. In every case where the taxing is done by a local body and not merely the local appraisement for the purposes of taxation. In every such instance we would establish a factor which would have to be taken into consideration in striking the average.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, may I ask one other question? Does the Senator think that rate would be for the current year in which the bank rate is to be applied or would it be for a preceding year? The language seems to be silent upon that subject. It could not be the current year, of course.

Mr. PEPPER. That is to say, whether the average, if there was a difference, should be the preceding year or the year in which the tax is made?

Mr. LENROOT. It would have to be the preceding year to make it workable at all.

Mr. PEPPER. I should think it would be the last average ascertainable under the last preexisting State legislation.

Mr. LENROOT. I think so. Does not the Senator think that should be cleared up?

Mr. PEPPER. I think if it needs clarification it certainly ought to be.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Has the bill been reported yet which looks to the validating of the taxes which have been imposed?

Mr. PEPPER. The validating part of the program has not been entered upon yet; but I am credibly informed that at the proper time the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] will move, as an amendment to the pending measure, the validating provision which has been under consideration by the committee; and if and when that is done I am authorized by the committee to make no objection to the addition of the amendment in order that it may be considered by the Senate at the same time the principal question is considered.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator from Pennsylvania does not object, I would like to ask two or three questions along that line.

Mr. PEPPER. May I ask the Senator whether he is going to deal with the validating feature?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Would it be agreeable to the Senator to allow me in a sentence or two to conclude what I have to say about the other part of the measure?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. I suggest that because the proposed revision of section 5219 now before the Senate deals not merely with the point which we have so far discussed, namely, the limitation upon the power of the State in taxing shares, but it makes clear what in the judgment of the committee needed to be made clear, namely, that provision should be made for the case in which a State desires to tax, not the shares as shares, but the income of the banks under some form of corporate income tax or, in the alternative, to include dividends received from the shares in the taxable quota of the property of a citizen taxable as his income under a State income tax law. So the measure before the Senate deals not only with the taxing of shares as shares but it comprehends also the case in which the State may desire to tax the income of a national bank and the case in which the State may desire to include dividends upon shares in national banks in the taxable income of the citizen, the provision being that any one of those forms of taxation of national-bank shares shall be in lieu of the others.

This, Mr. President, completes the summary statement of so much of the problem as has to do with the permanent basis of State taxation of national-bank shares.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio with regard to the validating proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I wish to ask these questions now in order to obtain an expression from the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has given a great deal of thought to this subject. Before asking the questions I desire, however, to make a preliminary statement.

Of course, those who sponsor the validating provision which will be offered do it on the theory that under the recent decision of the Supreme Court taxes which have been levied against national banks by the State or local subdivisions of the State are illegal, and it is proposed by the Congress of the United States to permit, so far as it can, the State legislatures to pass laws which will validate those illegal taxes.

Now, I wish to submit to the Senator from Pennsylvania two questions. First I wish to say that for a number of years the Congress of the United States has been passing appropriation bills authorizing the refunding to taxpayers of taxes which have been illegally exacted and collected; in fact, on yesterday, in the deficiency appropriation bill which was passed by the Senate we provided for the refunding of $43,000,000 of taxes which had been illegally exacted by the Treasury Department. Now, query: If the Congress feels that it can not in good conscience keep the money which has been illegally exacted by the executive department of the Federal Government, how can the Congress of the United States in good conscience say to a State, "So far as the Congress of the United States is concerned we are quite willing that you shall retain your illegal exactions from the taxpayers in the State"? That is the first question.

The second question on which I should like to hear the Senator from Pennsylvania is this: Assuming that it is good policy thus to say to the State, "You may keep these taxes so illegally collected," has the Congress the constitutional power to say to a State, "You may validate these illegal exactions"; or, to put it in another way, has the Congress of the United States any authority under the Constitution to legislate upon the subject looking to the validation of the tax?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall answer those two questions in this way: Reminding the Senator from Ohio that the question of validating legislation is not really before the Senate at the moment and that his questions are anticipatory of an amendment which I believe the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] intends to propose on this subject, speaking for myself, I have very grave doubt about the propriety of so-called validating legislation. The limit to which I should be willing to go, if I should be willing to go even so far, is to recognize that the question whether or not such taxes should be retained or refunded is a local question in each State, to be settled by the legislatures and the courts thereof.

As to the second question, I desire to say that I can think of no ground upon which validating legislation by a State could possibly be constitutional, if it be the true view that the States have no power to lay taxes upon national bank shares unless Congress delegates such power. Upon that view, when the State acted it was without power to tax and the so-called tax was an illegal exaction and should be recoverable. I think it would be unconstitutional to take away the right of recovery.

But there is another theory, applicable in the judgment of some authorities, namely, that the State has the original power to impose such taxation, and that the only reason that the taxing law was invalid was not on account of a defect of power but because presumably any such tax laid by a State is hostile to an agency of the Government of the United States. It is a fair question upon which lawyers may disagree as to whether upon such a view a State may act under the declaration of the Federal Government that no such hostility of purpose is involved and proceed to declare that the passage by the State of a so-called validating act, justifying the retention of the tax by the State, will not be deemed an act hostile to, or inimical to the interest of, either the United States or any agency thereof.

I wish to make it perfectly clear, Mr. President, that in answering these questions as I have done I am not in any way committing myself to approving the proposed validating legislation, and I again call the attention of the Senate to the fact that that matter is not before the Senate at the moment and will not be until the Senator from Minnesota offers his amendment. He is more competent than anybody else that I know to state the reasons in support of it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I think I agree entirely with the Senator from Pennsylvania as to both propositions—first, that it would be bad policy for us to try to validate those illegal taxes, and, in the second place, I very seriously doubt whether we have any constitutional authority so to act even if we thought it good policy to act in that way. I have an open mind on the subject, and I shall listen with very great care to the arguments which may be made on both sides.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask the Senator if what is proposed is not merely saying on the part of Congress that if the States proceed in their own way under their own constitutions and laws to validate what has taken place, Congress will not consider it and the Federal Government will not consider such action as inimical to the interests of any agency in the Federal Government? That is about as far as the so-called validating provision goes, is it not? It seems to me that we can at least go that far and simply say that, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, we will not consider such action as each State may take in attempting to validate the collections as inimical to the interests of the Federal Government.

Mr. PEPPER. I so understand.

Mr. President, I have now stated in as colorless a way as possible the problem with which the committee has attempted to deal. I have set forth the principles which we think should apply to such taxation by the States in the future. I have answered questions regarding the validating provision because they were asked me, though that matter at the moment is not before the Senate. Having made the statement in support of the measure as reported by the committee, I leave it in the hands of the Senate for such disposition as the Senate may desire to make of it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to his colleague?

Mr. PEPPER. I have finished my remarks, but I shall be glad to answer my colleague's question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I should like to ask one question of my colleague. I notice that in reply to the Senator from North Carolina as to the possibility of prejudice against State banks in the contrasting taxation whereby the national-bank taxation might be limited by the proviso in clause (b) whereas the State-bank taxation would not be so limited, the Senator gave it as the judgment of the committee that there was more danger of abuse of the power if the proviso were not put in. I should like to ask the Senator his judgment, for I know that he has given this subject deep consideration, as to the propriety of establishing by this proposed statute the same rule that the States have believed to be the law for many years passed? Has the Senator considered the propriety of amending section 5219 so as to establish what we all thought it meant until the decision of the Supreme Court? Would not that be fairer, and would it not put the State banks and national banks on the same level?

Mr. PEPPER. That was carefully considered by the committee, and the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota amounted to just that thing, enlarged to include private bankers; but the objection that has been made to that—whether it be based on imaginary apprehensions or upon a real danger—is that the effect of that legislation would be to segregate all the banking capital in a State as a target for hostile or discriminatory legislation by that State, not against national banks but against anybody engaged in the business of banking; and therefore the effort of the committee was to find some way in which to guard against the possibility of such hostility or discrimination.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether there was any evidence before the committee to show that in any of the States, to any extent, there was any discriminatory legislation for or against capital engaged in banking as distinguished from capital engaged in other industries?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I can not say that there was evidence before the committee, because no witnesses were examined in the ordinary way, although representatives of a great many points of view were given hearings by the committee and by the subcommittee in charge; but it was alleged that, for instance, in North Dakota there was legislation of such a sort as to give pause on the question of whether or not there might be such hostile legislation as I have referred to.

Mr. SMITH. The reason why I ask the question is that in legislating here from a national standpoint for banks, of course we are trying to put the treatment of national banks in a State on the same plane with the treatment of any other banking institution in the State. This, however, goes further than that, and seems to attempt to take care of the private banking industry as well as national banking, in that under this we do not allow any discrimination against the national banks either in favor of the private banks or, in the following section, in favor of any form of money engaged in industrial or productive enterprises.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I need not say to the Senator that it is not the thought of the committee to influence the action of the State in taxing its own State banking institutions, except to the extent of providing that it shall not tax the national banks at a higher or a greater rate, and then to provide that if there is any evidence that banking capital as such is being discriminated against, the rate to be applied shall be the average of the rates applied to shares in certain other corporations. I can not say whether this danger is imaginary or real; but it seemed to the committee that since, in the apprehension of many, it is a real danger, it was best to safeguard it rather than to ignore it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It was the explanation of that point that I think many of us would be interested in hearing from the Senator, particularly with regard to his own views on it, because we know that he has studied this question, and I am interested to know whether he shares that apprehension.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have not the experience of actual legislative conditions, present or prospective, in the different States which would enable me to answer that question. All I can say is that many of those who have canvassed and reviewed the situation have made impressive statements to our committee indicating the existence on their part of such an apprehension, and we were not able to say that it was not well founded.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, adverting to the question which the junior Senator from Pennsylvania asked his colleague, it seemed to some of us on the committee that the provision in the House bill met the requirement suggested by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, in these words:

> That the tax imposed shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizens of such State coming into competition with the business of national banks.

The reference there being specifically, of course, to capital employed in the State banking business, or trust companies, or capital employed by private bankers under State laws, and presumptively to capital empoyed by individuals whose primary and real business it is to lend money in competition with banks.

It might give the Senator a clearer comprehension of the situation to state to him, as the senior Senator from Pennsylvania did state, that the accepted theory of the banking community of the United States up to the time of the recent Supreme Court decision was that the law was designed to protect stockholders in national banks against discrimination in favor of stockholders in State kanks; in other words, to provide that the shares of national banks should not be taxed at a higher rate than the shares of State banks. In the course of events States found it impossible to derive any revenue from taxation of moneyed capital in the hands of individuals upon the basis of like taxation of real property. On the first day of each taxable year it happened that nobody had any balance in bank. The balances were all checked out for 24 hours and redeposited on the next day. Therefore the States derived no revenue whatsoever, or only inappreciable revenue, from that sort of taxation of moneyed capital in the hands of the individual.

The State of Virginia, more as a matter of experiment than anything else, undertook to place a tax of 2 mills on moneyed capital in the hands of the individual. The result of that was that the State pretty soon derived a revenue of approximately $350,000 a year from this source of taxation, the tax being so inappreciable upon each individual account that taxpayers gave in this moneyed capital in their returns; so that the State, from collecting some $10,000 or $12,000 from this source, now collects approximately $350,000 from this source. We proceeded in contentment with that until very recently a national bank in the city of Richmond, reverting to the existing statute, conceived the idea that this tax of 2 mills on moneyed capital in the hands of the individual was a discrimination against shares in national banks, contending that money in the hands of the individual came into competition with the business of national banks. Of course, it did nothing of the kind, because to contend that would be to contend that deposits in a national bank, instead of being in cooperation with and helpful to the national bank, was in competition with the business of the national bank.

A suit was brought by this Richmond bank, and the State made, I think, the grave blunder of admitting certain alleged facts, instead of contesting the allegations of the bill. I am a layman, and in talking before lawyers I do not know whether I am stating the case properly or not. At all events, the State admitted the allegations of the bill, which I think were not true, because this moneyed capital in the hands of individuals, such as bank balances, does not come into competition with the business of national banks.

I may interject here that a different condition arose in the State of New York. There, when banks brought suit under this decision of the Supreme Court to recover taxes illegally collected by the State, it developed that the State did not tax moneyed capital coming into competition with the national banks. Such great private bankers as Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. escaped this taxation; so that national banks there had a real grievance, whereas they had not in my State. The effort, I repeat, has been to provide against discrimination in favor of State banks, or of private bankers, or of moneyed capital actually coming into competition with the business of national banking.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Was the discrimination in New York by virtue of the provisions of the State statute, or was the discrimination due simply to the administration of that law?

Mr. GLASS. That I can not specifically answer, but I assume that it was due to the discrimination of the State statute——

Mr. KELLOGG. It was.

Mr. GLASS. Hence, in New York the national banks had a real grievance; but in Virginia they had no grievance; and, as a matter of fact, the national banks are under agreement with the State authorities to submit to a just rate of taxation.

What the Senate bill purports to do, and what I think the House bill actually does, is to put all banking capital on an equal basis of taxation. Other members of the committee who are lawyers, trained in the refinements of definitions, do not agree with me as to that; and hence we have stricken out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and substituted the Senate bill. My confidence in the legal accomplishments and acumen of the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] has led me to acquiesce in this view of the matter, though I do not understand it.

Mr. KELLOGG obtained the floor.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McLean	Shields
Bayard	Harreld	McNary	Shortridge
Borah	Harris	Moses	Simmons
Broussard	Harrison	Nelson	Smith
Bursum	Heflin	New	Smoot
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Spencer
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Sterling
Capper	Kellogg	Oddie	Sutherland
Couzens	Kendrick	Overman	Townsend
Culberson	Keyes	Pepper	Trammell
Curtis	King	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dial	Ladd	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Lenroot	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Lodge	Ransdell	Warren
George	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Gerry	McCumber	Robinson	Williams
Glass	McKellar	Sheppard	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I desire to discuss the original bill reported by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and the proposed amendment authorizing the States to ratify taxes which have been heretofore levied on the stock of national banks.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] has explained the bill at considerable length, and on this branch I will be very brief. It is sufficient to say that when the national bank act was passed, in 1864, the banking capital of the country was in the hands of State banks and individuals or firms. The Federal Government, in order to prevent the States from discriminating against capital engaged in national banks, provided, in substance, by the act of 1864, which was amended in 1868, and as to the details of which I will not speak, that the States might tax the shares of national banks, but that the rate should not be greater than the rate imposed on other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizens.

That law has remained from 1868 down to the present time as the law of the country. As a matter of fact, the money or intangible credits of individuals, such as notes, bills receivable, money in banks, and so forth, has ceased to be much of a factor in competition with national banks. No one can say that there is not a degree of competition, and it should not be left open to be proved in every single case where a bank undertakes to escape taxation that individual credits or intangible assets are not in competition with banks; but it is perfectly evident that it has ceased to be the basis upon which national banks should be taxed.

Mr. President, there have grown up in the various States systems of taxation other than direct taxes on property; I mean ad valorem levies. It has been found that it was impossible to collect direct taxes on intangible assets, so the States have adopted various substituted systems of taxing intangible assets or different rates of taxing intangible assets. To give an illustration, in the State of Minnesota when we had the direct tax on intangible assets and money of individuals we collected about $350,000 a year under rates varying from 2 to 3 per cent. We changed the rate to 3 mills on the dollar and collected $1,350,000. The State of New York has had a more remarkable experience than that. Where they used to collect a little over a million dollars they collect twenty or thirty million to-day, because you can get people to list for taxations moneys and credits in the hands of the individual citizen if the rate is not such as to practically take all the interest.

The Supreme Court of the United States passed on this question a great many times, as the Senator from Pennsylvania clearly explained, and it came to be the general understanding among State legislatures and State authorities that the rule was that the rate on bank stock should not be greater than on other moneyed capital of State banks and trust companies, the principal agencies competing with national banks; and there are a great many more State banks and trust companies than there are national banks. So for years the States went on passing laws for income taxes in lieu of direct taxes on individuals, for a smaller rate upon individuals' intangible assets than was imposed on the stock of the banks. Whereupon, after many years of such practice, I think from 14 to 18 States having adopted the system of levying a smaller tax on individuals' intangible assets than on bank stock, or a substituted system of income taxes instead of direct taxes on such intangible assets, the Supreme Court of the United States decided the case of the City of Richmond against the Merchants' National Bank. I will not deny that that decision is correct. I do not criticize it at all, because, as was correctly said by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], it was conceded in that case that the money and credits of individuals taxed in the city of Richmond did come in competition with the national banks.

I am unable to conceive that the bank deposits of all the depositors in the country come in competition with the banks themselves. I do not believe that to any great extent individual loaners of money for investment come in competition with national banks. But if the law is left as it is now, it must be proven in every case, and if it is true that the rate of taxation on individual credits is the basis for taxation of the stock of national banks, I think the basis is wrong. I do not believe that individual investors in low-rate bonds, such as bonds bearing 4 per cent, or in farm mortgages bearing 5 or 6 per cent, should be taxed on their credits, or that individuals who have deposits in banks drawing 2 per cent should be taxed on their credits at the same rate as a bank, with its charter and the right to do a banking business. On the other hand, I do not believe that the Congress should open the door to a substantial discrimination against banking capital. Now, that being the state of the law, the City of Richmond case was decided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 12817.

Mr. KELLOGG. In the City of Richmond case it was found that the value of national bank stock was $8,000,000,000; that of the trust companies, $6,000,000,000; and intangible assets and the money of individuals, $6,500,000,000. It did not appear how much was money in the banks or how much was not in competition with the banks. The rate the city of Richmond imposed on banks was $1.75, while the rate imposed on private individuals was 95 cents. After the decision in the Richmond case the banks and the legislature got together and agreed that the rate should be 55 cents upon individuals and $1.10 upon the banks, making the discrimination just as great as before, but it was a taxation by consent of the banks which I do not think should exist. I think Congress should lay down the rule.

With that in view, the House passed a bill which provided that the basis should be that the States might assess the banks, provided that the tax imposed should "not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizens of such State coming into competition with the business of national banks." That is exactly what the law was before, because the Supreme Court has held that it is only money in the hands of individuals which comes in competition with national banks that forms the basis of taxation of national bank stock.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. May I inquire of the Senator if the Supreme Court itself has defined "money in the hands of individuals coming into competition with national banks" as money on deposit in the banks, for example?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; the Supreme Court has said several times—in fact, it is practically admitted in all cases—that it is the money in the hands of individuals coming in competition with national banks that forms the basis of taxation. It has never decided that if the money does not come in competition with national banks it is a basis for taxation of national-bank stock.

Mr. GLASS. What I want to arrive at is this: Is it at all probable that the Supreme Court would decide that the bank balances of individuals, which really furnish the capital upon which banks conduct their business, may be construed as capital in the hands of individuals coming in competition with the national-banking business?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think that would be held by the court. For instance, individuals in a city like New York, where there are a great many individual bankers who have large deposits, might use their money to compete with national banks. They might keep their money on deposit in their own banks or might keep part of it on deposit with trust companies or other companies. I do not think the court would hold that money simply on deposit with the bank was in competition with banks, but there are some cities where private banks or private individuals undoubtedly compete to some extent with banks.

Mr. GLASS. I am in favor, and I think all of us are in favor, of taxing private bankers on just the same basis and to the same extent that we may tax State or National banks. But what I am trying to do is to reach a definition of what is "moneyed capital in the hands of the individual coming in competition with the business of national banks."

Mr. KELLOGG. I will tell the Senator. The bill which passed the House did not change the law as it existed before.

Mr. GLASS. Then why did the House pass the bill?

Mr. KELLOGG. Under the bill as it passed the House we could tax State banks and trust companies one-half what we tax national banks, and it would not be void under the law——

Mr. GLASS. I am surprised to hear a statement of that sort.

Mr. KELLOGG. Because it provides that it is only money and credit in the hands of the individual citizens. That is the answer to the Senator. I sought in the bill which I introduced to broaden it and to provide, as I did—and as the committee have reported and the bill is now before the Senate—as follows:

(b) In the case of a State tax on said shares the rate of taxation shall not be higher than the rate applicable to other moneyed capital employed in the business of banking within the taxing State.

In other words, State banks, trust companies, and private individuals like J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who receive deposits and who do a banking business, and others in the large cities were in contemplation. Some States do not allow private banking. We sought by this provision to make it so broad that the States could not tax the stock of national banks at a greater rate than any moneyed capital engaged in banking, whether it was represented by a State corporation in the nature of a trust company, a State bank, a private individual, or a copartnership.

I think that includes everything that the House bill included and more, but it eliminates the credits in the hands of the individual citizen not engaged in banking, and that, I think, should be eliminated for a practical reason. The States have been unable to collect direct taxes on individuals. They can do it with reference to corporations because they are subject to visitation by the officials. Another reason is that I do not believe the individual should be taxed as much as the corporation enjoying a franchise and engaged in that sort of business.

Now, coming to the clause proposed by the committee, I am quite in accord with it. I do not believe that national banks or State banks or banking capital should be put up as a target for particular taxation in excess of the general rate of taxation. I think they should be treated the same as other business concerns. The difficulty was in finding a basis to compare the rates on national bank stock with other property, and the committee gave to that matter a great deal of study and I think received suggestions from a great many sources. It was impossible to make the rate the same as the rate on all other properties because railroads in many States are taxed on the gross-earning basis, as are many public utilities. Certain classes of property in some States are exempt from taxation. Some property is taxed on an income basis.

But it was found that a great many States tax the stock of all corporations, whether foreign or domestic; and it was thought that if the tax could not be greater than the average rate applied to other business corporations where they were taxed, it would be a sufficient safeguard to all banking capital. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection. I am inclined to the opinion that in view of the fact that there are more State banks and trust companies than there are National banks, that "all moneyed capital engaged in other banking" is a pretty fair protection, but I have no objection to the clause proposed by the committee, which I think prevents any attempt at discrimination against banking capital generally.

Now, one other feature of the bill authorizes the State to tax the net income of an association, but provides that—

The rate shall not be higher than the highest of the rates imposed by the taxing State upon the net income of mercantile manufacturing and/or financial corporations doing business within its limits.

The object of that is that some States have found it more scientific, or, at least, they believe they have, to tax the income of corporations than to tax the physical property, and if they desire to tax the income of banks they ought not to be prohibited from doing it. Certainly it can not be unfair to other companies if the limitation is that the income tax shall not be higher than the highest imposed upon the other corporations.

Now, so much for the Senate committee bill. The objection, as I said, to the bill as passed by the House is that it still makes the rate of taxation on intangible credits in the hands of the individual citizen the basis for taxation of national banks, whether he is engaged in banking or whether he is not. If he is engaged in banking, to be sure, his capital should pay the same rate as the national banks. If he is not engaged in banking, I do not think it is wise. Unless the Congress shall pass some law on the subject, the taxing systems of New York, Massachusetts, Minnesota, and 18 or 20 other States are going to be destroyed. In fact, it would have been destroyed in Virginia if the banks had not come to an understanding with the legislature and agreed to a discrimination as between individuals and corporations. I shall not take the time of the Senate now to say anything more on that question.

I would like to answer the question asked by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] as to the constitutional power of the Congress and the States to ratify any tax which has heretofore been levied. On that question let me state what the condition is in New York and in Massachusetts, but especially in New York.

In the State of New York, the State taxes the stock of national banks. First, it taxes real estate substantially as it is done in every State. Second, it taxes the stock of the national banks at 1 per cent of the value of the stocks—book value, we will call it. Third, there is a tax to the individual stockholder, an income tax on his income from stock in national banks. Other capital in the hands of the individual system is taxed on an income basis. The court found that that rate thus imposed on national banks was higher than the rate imposed on other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizen. Feeling bound by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Richmond case, it held the tax void as in violation of the Federal statute.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask what the Senator conjectures, if he pleases, would have been the decision of the Supreme Court had the State authorities of Virginia contested the allegation of the bill saying that the capital in the hands of individuals, in the nature of bank deposits and otherwise, was in competition with the business of national banks?

Mr. KELLOGG. I am inclined to think that it would have been difficult for the bank to prove that the capital in the hands of the individual competed with that of the bank to any considerable extent.

Mr. GLASS. Would it not have been literally impossible to have proved any such absurdity?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think so; but at the same time that question was always left open.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator states that unless we pass this bill or some similar bill the taxation laws of some 18 or more States will be disrupted, and that the taxing laws of Virginia would be disrupted but for the agreement between the bankers and the State authorities. Would that be true of any State where the taxation of capital engaged in banking business was made uniform?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; it would under the present law if the intangible assets of private individuals are considered to be in competition with banks.

Mr. GLASS. But what I am trying to arrive at is how a sane person can say that they are in competition with the business of national banks?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is a mooted question, and there will be lawsuits in every State of the Union over the matter.

Now let me state what occurred in New York: In 1920, 1921, and 1922 the State of New York levied the 1 per cent tax. Everybody admits that it was not excessive; everybody in New York will tell you that a tax of 1 per cent on their capital is not an excessive tax; but it is more than was levied on the intangible assets in the hands of the individual. What has occurred? Suits have been brought in New York.

Mr. GLASS. Is it not more than was levied upon capital engaged in private banking business?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will explain that. It is more than was levied on capital engaged in private banking business, because such capital is in the hands of the individual citizen, but the law also included all other individual citizens whether they were engaged in banking or not. That is the trouble.

Suits have been brought against the city of New York, and I am informed by the corporation counsel of New York that those bringing such suits have recovered about $20,000,000 or will recover that amount; in other words, the banks of New York have recovered back all the taxes for 1920, 1921, and 1922, not merely that part of the tax which equals the rate imposed on individuals, but the entire tax will be recovered back unless Congress authorizes the State to ratify it. Just think of the situation! It will almost bankrupt the city of New York; and in the State I am informed the recoveries will amount to somewhere between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000 altogether. The State of Massachusetts is in the same condition.

I do not think one can find a banker in the State of New York who will say that the rate of taxation on banks is excessive, and yet, if there is not something done to permit the States to ratify the taxes, not only will the banks escape the old rate of taxation, which was equal to the taxation on moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens, but will escape all taxation. The question is, Can Congress consent to the States ratifying those taxes? Personally I have no doubt about it whatever, and I will state very briefly the principles on which such legislation is valid.

In the first place, it is a conceded principle of taxation that all property owes its proportion to the support of the Government unless by constitutional provision certain classes of property are taken out. It may not be taxed by the legislature, but there is an implied obligation on every owner of property to pay his share of taxes. Of course, he does not have to do it unless he is taxed by the law. The legislature of any State may ratify any taxation which it could originally have imposed. I do not think there is any principle better recognized by American jurisprudence than is that principle; and it is also established by the authorities of the States and by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In this case the only reason the State could not impose this tax was because Congress had provided a limitation that the States should not tax the stock of a national bank at a greater rate than that imposed on other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizen. Had Congress simply consented to the State taxing national banks or national-bank stock, the power of the State to impose a tax would have been plenary, but Congress provided a limitation. Therefore, before a State can ratify a tax such State must have the consent of the Federal Government. I say, however, that what the State and the Federal Government together could do originally, they may now ratify; and the Supreme Court has so held.

Is it possible, simply because of a misunderstanding of the meaning of an act of Congress as to the rate of taxation which should be imposed upon a national bank, that those banks may go back six years and recover all their taxes, and that there is no power whatever to reimpose them or any part of them? Such a doctrine shocks the sense of equity and justice in view of the obligation which all men owe to support the Government, and it is not the law, in my opinion. I am simply giving my opinion.

Now let me, for the benefit of those Senators who may not have investigated this particular subject——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have just returned to the Chamber, and perhaps I am about to ask a question which the Senator has covered. I understand, however, the Senator has been discussing the power of Congress and of the States to validate these illegal taxes?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator discussed the propriety and justice of it, in view of the fact, as I have heard it asserted, that in New York particularly large institutions such as J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. have been exempted from taxation, so that there has been discrimination? Now it is proposed to lay the foundation, if this amendment shall be adopted, of perpetuating that discrimination.

Mr. KELLOGG. Not at all; we are proposing by this bill in the future to make the basis of taxation of national-bank stock the same as all moneyed capital engaged in banking, so that in the future the State of New York, for instance, may tax all private companies or partnerships or individuals at the same rate, and must tax them at the same rate, as they tax the national banks. Does the Senator think the State of New York should go without any taxes? Does he think that the national banks of New York should recover from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 merely because a few private bankers may have been taxed at a different rate than that imposed on the national banks, when it is admitted that the rate of taxation on the banks in New York is not excessive, being only 1 per cent? That rate is nowhere near the rate that is imposed in my State, which is 2 or 3 per cent, and nowhere near the rate imposed in many other States.

This bill will require the State of New York in the future to tax all capital engaged in banking, whether in the hands of individuals, of J. P. Morgan & Co., or Kuhn, Loeb & Co., or anybody else, at the same rate; but because in the last three years they may have been taxed on income instead of by a direct tax is it fair that the State of New York should lose from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 and that the city of New York should be practically bankrupted? I do not think so.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Does this measure act retroactively?

Mr. KELLOGG. The bill itself is not retroactive. The clause which the Senator from New York intends to offer, and which has been reported by the committee, proposing to ratify the tax which has heretofore been levied, of course, is retroactive.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I did not know about that; I have not seen that provision.

Mr. KELLOGG. It has been reported by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I do not think it will be voted on to-day, so that the Senator will have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have been wondering in regard to the first paragraph, which, after specifying the character of taxes which may be levied, contains this provision in paragraph 1 (a):

> The imposition by said State of any one of the above three forms of taxation shall be in lieu of the others.

It is the purpose of the measure, as I understand from that provision, to restrict the State to only one of those methods of taxation.

Mr. KELLOGG. To only one of them at the same time. The State ought not to tax the real estate and then tax all the stock at full value and then tax all the income from the stock. Of course, the idea is the State may select at any time any one of the three methods; it may tax the real estate and the stock separately, or it may tax the income, but it may not impose all three forms of taxation at once. I think that is a fair provision. I can not imagine any State doing otherwise in any event.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That would necessitate the States conforming all of their tax laws to the standard prescribed by this measure, would it not?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator nearly all of the States have conformed to that standard. The only State which does not to which I can now point is the State of New York, and all they have got to do is to raise their rate of 1 per cent to make up the difference.

In most of the States the value of the real estate is deducted in arriving at the value of the bank stock. They tax the real estate the same as all other real estate in the State or in the local community is taxed, and then they tax the bank stock for all of the balance of the assets. That is the rule in most of the States, but they ought not to be allowed to tax the real estate separately and then include the real estate in the value of the stock and tax it again and then tax income from all three over again. That would hardly be fair, and that is what this bill prohibits.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it not also true that under the decision of the Supreme Court as it now stands all the States which have not legislation conforming to that interpretation of the section will have to legislate anew, anyway?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is quite true.

Mr. PEPPER. It is a mere question of what the legislatures of the States shall in the future enact. They will have to change their laws to conform to the decision or to something better, if we can find something better.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I wish to discuss the power of Congress and the States together to ratify any act which the States and the Congress together could originally impose. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read all the authorities; but I am going to put some of them in the RECORD so that Senators may read them if they so desire. I should like, however, to state the facts in one case which is familiar to many Senators on this floor, because they were Members of the Senate when the original legislation was passed. I think the Senator from North Carolina is familiar with it. When the Philippine Islands were taken over the military authorities in charge imposed a tariff on all goods shipped from and to the Philippine Islands. It was a military order. Suit was brought against the Government to recover the taxes thus paid, because it was alleged the military authorities had no power to levy tariff duties but that such duties could only be levied by Congress.

The court held that that was not a correct interpretation, and that the duty was void for want of authority in the military authorities. After the judgment declaring the tariff duties void, and providing for a recovery of them, the Congress by an act imposed a tariff duty, and retroactively ratified the tariff duties imposed by the military authorities; and the Supreme Court announced the rule, citing many cases of taxation, that a tax or tariff which could be originally imposed by Congress could be ratified by Congress. In other words, the tariff duty was void when it was imposed, because the military authorities had not the power to impose it, but Congress had the power of ratification; and I said in the opening of my remarks on this question that as to taxation I believed it to be a universal rule that a tax which a State could originally impose it can ratify.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senator will perceive the very great distinction between the case to which he has just referred—namely, the Philippine Islands—and that of a sovereign State. The Congress of the United States, under the Constitution, has full power to deal with the territory of the United States. The Philippine Islands, under the decision of the Supreme Court, come within that category.

Mr. KELLOGG. There was not any doubt about the power of Congress to deal with this tax question. Nobody denies the power of Congress to consent that the States may tax national banks and not tax any other property at all. There is no doubt about the power of Congress.

Mr. KING. Congress may do with a Territory that which it may not do with a State.

Mr. KELLOGG. Quite so.

Mr. KING. And it may validate an illegal tax levied by a territorial legislature when it may not validate an illegal tax which has been imposed by a State.

Mr. KELLOGG. But Congress is not validating this tax. Congress is simply consenting that the States may validate it if the States see fit.

Mr. KING. Oh, well, I am expressing no opinion as to the effect of the measure which is now before Congress.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will apply the principle to tax cases if the Senator desires. That was the case of United States v. Heinzsen; and I think, if I may be permitted, I will introduce in the RECORD, without reading, pages 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, as marked, of the brief on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

III.

THE PROVISION OF THE BILL RATIFYING TAXES HERETOFORE IMPOSED IN ACCORD WITH THE PROVISIONS OF THIS BILL IS LEGAL, PROPER, AND ESSENTIAL.

The bill at lines 20–25, page 2, and lines 1–3, page 3, provides as follows:

"That the provisions of section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as heretofore in force shall not prevent the legalizing, ratifying, or confirming by the States of any tax heretofore paid, levied, or assessed upon shares of national banks or the collecting thereof, provided such taxation is not greater than the taxation imposed for the same period upon banks, banking associations, or trust companies doing a banking business incorporated by or under the laws of such State or upon the moneyed capital or shares thereof."

By this provision Congress would now give the permission which heretofore it might have given to assessment of national banks upon the same basis of banks, banking associations, and trust companies doing a banking business as they have in fact been assessed in the various States.

In effect the provision, so far as Congress is concerned, simply authorizes the States by appropriate legislation to legalize, ratify, and confirm such assessments as of the date when imposed. By the provision Congress would be saying now what it could previously have said, that such assessments were proper and valid.

The provision is thus clearly within the power of Congress since it attempts to do no more than precisely the same thing that Congress could previously have done, namely, permit the taxation of national banks as other banks, banking associations, and trust companies doing a banking business. That which Congress could have granted or permitted it may surely authorize the States to legalize, ratify, and confirm so far as its grant or permission is essential. This principle has been universally recognized by the courts with respect to legislative power both of Congress and of States.

It was clearly stated and upheld as to congressional power in the case of United States v. Heinzsen & Co., 206 U. S. 370, which was followed in the more recent case of Rufferty v. Smith Bell Co., United States Supreme Court, December 6, 1921.

In the Heinzsen case action was brought to recover the amount of tariff duties exacted in the Philippine Islands on merchandise, the duties having been collected under authority of an order of the President before Congress on March 8, 1902, had enacted tariff duties for the Philippines. The court had held that the duties complained of were illegal, and the question presented was whether an act of Congress in 1906 (34 Stat. 636, June 30, 1906), legalizing and ratifying the imposition and collection of the duties prior to March 8, 1902, was within the power of Congress.

It was held that Congress had such power and that the legalizing and ratifying act of 1906 was effective, citing Hamilton v. Dillon (21 Wall. 73) and Mattingly v. District of Columbia (97 U. S. 687).

In so holding the court quoted (p. 384) from the decision in the Mattingly case which concerned the validity of an act of Congress ratifying certain void assessments for street improvements in the District of Columbia, wherein it was said:

"If Congress or the legislative assembly had power to commit to the board the duty of making the improvements and the power to prescribe that the assessments should be made in the manner in which they were made, it had power to ratify the acts which it might have authorized * * *. Under the Constitution, Congress had power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over the District, and this includes the power of taxation * * *. It may therefore cure irregularities and confirm proceedings which without the confirmation would be void because unauthorized, provided such confirmation does not interfere with intervening rights."

The court then states (p. 384):

"It is then evident, speaking generally, both on principle and authority, that Congress had the power to pass the ratifying act of June 30, 1908."

In discussing the question whether money paid to discharge the illegally exacted tariff duties justly and equitably belonged to the claimants and that the title thereto continued in them as a vested right of property, and hence the right to recover the money could not be taken away, the court said (p. 386):

"But here again the argument disregards the fact that when the duties were illegally exacted in the name of the United States Congress possessed the power to have authorized their imposition in the mode in which they were enforced, and hence from the very moment of collection a right in Congress to ratify the transaction, if it saw fit to do so, was engendered. In other words, as a necessary result of the power to ratify, it followed that the right to recover the duties in question was subject to the exercise by Congress of its undoubted power to ratify."

The court also quoted (p. 387) from Cooley Constitutional Limitations (7 ed. p. 543):

"Nor is it important in any of the cases in which we have referred that the legislative act which cures the irregularity, defect, or want of original authority was passed after suit brought in which such irregularity or defect became matter of importance. The bringing of suits vests in a party no right to a particular decision * * * and his case must be determined on the law as it stands, not when the suit was brought but when the judgment is rendered."

It is thus apparent that while the Heinzsen case did not present identical facts to those herein appearing, inasmuch as therein the subject of the validating act related to tariff duties which are imposed in a manner to be authorized by Congress and are actually imposed either by Congress or by its agent, whereas here the subject of the validating act relates to assessments on national banks which are imposed in a manner to be authorized by Congress but are actually imposed by States or municipalities, there is no distinction in the principle applicable. In each case Congress, having the power to prescribe the manner in which the charges may be imposed, may authorize the States to ratify and confirm charges imposed in a particular manner.

In other words, it was within the power and authority of Congress to prescribe for taxing national banks, as stated in the bill, just as it was within the power and authority of Congress to prescribe for imposing the tariff duties which were collected. Accordingly, in both cases it has the power to authorize the States by appropriate legislation to ratify and confirm that which was done so far as its permission and authority is concerned.

As stated in Cooley on Taxation (3d ed. p. 517):

"The general rule has often been declared that the legislature may validate retrospectively the proceedings which they might have authorized in advance."

The same rule is stated in Exchange Bank tax cases, 21 Fed. Rep. 99 (affirmed, 122 U. S. 154), at page 101; the Court further stated:

"And it is immaterial that such legislation may operate to divest an individual of a right of action existing in his favor or subject him to a liability which did not exist originally. In a large class of cases this is the paramount object of such legislation."

Upon affirmance by the United States Supreme Court it was said (122 U. S. p. 163):

"The plaintiff and the other shareholders were bound as owners of property to bear their just proportion of the public burdens * * * and it would seem but just that the defect should be cured if practicable and the shareholders not be allowed to escape taxation and thus entail the burden they should bear upon other taxpayers of the community."

And in the case of Mattingly v. District of Columbia (97 U. S. 687), cited and discussed in the Heinzsen case, the Court quotes (p. 690) as "accurately stated" the rule asserted by Judge Cooley in view of the authorities, as follows:

"If the thing wanting or which failed to be done and which constitutes the defect in the proceeding is something the necessity for which the legislature might have dispensed with by prior statute, then it is not beyond the power of the legislature to dispense with it by subsequent statute. And if the irregularity consists in doing some act or in the mode or manner of doing some act which the legislature might have made immaterial by prior law, it is equally competent to make the same immaterial by a subsequent law. (Cooley Const. Lim. 371)."

Thus in Shuttock v. Smith (6 N. D. 56), where the State board of supervisors levied without authority a State tax which the legislature might have levied or ordered the board to levy, it was held that the legislature could validate a defective levy which it might have authorized to be made in the manner in which it was laid.

In Marion County v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (91 Ky. 388), where a county had authority to levy a head tax for county purposes and levied an ad valorem tax, it was held that the legislature by subsequent enactment may validate the levy.

In Kettelle v. Warwick & Co. Water Co. (R. I.) (49 Atl. Rep. 492), where a township tax was void as exceeding the statutory town tax limit, it was held that the legislature had power to pass an act validating the assessment so erroneously levied and such an act is constitutional.

As said, however, in Exchange Bank Tax cases (21 Fed. Rep. 99, p. 100):

"Undoubtedly the legislature could not validate a tax which was prohibited by the laws of the United States, but it was competent for them to sanction retroactively such proceedings in the assessment of the tax as they could have legitimately sanctioned in advance."

Thus only by permission of Congress may the States by retrospective legislation validate taxes not authorized under permission previously given. The necessity for the validating-permission provision of the bill thus appears.

Unless this permissive provision of the bill is retained the States will be powerless to validate taxes imposed on national banks which are in accord with the proposed amendment, and there can be no relief to the States with respect to taxes heretofore imposed, and undoubtedly there will be increasing litigation as to the taxes imposed and recoveries of taxes paid and nonpayment of taxes, seriously jeopardizing State and municipal revenues.

For many years taxes have been imposed and paid without complaint by national banks where the tax compared with that paid by State banks and trust companies but differed from that imposed as to individuals. Thus the situation is critical and calls not only for authority to levy such taxes in the future but for the retroactive permission of Congress authorizing the States to validate taxes heretofore levied or collected.

As stated in the authorities above cited, no vested right exists to recover such taxes where no judgment has been rendered, and the legal effect of the provision would be not to disturb judgments entered but to remove any cause for similar judgments.

Such validating permission, therefore, being within the power of Congress and essential to the States and municipalities and fair and equitable as to the banks themselves, should be enacted.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like, however, to mention one or two cases in passing.

Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitation, says:

The general rule has often been declared that the legislature may validate retrospectively the proceedings which they might have authorized in advance.

Speaking of taxation.

Again, in the Mattingly case, cited here—a case which went up from the District of Columbia—the District of Columbia had made an assessment for street improvements which was void for want of authority. Congress ratified it, and thereby ratified the tax to pay the assessment; and the Supreme Court said:

If Congress or the legislative assembly had power to commit to the board the duty of making the improvements and the power to prescribe that the assessments should be made in the manner in which they were made, it had power to ratify the acts which it might have authorized. * * * Under the Constitution Congress had power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over the District, and this includes the power of taxation. * * * It may therefore cure irregularities and confirm proceedings which without the confirmation would be void—

Not voidable, but void—

because unauthorized.

Congress has plenary power over the subject of taxation of national banks. It may consent to any tax, or it may deny any power in the States to tax any stock or any property of national banks; and what Congress could originally do it can authorize the States to ratify. If the Senators will look at the proceedings in New York and Massachusetts, especially, they will find that the banks there have not been excessively taxed, and that it would be a calamity to let them recover back their taxes for three years and pay nothing whatever to the State of New York—nothing whatever; not a dollar.

Again:

Nor is it important in any of the cases to which we have referred that the legislative act which cures the irregularity, defect, or want of original authority was passed after suit brought in which such irregularity or defect became matter of importance. The bringing of suits vests in a party no right to a particular decision * * * and his case must be determined on the law as it stands, not when the suit was brought but when the judgment is rendered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am interested in the statement made by the Senator to the effect that it would be a calamity not to have Congress intervene so that these taxes could be collected in New York. I suppose the foundation of the right to collect is that the State of New York has exempted other moneyed institutions from the payment of the tax?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; it did as a great many States have done; in fact, 18 or 20 States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What other basis is there for it?

Mr. KELLOGG. Why, it taxed bank stock a direct tax of 1 per cent. It taxed other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens on an income basis, which was less than the tax that had been imposed on the banks; and the Supreme Court held that the entire tax was therefore void.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. The State of New York favored some moneyed institutions of that State as against national banks in their tax laws.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes. Now, I will say to the Senator from Montana that what we propose in this bill is in the future to provide that banks shall not be taxed more than the rate imposed on all moneyed capital engaged in banking, so that they can not exempt private individuals engaged in banking.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand what the bill purposes to do.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator think that because, in the State of New York, banks may have been taxed during the last three years at a less rate than private individuals engaged in banking, that is a reason why the State of New York should collect no tax whatever, although the tax is a reasonable tax?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not think so at all; but the proposition is that the State of New York, apparently, for some reason satisfactory to itself, gave a decided advantage to private moneyed institutions as against national banks, and it now finds itself in a hole in consequence.

Mr. KELLOGG. It did what 18 or 20 States have done. It provided that the taxation of stocks of national banks should be at a greater rate than the taxation of moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens, and I think it should be.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, it levied the same tax upon its trust companies and State banks that it levied upon national banks.

Mr. KELLOGG. Exactly.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but it did not levy the same tax upon private banks.

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator that I am not in sympathy with what was done.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think that is true, but I think that was very largely an oversight. I do not think the State of New York intended that private bankers should pay one rate of tax and other bankers another; but, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, a copartnership is an individual, and it pays as an individual instead of as a corporation or a banking institution. That is what we propose to correct in this bill in the future. Whether they are private individuals, copartnerships, State banks, or trust companies, they must all be taxed at the same rate as stocks of national banks.

Now, a word more.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, let me inquire further of the Senator what is wrong with the present law if the State of New York does, as a matter of fact, impose exactly the same tax on all moneyed capital?

Mr. KELLOGG. The State of New York does not impose the same tax——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Well, that is their affair, not ours.

Mr. KELLOGG. The State of New York does not impose the same tax on all moneyed capital in the hands of the individual, and 18 or 20 other States do not, and can not, and should not. That is my answer to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Should not?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; should not. Does the Senator believe that an individual who loans $1,000 on a farm mortgage at 5 or 6 per cent should pay the same rate of taxation on it that a national bank pays, with its business, receiving deposits, and so forth?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not see any reason why the same amount of capital should not pay exactly the same tax.

Mr. KELLOGG. I see a great reason why.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I supposed that uniformity of taxation was the general rule, without any exception.

Mr. KELLOGG. What is the general rule? Will the Senator say?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The general rule is uniformity.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; that is not the general rule to-day in the United States, and it has been found to be impossible. Why, railroads are assessed on a gross-earnings basis. Individuals are assessed on a direct ad valorem basis. Many public utilities are assessed on a gross-earnings basis.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator understands perfectly well that that does not offend against the rule of uniformity, does he not? There is an opportunity for classification, and, of course, the Supreme Court must have determined that there was no basis for classification in this instance.

Mr. KELLOGG. Would the Senator, if he had the power, require all property in the United States to be taxed at the same rate, and by a uniform system?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly not; not all property, but all property of the same class.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well. That is what I am providing for in this system; but such has not been the rule.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What is the trouble with the present law?

Mr. KELLOGG. Because the present law applies only to moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizen. It does not make any difference whether it is engaged in banking or whether it is not; and I propose by this amendment to make the rule all capital engaged in banking, whether it is in the hands of private individuals, corporations, private or State banks, or trust companies. Therefore you will get all the capital employed in the same business in the same class.

Mr. GLASS. That is already the law under the decision of the Supreme Court——

Mr. KELLOGG. It is not the law under the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. GLASS. That all moneyed capital in the hands of individuals that comes into competition with banking capital must be taxed at the same rate.

Mr. KELLOGG. Ah! That is another proposition. There is not a word here about State trust companies, State banks, or capital of individuals which does not come into competition with banking capital.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PEPPER. With the permission of the Senator from Minnesota, I was going to suggest a further answer to the question asked by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. KELLOGG. I shall be glad to have the Senator do it.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it not true that under the law as it now stands, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, a State tax law in order to be valid must be one which imposes a rate no higher than the rate applied by the State to moneyed capital in the hands of the individual coming into competition with the bank; that while in the decision of the Supreme Court in the Richmond case the court was relieved of the difficulty of determining what such competition was, because the fact of competition was admitted upon the record, if the legislation stands unmodified it will be necessary for the court hereafter to decide what is and what is not competitive capital in the hands of individual citizens, and there is no known rule for determining what is and what is not?

There will be no certain way of applying the test which the Supreme Court says is the test of section 5219. It was in order to provide a test that would be definite and workable that the committee has ventured to suggest a change in the language of the statute.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think I read the statement from Cooley on Taxation. If not, as it is very short, I will read it:
